Mr. TELLER. I only want to say that if I ever was tainted in the slightest degree with imperialism I am glad to know that I have recovered from that condition.

Mr. TILLMAN. But with all Mr. Bryan's influence—and it was very great, because it was recognized then that he would be the nominee of his party—he did not and could not persuade enough men here to give the necessary votes. After every man whom Mr. Bryan could influence had been influenced and counted, you still lacked votes, and you knew it. You know how you got them.

Mr. SPOONER. How did we get them?

Mr. TILLMAN. I say you know how you got them.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not know how we got them. I do not know that any man voted for that treaty except in obedience to his convictions. Does the Senator know any different?

Mr. TILLMAN. I only know that in a court the Senator would convict on circumstantial evidence some men.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator impeach any Senator? Let him name him. I do not impeach any Senator, nor do I know any ground for impeaching any.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have reason to believe from the circumstantial evidence and from things that have been told to me in confidence by men on the other side that improper influences were used.

Mr. SPOONER. Name the man. That is due to the country, and due to the man whom you suspect, and by innuendo charge. Who was it? Let him answer for himself if he is still a member of this body.

Mr. TILLMAN. Whom do you mean? I can not name the man who gave me the information.

Mr. SPOONER. Whoever you mean.

Mr. TILLMAN. I can not give the name of the man who gave me the information, because he gave it to me in confidence.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, in confidence. A man who would impeach another in confidence is a coward. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. TILLMAN. Cowardice in that case does not rest on my shoulders.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator turned to me. If the Senator knows of any member of this body who voted under corrupt influences for that treaty, name him.

Mr. TILLMAN. I can not prove it.

Mr. SPOONER. Well, I would not say it.

Mr. TILLMAN. But I can prove this——

Mr. SPOONER. I would not say it.

Mr. TILLMAN. I can prove this: That the patronage of a State has been given to a Democrat who voted for the treaty.

Mr. SPOONER. What State?

Mr. TILLMAN. South Carolina.

Mr. SPOONER. Fight it out with your colleague.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am ready.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, I am ready and he is ready.

Mr. TILLMAN. Let him——

Mr. SPOONER. He is not here——

Mr. TILLMAN. He has not shown his readiness.

Mr. SPOONER. But he will be.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The occupants of the galleries must remember that any marks of approbation or disapproval are not permitted under the rules of the Senate, and if there is a violation of the rule the Chair will be obliged to have the galleries cleared.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will state that after having made a speech in this body two weeks before, replete with cogent arguments and eloquence, against the ratification of the treaty, and after having told us in confidence that he would not vote for it, he did; and since then he has been adopted by the Republican caucus and put upon committees as a member of that party, and has controlled the patronage in South Carolina. I did not expect to bring this in in this way, but I do not dodge or flinch from any responsibility anywhere. I simply know what I believe.

Mr. SPOONER. You simply believe what you do not know.

Mr. TILLMAN. And I have been told, as I told you, in confidence by men on that side, of the transaction.

Now, Mr. President, the question whether this imperialistic policy, this controlling of colonies, this subjugation of appurtenant territory whenever we get in the notion is the issue before the people of this country. There is no other issue. The American people may continue to follow this policy, and if they do by a majority vote I, as a member of the Senate, must submit.

We have had the spectacle of the Supreme Court giving an opinion here in regard to this question which has laid it open to criticism and almost to contempt, but other decisions of that court have been criticised. When the Dred Scott decision, just before the war, was announced, declaring that an escaped slave was property and could be restored to his master, if found, and, if necessary, the Army would be used to enforce the mandate of the court, Senators on the other side, the party they represented, declared that that decision was infamous, and when the same tribunal reversed the opinions of its predecessors and declared the income tax unconstitutional the people who belong to the party which I represent declared that the court was unworthy, and that it had surrendered to unworthy influences.

Now, in one hundred and twenty-five years of our national life we have come to the point where that court declares that Congress, the creature of the Constitution, is more powerful than the Constitution. How a creature can grow more powerful than its creator I do not know, but still that is the effect of the decision of the court.

Have we another Dred Scott decision? Some of us think so. You are passing onward down the national road as leaders of the American people, charged with the responsibility of government, legislating as though you had the absolute right to deal with the lives, the property, and the fortunes of 9,000,000 aliens—not aliens according to your interpretation of the law, but aliens in language, in race, in religion, and everything else. You have the responsibility. The people can indorse you or not. They have grown so besotted and are so subservient to the influences which control parties that I sometimes feel that it is useless to struggle against those influences; but as long as I represent a State on this floor and have a voice I shall protest, and protest and protest, as a true American, against this policy.

I said a little while ago that it was my purpose to put into the RECORD some matter affecting the honor of the Army. I do it for the purpose of forcing the Committee on the Philippines, if it is possible to do it, to go to the very bottom of these charges, and not be content to pooh-pooh them. The witnesses can be brought here. If necessary, the committee can go to the Philippine Islands and get the facts. We have been in this dirty work three years. How much longer are we to continue in it?

The first thing I will read is from this morning's Post, the utterances of a lady last night in this city before a confederation of the National Council of Women. I do not know anything about the lady, but I take it that she must be a respectable woman and a woman of character or the Post would not publish it, and she would not be associated with these other good women.

Prey of our soldiers—Plea for Filipino women by American sisters—Mrs. Ellis's startling charge—Speaking to the National Council of Women, she declared soldiers and officials are causing the downfall of the women and girls of new island possessions—Pleads for investigation.

Most Senators have read it, I suppose. I will simply incorporate it in my speech, or rather as an appendix to my speech, down as far as the cross mark.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina? The Chair hears none. [See appendix.]

Mr. TILLMAN. I have here a letter from Mr. Herbert Welsh, 1305 Arch street, Philadelphia:

In your valued favor of February 17 you say that you "have in mind to spread in the records some morning before this debate closes everything that you can obtain touching the cruelties which have characterized the war in the Philippines," and you ask me to send you what I have of that character.

It seems to me most desirable that the people of this country, who, I believe, in the main wish to do what is just and right, should know the facts of this war. Certain of these facts seem to me to have a twofold significance. First, they show that atrocities have been committed under our flag, and apparently by the authority of certain of our officers, which are wholly contrary to the rules of civilized warfare. Those who are responsible for these atrocities should, I therefore believe, be tried for them, and if the evidence warrants, convicted and punished. In this way the Army as a whole will have its honor vindicated and the burden of such deeds will fall on guilty shoulders alone. To this proposition I should think fair-minded supporters of the present Philippine policy, as well as its opponents, would agree. Second, I believe that the facts of this case, when properly related and considered, bring the strongest indictment against the policy itself—the policy of subjecting an alien people against their will to an outside authority.

I ask your attention to the statement of facts contained in the accompanying article entitled "By way of Manila." They relate strongly to the alleged use of the water torture under our flag in the Philippines. May I venture a word of explanation? Two years ago when I saw in a respectable paper of this city, the Friend's Intelligencer, an account of the alleged use of this water torture I discredited its truth. I became convinced, however, that the statement was true through a personal experience, which is set down in the accompanying article. A gentleman brought to me in my office a letter written by an assistant commissary in our service and dated Tarlac, the 25th of April, 1901. This letter was evidently genuine, written in good faith, addressed to friends in Philadelphia, without expectation on the part of the writer that it would ever have a larger group of readers.

The impression produced by it was deep and convincing. It narrated the use of the torture as the writer had evidently seen it inflicted by the Macabebe scouts. It explained how such means came to be used. It was necessary for us to get the concealed guns of the Filipinos; $30 reward would not bring them, so the methods of these native scouts were employed. The letter convinced me that men high in authority must know of and sanction these means, for you will observe the writer says "they could not get the guns until the Macabebes were sent for." One naturally inferred that the reason for sending for the Macabebes must be well known to those in authority. I was so impressed by this statement that I published it at the time in city and State, and also sent it to the Springfield Republican, in which paper it was likewise published. Then followed from that time to this, without any repudiation or denial by the authorities, the publication in various papers of letters from soldiers similar to that to which I have referred. Governor Taft is reported to have admitted that there had been some slight use of this method of obtaining information, but that it was "strictly forbidden" by the authorities in the Philippines. It would be interesting to know since when it has been "strictly forbidden."

I send herewith inclosed a copy of an extract from the Manila Times of August 18, 1901, in which the statement is made by a correspondent in the island of Samar that Major O'Connell, of the First Infantry, suspecting certain Filipinos of having given information to their hostile countrymen which led to some of our soldiers being ambushed, determined that a "good shaking up" was desirable, and so put them to the water torture with the result that by this means the guilty were eliminated and locked up in jail. It is interesting to note in this connection the apparent indifference which such a proceeding showed on the part of the officer in question to the fact that guiltless men were subjected to this horrible torture along with guilty ones. From the statement it would appear that not all of those who were so tortured were proved to be guilty—even if a confession under such agony could be considered proof of guilt. It is also significant that such an item of news should be boldly published in a paper circulating in Manila, the seat of American military authority, if the use of these means were "strictly forbidden" in any precise meaning of those words. If the torture really was forbidden, it is inconceivable that a newspaper would openly publish the name and position of the man who used it, unless his court-martial and punishment were about to follow. Possibly Major O'Connell has been court-martialed for this offense, but, if so, I am unaware of any public announcement of the fact.

I further would draw attention to the statement made in an article published by Mr. George Kennan in the New York Outlook last March. Mr. Kennan quotes from the letter of an Army officer of high position and undoubted reliability, written to a brother officer in this country, in which, as you will see, the statement is made that the Macabebe scouts are not the only ones who have used this torture; that it has been employed by us less discriminatingly than it was by Spain; that the Macabebes would apply it to any Filipino whom they might meet on entering a town on the main chance of thereby getting information from him. This is a very interesting statement when compared with that of Governor Taft, which conveys the impression that the torture has been but slightly used. I have taken pains to make inquiries about this military witness, and have satisfied myself that his testimony is to be entirely relied upon. In a speech recently made by me on the Philippine question before the Massachusetts Reform Club in Boston upon the occasion of President Schurman's memorable address, I referred in detail to this question of the use of the water torture. Shortly afterwards I received a letter from the secretary of the club, from which I quote the following passage:

"Apropos of what you write me regarding the treatment of the Filipinos by our soldiers, I must tell you this tale: After your speech, a few days after, one of the members met me and said, 'I could not believe that Welsh could be right in his assertion about the brutality of our soldiers; it seemed to me un-American and impossible; so I went to an officer whom you and I know (he would not give me his name and I am not sure whom he means) and asked him if he had ever known of the water-torture being practiced, He admitted that he had, and had even done it himself, excusing it on the gronnd of necessity.'

"My friend was somewhat stirred up to find that the charge he had sought to disprove was true."

This statement of a returned Army officer that the torture was not only used but that he had used it himself would seem to show clearly that the practice must have attained a recognized position in military operations in the Philippines, otherwise it would be incredible that an officer of standing could make such a statement. This falls in with the statement made by Mr. G. H. Bates, of Saybrook, Ill., a veteran of the civil war, whose letter on this subject was recently published in the Springfield Republican. I quote from it as follows:

"A young friend (whose father was a comrade of mine during the late civil war) sent me a letter lately received from a brother now serving as a noncommissioned officer in the Philippines. I take the liberty to quote briefly from the letter. After describing what he terms 'a few hellish incidents' the writer goes on to say: 'As you know, I don't tote a very rocky heart around in my anatomical outfit, and although I have gone through considerable rather brutalizing service since coming here, I am not, as yet, brutally inclined. All the same, while not brutal by inclination, wish, or in thought, I am brutal in act by order and direction of superior authority. * * * I tell you, Will, if the people at home fully understood one-half—yes, even one-fourth—of the brutality we practice here in these islands by order of our superior officers, it would jolt them into a stunning condition of amazement, sure.'"

I have since corresponded with Mr. Bates to see whether I could obtain further information from his young correspondent, but in this, as in so many other cases, the witness naturally fears publicity.

I further call attention to a statement on this subject which appeared in The State newspaper, Columbia, S. C., December 18, 1901. The correspondent writes from Binan, Laguna, P. I. I quote from his letter, as follows:

"The Americans are using the severest methods to put down the rebellion in Samar. General Smith has ordered everyone to come into the towns by a certain day, and all who are found in the country after then will be killed without question. In Mindoro, Samar, and Leyte the Americans are using the fire and sword as the Spaniards used it in Cuba. This is part of a report from Mindoro: 'Captain Bent applied the torch to the rebel quarter, went back to Monsolia, rounded up the horses and carabaos and shot them, set fire to the town, watched it until it got well under way, marched back to the Monsol, did the same there, and then got on the Custer and sailed back.' Like reports come every day from Samar. But no Americans over here blame the Army for such measures, as these natives have no respect for anything short of torture. They are exceedingly cruel themselves, and they consider leniency a sign of weakness and fear.

"The 'water cure' is the favorite torture of the Americans to force the natives to give information concerning the insurrectos. The native is bound and gagged, and one soldier pours water and sand down his throat while another beats him on the stomach, which soon swells out like a drum. This torture is said to be horrible, and it generally makes the Filipino betray everything; but many of them are game to the last and carry their secret with them to the grave. A soldier who was with General Funston told me that he helped administer the 'water cure' to 160 natives, all but 26 of whom died."

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator from South Carolina whether there is any name of a witness given?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes, sir.

A letter was sent from my office to the editor of The State inquiring as to the reliability of this correspondent. The same mail that brought your letter to me brought one from him under date of February 15. From this I quote as follows:

"After investigating the matter as fully as I could, I submit the results of the inquiry. My news editor informs me that the letter was, as he remembers it, written by Mr. R. D. Epps, a citizen of this State, who was chosen by the State superintendent of education, at the request of Washington authorities, for appointment as a teacher in the Philippines and who went over with a shipload of other teachers last year."

Mr. HOAR. My question was not——

Mr. TILLMAN. Epps is the man; R. D. Epps, an American teacher now in the Philippines.

Mr. HOAR. My question was whether the witness of the act of cruelty——

Mr. GALLINGER. Alleged cruelty.

Mr. HOAR. Alleged act. I suppose my friend from New Hampshire does not doubt the cruelty.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask the Senator if the name of the witness is given.

Mr. TILLMAN. No; Mr. Epps does not give his witness, but Mr. Epps is a witness.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Ohio will allow me for a moment, in order to find out what I want, I will give way to him. What I wish to know is whether there is anywhere the name of a witness who can tell us these things at first hand. I receive a great many such letters, and the writers tell me that they have the information in confidence. If I may be pardoned, I should like to say that I can not understand having in confidence information and not relating and exposing these acts, which, if they are done, are among the infamies of human history and are a reproach to human nature itself, on the ground that the person who knows the fact does not want to tell because his military promotion will not happen or because he will incur somebody's displeasure.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will allow me, I think Mr. Welsh leaves all those facts out——

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, I wanted to take some opportunity to make this statement, and I hope he will give it to me now, as the matter has come up.

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I do not see how I, for one Senator, can make a charge against the soldiers or officers of my country when the eyewitness undertakes to make it in confidence and will not have his name known. I suppose everybody knows my utter opposition to the whole Philippine war and the Philippine business; and when anybody writes such a letter to me I do not want him to tell me about a murder in strict confidence.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I am no more in sympathy——

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I was waiting until the Senator concluded the reading of the letter before interrupting him. I wanted to interrupt him for the same purpose that the Senator from Massachusetts did, namely, to inquire as to the authority of some of the statements contained in that letter.

I want to inquire particularly as to the authority for what is said there about Major O'Connell. I understood it to be a charge that Major O'Connell, major of the First United States Infantry, had been guilty of inflicting the water cure in a very brutal manner, with what results I did not gather from the Senator's reading of the letter.

I wanted to say to the Senator I do not know what information he has on the subject, but I happen to know Major O'Connell. I have known him for many years. He is a citizen of Cincinnati. He is a man who stands high in every sense of the word. He is a typical representative of the American soldiery and the best type of American citizenship. He would no more think of doing a dishonorable, brutal, cowardly thing in the Philippines than would any member of this body think of doing it here in the city of Washington. Therefore it was that, knowing him in this manner, I wanted to ask for the authority upon which his name is used by the Senator from South Carolina.

Then, with respect to the charge the Senator is just now reading, I wanted to say that only yesterday the Senator from Wisconsin put into the RECORD, as a part of his speech, the letter from General Funston contradicting absolutely that whole story. You will find it in the RECORD. I have it before me now. I had been intending to use it also if I had been privileged to get the floor; but, as I said a moment ago, I was waiting until the Senator would conclude the reading of the very remarkable document that he has before him before asking him for these authorities, and I interrupt him now only because the Senator from Massachusetts had already interrupted him.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, I will take in all of you. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURTON. I only rose to ask if you will be so kind as to give to the Senate the name of the man who says that while he was serving under General Funston 160 Filipinos were brutally punished in the way that is stated. Will you please give me the name?

Mr. TILLMAN. I will give this letter just as it is written to me and print it.

Mr. BURTON. Will you kindly answer my question? Who says that?

Mr. TILLMAN. I will go back and try to find out for the Senator.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, the reason why I make the inquiry is apparent. I believe that the world knows the history of General Funston. He fought early in Cuba to try to free Cuba from Spanish rule. He has fought in the Philippines——

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield further?

Mr. TILLMAN. I have no objection to the Senator eulogizing General Funston, but I think we are all very well acquainted with his record. We have promoted him from a captaincy here——

Mr. BURTON. Pardon me just a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. TILLMAN. I shall not yield for that, because it is absolutely unnecessary. I know as much about General Funston as the Senator from Kansas does, and every Senator here knows it, but if he wants to put it in the RECORD he is perfectly welcome.

Mr. BURTON. But you were making a misstatement just now, unintentionally, no doubt. He was not promoted from a captaincy.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have said in the beginning, and I repeat it, that I spread these things before the country with the view to force the Committee on the Philippines to send for witnesses.

Mr. BURTON. Does the Senator allow me?

Mr. TILLMAN. Of course.

Mr. BURTON. General Funston was colonel of the famous Twentieth Kansas Regiment, and he was afterwards made brigadier-general for gallantry, on the recommendation of his superior officers.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, I will sit down. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURTON. I did not mean——

Mr. TILLMAN. I give the Senator all the time he wants. Go ahead.

Mr. BURTON. He was then made a brigadier-general in the Regular Army for serving his country so splendidly in the capture of Aguinaldo, and I believe he was the only volunteer officer in the Spanish-American war who was promoted to be a brigadier-general in the Regular Army. Before he ever was a soldier he had won the confidence and love and admiration of the people of Kansas in civic life. He is the highest type of an American citizen, and I do think that the Senator ought to make this heinous and awful charge against so brave a soldier, so splendid a man, without furnishing the evidence that bears at least indirectly or to some extent upon the truth of the charge.

General Funston on more than one occasion has denied this horrible statement. On the 2d of this month, while in the hospital at Kansas City, Mo., he wrote:

KANSAS CITY, MO., February 2, 1902.

SIR: My attention having been called to an extract from an article published in the City and State, of Philadelphia, January 2, 1902, I wish to make the following comment:

In this extract it is alleged that a soldier who claims to have been with me in the Philippines made the statement that he had helped to administer the "water cure" to 160 natives, all but 26 of whom died.

I believe that is the very statement that the Senator is reading.

This statement I wish to brand as an atrocious lie, without the slightest foundation in fact. During my service of three years in the Philippines I never had personal knowledge of the so-called "water cure" being administered to a native, or any other form of torture being used to extract information from them.

Is not that a specific denial coming from this high officer?

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me now?

Mr. BURTON. And I do insist——

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me now in my own time?

Mr. BURTON. Just let me finish this.

Mr. TILLMAN. No; right there.

Mr. BURTON. Very well.

Mr. TILLMAN. Let us look at this language:

A soldier who was with General Funston told me that he helped to administer the water cure to 160 natives, all but 26 of whom died.

Does that say that General Funston knew anything about it? Does it say that General Funston approved it? It simply says that a soldier who was with General Funston——

Mr. BURTON. Does not the Senator understand the English language well enough to know that that refers to General Funston, and the necessary implication is, if it means anything, that General Funston was guilty of this atrocious brutality? What is the use of resorting to subterfuge here?

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator is going to give me a lecture on English, I will remand him to his seat until after he gets his own time. I claim to know as well what is the interpretation of words as any man here.

Mr. BURTON. I beg the Senator's pardon. The Senator——

Mr. TILLMAN. It is no use for the Senator from Kansas to undertake to say that this statement here involves Funston.

Mr. BURTON. The Senator read——

Mr. TILLMAN. It simply says "a soldier who had been with General Funston told me." It does not say that "General Funston ordered me," or that "General Funston saw me," or that General Funston approved it. It simply located the man, that he may have been in Funston's regiment.

Mr. BURTON. And General Funston says no such thing ever happened, and brands the whole statement as a falsehood. What is more, Mr. President—and I believe the Senator will not remand me to my seat; I believe I have the floor by his permission?

Mr. TILLMAN. I have the right to take it when I get ready. If the Senator is to go on interminably I will show him whether I have got the right, for I will appeal to the Chair for my right.

Mr. BURTON. Will the Senator then——

Mr. TILLMAN. How much longer does the Senator want? I will give him five minutes, if that will do.

Mr. BURTON. I think I can finish it short of that——

Mr. TILLMAN. Will it take five minutes?

Mr. BURTON. I think I can finish it short of that if the Senator will not interrupt me. General Funston says further—

Statements of this kind—

And I especially direct the Senator's attention to it—

Statements of this kind made by returned soldiers are simply braggadocio—

A braggadocio that is repeated in the United States Senate, too—and a desire to attract attention to themselves. It is my belief that the "water cure" was very rarely, if ever, administered by American soldiers. It was a matter of common knowledge that occasionally the Macabebe scouts, when not under the direct control of some officer, would resort to this means of obtaining information as to the whereabouts of concealed arms and ammunition.

There is the basis of this whole story, given from as credible a source as can be.

Mr. TILLMAN. And it is a confession that it has been done.

Mr. BURTON. And does the Senator——

Mr. TILLMAN. And done by men in the employ of the United States Government and paid by it.

Mr. BURTON. Does the Senator claim, with this statement here before him, that it was done at the instance of the United States Government? He gives the evidence here that is the foundation of this entire charge.

Mr. TILLMAN rose.

Mr. BURTON. Just one word more and I will be through.

They did this, however, on their own responsibility and without orders from their superiors. It was utterly impossible to prevent a few offenses of this kind by the Macabebes, as they were merely repaying the insurgents for worse treatment received by them in the past.

Now, will the Senator understand that General Funston here speaks in emphatic terms that not only was this offense never committed by an American soldier, but. on the other hand, every effort was made to prevent it? I insist that the Senator does not want to treat General Funston unfairly. He ought not to want to treat any American soldier unfairly.

Mr. TILLMAN. And now if the Senator from Kansas is through, I will proceed.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me a moment? There is one other letter in regard to this same charge, immediately following the one that has just been read by the Senator from Kansas, which I should like to see go into the RECORD at the same place. It is a letter from Matthew A. Batson, captain, Fifteenth United States Infantry.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is not that already in the RECORD? It went in yesterday.

Mr. FORAKER. He was a commander of Macabebe scouts.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am perfectly willing to let it go in.

Mr. FORAKER. If you are willing, I should like to have it go into the RECORD.

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, certainly; put it as an appendix to my speech.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the matter referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. TILLMAN. Down at the bottom. I do not want it in my speech.

Mr. FORAKER. Let it be an appendix then.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am quoting these letters as an appendix or as a footnote.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask that this may go into the RECORD immediately following that letter.

Mr. TILLMAN. Right along with it. I am perfectly willing.

Mr. FORAKER. I should like to have it appear at the same place.

Mr. TILLMAN. My purpose here is not to slander the American Army or to cast any imputations on it. My purpose is to force the Senate, through some committee, to do something to get at the facts. Where there is so much smoke there must be some fire, and if we are brutally murdering, shooting, and torturing those people it is time the American people knew it. That is what I want.

Mr. LODGE. If you will give the names of witnesses, we will summon them.

Mr. TILLMAN. Summon Mr. Epps, the school-teacher sent out there last summer.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Epps's evidence is hearsay. Give me the name of a witness.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Epps will give you the name of another witness, if you do not choose to go to the Philippines, and propose to sit here and furnish us ex parte statements from the War Department in refutation of all these charges. I want you to go there and get it. Those poor wretches have no English language. They have no English paper. To all intents and purposes they are dumb, and they can get no hearing anywhere.

Mr. LODGE. When we get the name of a witness we will summon him. Name him, where he is, and who he is.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will give the name of Mr. Epps.

Mr. LODGE. We can not summon an anonymous witness.

Mr. TILLMAN. I name Mr. Epps.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Epps did not see it and does not pretend that he saw it.

Mr. TILLMAN. If we are to take refuge in that sort of thing then the obvious purpose is to smother the truth and keep the people from finding it out, and the hellish dance of murder and rapine will go on. What are you going to do with this lady, just returned from there, who accuses the officials we have there in this morning's Post of having established houses of debauchery, in which the young Philippine women are being used to furnish an instrument to gratify the lusts of your officers and the men? Send for her, will you? Quit dodging.

Mr. DIETRICH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, certainly.

Mr. DIETRICH. I wish to ask a question only. While in the Philippines in the fore part of August I received an invitation from General Funston to come to San Fernando. I did so, and gathered there were several hundred of the prominent Filipinos of the best families. They had a ball that night, and at that ball General Funston danced with many of the prominent Filipino women. Now, if it is true that Funston and his officers have been so cruel, would those Filipino women——

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, Mr. President, I have time and again shown here that General Funston is only involved in this thing by the mention of his name by a man who simply says he was with him. What is the use to continue to defend a man who has not been attacked? I am endeavoring to force the Senate into some action looking to getting at the truth. You can get it if you want. You can go over there if you want. You can get an Army transport or steamer and send a committee there from both Houses, composed of men of character, whose word will be believed by the United States. Carry them there and let them travel about over that country and see what has been done, and give the natives an opportunity to make their statement, and not have it all come from one side. But you sit here in your committee room 7,000 miles from the seat of war, with all these infamies, if they are being perpetrated, and say "give us a witness." It is a clear subterfuge and dodging.

I have here something else which the chairman of the Committee on the Philippines may direct his attention to, if he chooses. The Public, a paper published in Chicago, whose editor I know, a clean, high man, in its issue of February 15, has two pages of editorial matter here dealing with this subject, and asking Mr. LODGE by name certain questions. I will read it or I will print it, just as the Senator chooses.

Mr. SPOONER. Read it.

Mr. TILLMAN (reading):

When Mr. HOAR proposed this investigation by a special committee Mr. LODGE objected. Nor did he rest his objection alone upon the ground that a special committee would be unnecessary, because the standing committee was capable of making the investigation. He intimated very strongly, also, that no investigation at all was needed. His language was: "If the Senate think we ought to investigate some of the disputed questions of the past, to which my colleague has referred, of the necessity of which I will frankly say I am not convinced, I think" the standing "committee is fit to do it." Now, the "disputed questions of the past" are vital factors in an understanding of the situation at present. That the American people may understand why the Filipinos are virtually a unit against American sovereignty, as they are now conceded to be, some, at least, of the "disputed questions of the past" must be searchingly inquired into and the truth about them established.

It must be ascertained, for one thing, whether there was a de facto Filipino government at the time of the American purchase of sovereignty from a displaced de jure government. For another, it must be ascertained whether the hostile assertion of that beclouded title to sovereignty was the real cause of the war, which for three years has devastated the islands. It must be ascertained, also, whether the Americans have authorized the barbarous "water treatment" for the discovery of concealed weapons; whether savage tribes have been employed by the Americans to cope with the civilized Filipinos, after the fashion of the British in this country a century and a quarter ago; whether a reconcentrado policy has been adopted by the Americans, after the fashion of Weyler in Cuba at the close of the last century, and with what effect in the way of weakening "the enemy" with hunger and disease, and whether the Americans have introduced systematic prostitution, fostered drunkenness, murdered prisoners, refused quarter in battle, and wantonly destroyed villages. These are some of the "disputed questions of the past," which any investigation worthy of the name must put at rest.

But Mr. LODGE, when interrogated upon the subject by a constituent of high standing in his community, the Rev. C. F. Dole, really emphasizes his conviction that no such investigation is necessary. The correspondence appeared in the Boston Herald of February 2. Replying to Mr. Dole, Mr. LODGE says that everything relating to our operations in the Philippines has been freely published by the War Department; that he does not believe that any cruelty is practiced; that he doubts the reports to the contrary, and will continue to doubt "such charges without proof;" and that his committee "stands ready at any time to investigate any specific act of wrongdoing," but that "it is impossible for the committee to investigate vague rumors or stories told by persons who will not allow their names to be declared and who furnish no facts as to the time, place, or participants in the alleged abuse."

That is the attitude of a man who, unless he is anxious to conceal the facts, is incompetent for the post of chairman of a committee of investigation. The function of such a committee is not to try issues brought before it, as courts do, but to take the initiative. It is not relieved of this duty by the fact that the War Department has published reports made by the very men who are accused of responsibility for the scandals demanding investigation, and who have not been subjected to cross-examination. It is not relieved because the chairman doubts the scandalous rumors. It is not relieved because the rumors are "without proof;" on the contrary, its duty is therefore all the more imperative to find proof itself of either the truth or the falsity of the rumors. Neither is it relieved because the persons who tell these stories withhold their names and the identifying circumstances. Whether their stories be false or true, they could not disclose their names voluntarily without being victimized; and no identification of circumstances could be made without identifying the persons. But of its own initiative the Senate committee could make an investigation which would disclose names and circumstances without exposing the witnesses to the malice of their superiors. If it neglects to do this, it thereby exhibits incompetency or something worse.

I will pause here to ask, when the army there is in absolute control and the alien and sedition laws of the Taft Commission are in force, what protection has any man, civil or military? He can be tried by drumhead court-martial if he is in the Army, or he can be haled up to jail and put in it indefinitely by the Taft Commission, if it is under the civil government.

Whoever has had correspondence with private soldiers and other subordinates in the Philippine Islands who have written frankly—but, for obvious reasons, in confidence—of the situation there, has as good reason for believing the stories which the chairman of the Senate committee lightly tosses aside as Mr. LODGE has for doubting them, and the latter's incredulity will not convince such persons of the falsity of what their friends in the Philippines say.

They know, if he does not, that it is within the power of his committee to uncover the facts without first requiring their friends to defy the vengeance of superiors in a country where those superiors have and exercise autocratic power. While no one would insist, upon the basis of these personal letters, that what they say is proved, the letters justify the confidence of those who receive them, and they are common enough to have created a sentiment which calls for a Congressional investigation of a searching character.

Is it true, for instance, that the civil governments in the Philippine towns are in reality military? Or, is it true that there is a military garrison in these towns and that the Filipino head man of the "civil" government has about as much power as it strikes the fancy of the military officer in command of the garrison to give him? Or, is it true that the local sentiment thus generated is such as to make the perpetuation of military power a necessity? Or, is it true that this quotation from a letter of the kind we have mentioned indicates the character of the American modes of pacification?

Here is the letter:

I have picked up a good deal of information from an officer stationed here, and one who has been through the whole thing. Naturally he is no friend to Filipinos, and takes delight now in recalling the verbal orders of General —— and men of his stamp to their officers. Their instructions were not to allow any questions of conscience or ideas of justice to hamper them in their dealings with the Filipinos. Such words were not lost on ambitious young men who wished to place another bar on their shoulder straps. The officer here, my acquaintance, frequently recalls the pleasant days when Captain —— tried his new Gatling gun on inoffensive natives and their ponies, or when he blew a few native boats (and, by implication, some natives) out of Lake ——, just to see how well trained his gunners were.

Or is it true that this quotation from the same letter fairly describes the situation?

The native found that the easiest way to get along was to pretend friendship until he got an opportunity to do something. He could do little else, since he was burned out and starved; but those who did him evil foolishly thought he could suddenly come to love them, and so gave him some share in making laws for himself. Naturally the Filipinos who were elected to office were those who most heartily hated Americans and their ways. And then, when laws were not enacted to conform to American ideals, the Filipino was proclaimed unprogressive and useless.

Or, is it true that this quotation from the same letter is correct in its statements?

"For the last two months the province of Batangas has been in open rebellion. Martial law has been again proclaimed, and is strongly advocated for the whole island. In the provinces of Batangas and Laguna all the ports are closed and a policy of fire and sword is inaugurated. As I was going to bed the other night, the officer in command brought in an order from General ——, of the Division of ——, which empowers a post commander or one of his officers to do as he may wish to do—anything, in fact, that may tend to bring peace about rapidly. This may be a better policy than letting the war drag on for a dozen years, but will it bring the right kind of peace?"

And what about the truth of the next quotation? Is the case at all typical?

"There is a native presidente or cabeza who has the name of ruler. But the real rulers are the two military officers. The presidente must stand, hat in hand, and take their orders or insults, just as they fancy. Neither is too well educated, and these years of war, burning huts, and swearing at unruly soldiers leaves them with the ethics of a ward heeler. These two men can practically do as they will. Comparatively speaking, they are not bad. In fact, they have been exceptionally kind to me. But their behavior is very strange and I can not overlook it. They take their carbines, as the notion strikes them, and go out to shoot dogs and pigs on the owners' very door steps, at times within 10 feet of his children."

In explanation they say that the conquered have no rights. Conduct of this sort caused the deplorable massacre in the island of Samar. The commanding officer in the town of Balangiga ordered the presidente of the place to cut the weeds about the town. I can imagine how the order was given. The presidente said, "Yes," and brought on his weed cutters. Of course all had bolos to do the work with. In the early morning, when the soldiers were off their guard, the natives closed in on them and began their butchers' work. Now, I do not commend the action of the dastard presidente; but a little humane treatment would no doubt have prevented this affair.

Finally, is it true that such a condition exists as is described in the following quotation:

"I would send you the papers printed in Manila, but they give no idea of the situation. They merely preach force, force, force, and, occasionally, extermination. The few magazines are no better. I am sending you the Taft Commission Report. The islands were more pacified when that report was handed in to Congress than they are now."

Other questions, specific as to particular abuses, might be framed upon the basis of this evidently truthful letter (now in our possession) from an intelligently observant American; but the abuses are described so circumstantially that no quotation can be made without exposing the writer, who is still in the Philippines, and subjecting him to the risk of persecution. Enough has been quoted, however, to indicate that the situation in the Philippines is scandalous to the American name, and it is sufficiently definite to enable the Senate committee, if it is searching for the truth and not engaged in whitewashing, to bring the scandalous facts to light or show that they do not exist.

Now, if I give the name of the writer of that letter will you send for him and bring him here?

Mr. LODGE. Immediately.

Mr. TILLMAN. All right; I will telegraph him right away.

Mr. LODGE. But it is difficult to examine witnesses unless we know their names.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is more difficult to get them if we are to go on in this way investigating the war in the Philippines in Washington. It will be like the trial of Hastings, in which one of the wits said—I think it was Sheridan—that the court walked while the trial stood still, because it took seven years to determine whether he had been guilty of cruelty or not.

I contend that this Senate ought to order its Committee on the Philippines or a subcommittee to go there, and let it be composed of men on both sides, who would have the courage to look over the ground, go to the bottom of the troubles, try to remove these stigmas from our Army, and remove these accusations against our civilization and our religion and everything else that is decent and manly and American, and let the world know that they are lies. I do not stand sponsor for this; but, as I have said, there is too much smoke for there not to be some fire; and I recollect that Sherman's army in America, commanded by Americans, marched through South Carolina with fire, and spread desolation for a distance 60 miles wide from Savannah to Cheraw in 1865. Why should you be less cruel to those poor negroes in the Philippines?

Mr. SPOONER. Negroes?

Mr. TILLMAN. That is what they call them. Of course, they are a higher race than our negroes; they are a much higher type of men than the negro, but I can not help that. Your writers, your school-teachers, and your officers there call them negroes.

PREY OF OUR SOLDIERS—PLEA FOR FILIPINO WOMEN BY AMERICAN SISTERS—MRS. ELLIS'S STARTLING CHARGE—SPEAKING TO THE NATIONAL COUNCIL OF WOMEN, SHE DECLARED SOLDIERS AND OFFICIALS ARE CAUSING THE DOWNFALL OF THE WOMEN AND GIRLS OF NEW ISLAND POSSESSIONS—PLEADS FOR INVESTIGATION.

Startling charges that American officials and soldiers in the Philippines are dragging down hundreds of pure Filipino women into lives of shame and degradation were made at the session of the National Council of Women in Carroll Hall last night. Mrs. Margaret Dye Ellis, the Washington representative of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, made the charges, and she flung them out with a severe denunciation of the American rule in the Philippines and with a direct appeal to President Roosevelt to investigate and punish the alleged perpetrators of the infamy.

Mrs. Ellis spoke on the theme, "Our duty to the women of our new possessions." She reviewed the occupation by the United States of Cuba, Hawaii, and the Philippines, and described at considerable length the cleanly and virtuous habits of the women inhabiting the last-named islands. She then depicted the horrors of the war and told of the driving from their homes of Filipino families.

"There is still another awful side to the Filipino question," she said, holding up a small book on the flyleaf of which was the portrait of a young Filipino maiden. "Here is the portrait of a girl of 16 years and her signature, who in this work charges her downfall to an American inspector in an American Government department. This girl and hundreds of others are set apart for the greed and lust of American soldiers. They are held in bondage worse than death and for purposes tongue can not describe.

"God pity us—we, the highest type of civilization—for dragging down these Filipino women. Shame, shame. [Applause and cries of "Shame."]

DISGRACE SHOULD BE STOPPED.

"In one hospital in Manila there are, so an agent of the American Bible Society who has been there states, between 400 and 500 Filipino girls under treatment. We have had so many blessings showered on our nation that we American women should rise up in our strenth, our womanhood, and demand that this disgrace be stopped and its perpetrators dealt with severely.

"That brave, true, strong heart in the White House, President Roosevelt, who believes in pure womanhood, I appeal to that he put an end to this crime to Filipino women. That flag, which the American woman has helped so much to make, and which stands for social purity, should not wave over such disgrace. They talk a good deal about our forefathers; they should talk more of our foremothers. The flag should stand for protection, not only to merchandise, shipping, and mercantile commodities, but for pure womankind."—Washington Post, February 22, 1902.

WAR HORRORS DESCRIBED—FILIPINO WOMEN AND CHILDREN BURNED OUT OF HOMES AND DRIVEN TO MOUNTAINS.

READING, February 9.

Randolph W. Graul, serving in the United States Marine Corps in the Philippines, sends home a graphic story of how they are cleaning out the Filipinos. His letter is dated at Basey, which, he says, is in the hotbed of the insurrection. He writes: "The moment we arrived here orders were given to clean up the place. Every house outside of Basey was burned, and we then went to San Antone. Here we destroyed about 150 huts and made prisoners of the men. The women and children were chased to the mountains. We all felt sorry to be compelled to chase the women out and then burn their homes, but this is a bad place, and our boys have been greatly annoyed by these people. We have got used to it now and do not mind it."

[Cincinnati Enquirer, August 12, 1900.]

BURNED—WOMAN ON HER SICK BED—UNARMED FILIPINOS SHOT DOWN LIKE DOGS—TERRIBLE STORY OF INHUMANITY TOLD BY EX-SOLDIER ALEXANDER GRANT, OF THIS CITY, WHO SERVED WITH SIXTH INFANTRY—BRUTALITY OF OFFICERS.

A tale of horror and bloodshed was told yesterday at the Fourth street recruiting station by Alexander Grant, late a private in Company D of the Sixth Regiment, United States Infantry.

Grant, whose home is at 1535 Vine street, enlisted with the Sixth at the opening of hostilities with Spain, and saw much service in the Philippines. He but recently returned from the islands, having received on the 20th of May his honorable discharge.

He declared yesterday that the things he saw on the islands and the orders he was compelled to carry out have sickened him of all desire for army life.

ATROCIOUS BUTCHERY.

"During all my services in the Philippines," he said, "about all Company D did was police duty on the island of Negros, where most of the Sixth is. Most of the time we were in and around the town of Isabela, where we had had a little scrap with a band of Filipinos. Shortly after that battle, or skirmish—for only one man of the company was wounded, and we had been reenforced by some of Company K—we got into a little town some miles west of Isabela. We were ordered to search the town for proof against the fellow they call by some peculiar name in that country, who occupies the position of chief of police of the town, as it was suspected by the officers that he had been assisting the rebels. We scoured the town thoroughly, but were unable to find anything but a few spears and bows and arrows.

"Nevertheless, Captain Bundy, of my company, placed the chief of police and some of his men under arrest. They were about 10 in number, all told. They were lined up just outside the town and told that they had a chance for their lives. Some of them flopped down on their knees and began to pray. They were made to stand up and told to run. A squad of men were drawn up in a firing line, and as the poor, half-naked devils ran for the bushes the command was given to fire. The chief of police and half of his men were killed. In the meantime the rest of Company D, and I was one of them, under command of Lieutenant Young, were ordered to burn all the houses in the town.

BURNED ON HER BED.

"In one of the shacks was an old woman, who was lying on her bed sick with the smallpox. One of the men told the lieutenant of this. He replied: 'I don't give a d—; burn her, too.'

"An order is an order in the Army. The poor old woman was burned while she lay helpless on her bed, and her cries of anguish rang in the ears of the men for many days afterwards. On another occasion we were ordered to shoot men who had laid down their arms, in the same manner in which the chief of police of that town and his men were murdered. I tell you, boys," Grant continued, as he turned on the group of recruiting sergeants who were listening to him, "it is too awful to contemplate.

"I would have not believed it at all if I had not seen it with my own eyes and been compelled to carry out those fiendish orders myself. Then, again, we have been treated like dogs all the time we have been in the Philippines, and everything under the sun has been tried to keep the men from coming back to the States after they have been discharged from the service. We were kept from getting away from the islands as long as possible in the hope that we would spend all the money we had saved and be compelled to reenlist. I was discharged on the 20th of May and was kept at Isabella for ten days, and again at Iloilo ten days longer. The excuse given was that there was no transport to take me to Manila. Finally I paid my own way there and, after waiting around there until about the middle of July, was allowed to sail on the United States transport Warren for San Francisco. Coming over on the transport there were a number of men who had been discharged from various regiments, all of whom complained of the treatment they had received from their officers."

SHAMEFUL TREATMENT CHARGED.

"What was the nature of the ill-treatment from the officers?" was asked.

"In the first place," he answered, "we were allowed absolutely no freedom at all, although we were doing nothing more than police duty most of the time, and there were no rebels within striking distance of us. We were kept housed up doing garrison duty all the time. Then, so some of the boys on the transport told me, they had not been given their allowance for clothing. Nor were we given the full allowance for mileage. It seems that the paymaster stopped the clothing allowance after I was discharged, and would not pay the men for the clothing they had saved, as had been the case heretofore. Coming over on the transport the best we got to eat was the leavings from the officers' table. I tell you I was glad to get back to the States again."

"Don't you realize," said one of the sergeants, "that the statements you have made will blacklist you and make the officers lay for you if you should ever reenlist?"

"I don't care if it would," came the answer in a soldier's quick, decisive tones. "Every word I have spoken is the God's truth, and my story will be vouched for by any and every man who was in Company D. Why, just before I left one of the men was to be court-martialed for writing home about the treatment the men and the Filipinos have been receiving. Its all true, every word of it, and I'm willing to swear to it."

HERBERT WELSH, 1305 ARCH STREET,
Philadelphia, February 18, 1902.

Hon. BENJAMIN R. TILLMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: In your valued favor of February 17 you say that you "have it in mind to spread in the records some morning before this debate closes everything that you can obtain touching the cruelties which have characterized the war in the Philippines," and you ask me to send you what I have of that character.

It seems to me most desirable that the people of this country, who, I believe, in the main wish to do what is just and right, should know the facts of this war. Certain of these facts seem to me to have a twofold significance. First, they show that atrocities have been committed under our flag, and apparently by the authority of certain of our officers, which are wholly contrary to the rules of civilized warfare. Those who are responsible for these atrocities should, I therefore believe, be tried for them, and, if the evidence warrants, convicted and punished. In this way the Army as a whole will have its honor vindicated, and the burden of such deeds will fall on guilty shoulders alone. To this proposition I should think fair-minded supporters of the present Philippine policy, as well as its opponents, would agree. Second, I believe that the facts of this case, when properly related and considered, bring the strongest indictment against the policy itself—the policy of subjecting an alien people against their will to an outside authority.

I ask your attention to the statement of facts contained in the accompanying article, entitled "By way of Manila." They relate strongly to the alleged use of the water torture under our flag in the Philippines. May I venture a word of explanation? Two years ago, when I saw in a respectable paper of this city, the Friend's Intelligencer, an account of the alleged use of this water torture I discredited its truth. I became convinced, however, that the statement was true through a personal experience which is set down in the accompanying article. A gentleman brought to me in my office a letter written by an assistant commissary in our service, and dated Tarlac, the 25th of April, 1901. This letter was evidently genuine, written in good faith, addressed to friends in Philadelphia, without expectation on the part of the writer that it would ever have a larger group of readers. The impression produced by it was deep and convincing.

It narrated the use of the torture as the writer had evidently seen it inflicted by the Macabebe scouts. It explained how such means came to be used. It was necessary for us to get the concealed guns of the Filipinos; $30 reward would not bring them, so the methods of these native scouts were employed. The letter convinced me that men high in authority must know of and sanction these means, for you will observe the writer says: "They could not get the guns until the Macabebes were sent for." One naturally inferred that the reason for sending for the Macabebes must be well known to those in authority. I was so impressed by this statement that I published it at the time in City and State and also sent it to the Springfield Republican, in which paper it was likewise published. Then followed from that time to this, without any repudiation or denial by the authorities, the publication in various papers of letters from soldiers similar to that to which I have referred. Governor Taft is reported to have admitted that there had been some slight use of this method of obtaining information, but that it was "strictly forbidden" by the authorities in the Philippines. It would be interesting to know since when it has been "strictly forbidden."

I send herewith inclosed a copy of an extract from the Manila Times of August 18, 1901, in which the statement is made by a correspondent in the island of Samar that Major O'Connell, of the First Infantry, suspecting certain Filipinos of having given information to their hostile countrymen which led to some of our soldiers being ambushed, determined that a good "shaking up" was desirable, and so put them to the water torture, with the result that by this means the guilty were eliminated and locked up in jail. It is interesting to note in this connection the apparent indifference which such a proceeding showed on the part of the officer in question to the fact that guiltless men were subjected to this horrible torture along with guilty ones. From the statement it would appear that not all of those who were so tortured were proved to be guilty, even if a confession under such agony could be considered proof of guilt. It is also significant that such an item of news should be boldly published in a paper circulating in Manila, the seat of American military authority, if the use of these means were "strictly forbidden" in any precise meaning of those words. If the torture really was forbidden it is inconceivable that a newspaper would openly publish the name and position of the man who used it unless his court-martial and punishment were about to follow. Possibly Major O'Connell has been court-martialed for this offense; but, if so, I am unaware of any public announcement of the fact.

I further would draw attention to the statement made in an article published by Mr. George Kennan in the New York Outlook last March. Mr. Kennan quotes from the letter of an Army officer of high position and undoubted reliability written to a brother officer in this country, in which, as you will see, the statement is made that the Macabebe scouts are not the only ones who have used this torture; that it has been employed by us less discriminatingly than it was by Spain; that the Macabebes would apply it to any Filipino whom they might meet on entering a town on the main chance of thereby getting information from him. This is a very interesting statement when compared with that of Governor Taft, which conveys the impression that the torture has been but slightly used. I have taken pains to make inquiries about this military witness, and have satisfied myself that his testimony is to be entirely relied upon. In a speech recently made by me on the Philippine question before the Massachusetts Reform Club, in Boston, upon the occasion of President Schurman's memorable address, I referred in detail to this question of the use of the water torture. Shortly afterwards I received a letter from the secretary of the club, from which I quote the following passage:

"Apropos of what you write me regarding the treatment of the Filipinos by our soldiers, I must tell you this tale: After your speech—a few days after—one of the members met me and said, 'I could not believe that Welsh could be right in his assertion about the brutality of our soldiers; it seemed to me un-American and impossible; so I went to an officer whom I and you know (he would not give me his name, and I am not sure whom he means) and asked him if he had ever known the water torture being practiced. He admitted that he had, and had even done it himself, excusing it on the ground of necessity.'

"My friend was somewhat stirred up to find that the charge he had sought to disprove was true."

This statement of a returned Army officer that the torture was not only used, but that he had used it himself, would seem to show clearly that the practice must have attained a recognized position in military operations in the Philippines; otherwise it would be incredible that an officer of standing could make such a statement. This falls in with the statement made by Mr. G. H. Bates, of Saybrook, Ill., a veteran of the civil war, whose letter on this subject was recently published in the Springfield Republican. I quote from it as follows:

"The 'water cure' is the favorite torture of the Americans to force the natives to give information concerning the insurrectos. The native is bound and gagged, and one soldier pours water and sand down his throat while another beats him on the stomach, which soon swells out like a drum. This torture is said to be horrible, and it generally makes the Filipino betray everything; but many of them are game to the last and carry their secret with them to the grave. A soldier who was with General Funston told me that he helped administer the 'water cure' to 160 natives, all but 26 of whom died."

A letter was sent from my office to the editor of The State, inquiring as to the reliability of this correspondent. The same mail that brought your letter to me brought one from him under date of February 15. From this I quote as follows:

"After investigating the matter as fully as I could, I submit the results of the inquiry. My news editor informs me that the letter was, as he remembers it, written by Mr. R. D. Epps, a citizen of this State, who was chosen by the State superintendent of education, at the request of Washington authorities, for appointment as a teacher in the Philippines, and who went over with a shipload of other teachers last year. This appointment would indicate that he was a man of character and good standing; and such is my information concerning him. I do not know him personally, but as a former constituent of the State he has made several contributions to it since his arrival in the Philippines, and they have been accepted as written in good faith and with accuracy as to statement of facts.

"I inclose the letter in full, and you will see from it that Mr. Epps writes from the American Army standpoint, not from that of the Filipinos or anti-imperialists. He is evidently in sympathy with the measures adopted."

This evidence would seem to me morally conclusive that the water torture has been used very extensively as a means of obtaining information from suspected Filipinos—how extensively a rigid official inquiry can alone determine. That it puts a horrible stain on our flag I believe every unprejudiced, honorable mind will admit.

But there is another painful subject in this connection which also demands investigation; that is the question of killing the wounded. That such has been done under our flag was asserted by an investigator of world-wide reputation, Mr. George Kennan, in his articles in The Outlook of last February and March. Writing personally to me in relation to this subject, he recently said: "So far as the killing of wounded Filipinos is concerned, I based my assertions partly on the extraordinary and abnormal disproportion between Filipino killed and Filipino wounded, as shown in our official reports, and partly upon the direct testimony of eyewitnesses. * * * American soldiers and noncommissioned officers who personally saw Filipino wounded shot and bayoneted to death. * * * The figures, however, speak for themselves.

How does it happen that in the year ended June 30, 1901, the American rate of killed to wounded was 1 to 2, while the Filipino rate was about 3½ to 1? One of my critics in the Outlook explained that this disproportion is due to the fact that the Filipinos leave their dead on the field, while they carry most of their wounded away. But if the Filipino proportion of wounded to killed is normal, or even approximate to the American rate, they must have carried off the field in the last year for which we have records nearly 7,000 wounded men. Does anybody really believe that this could have been done by a lot of bushwhackers, without any organized transportation service, in a tangled tropical wilderness, where there are no roads, and in spite of the close and active pursuit that our troops make when they win, as they always do?

I have seen something of operations in Cuba; I have tried myself to get through tropical jungles without incumbrance of any kind, and I don't believe it would have been possible even for our regular troops to carry away any considerable number of our wounded if we had been disastrously defeated and closely pursued by the Spaniards at San Juan Hill. If we could not have done it, with a regularly organized transportation service, a hospital corps, litter bearers, ambulances, and surgeons, how do the Filipinos manage it without any such means and resources? The explanation is essentially incredible, and so far as I know it is not supported, or even suggested, by any one of our general officers in the field. In the official report that I examined a year ago the proportion of Filipinos killed to wounded was stated as 4.6 to 1.

It seems to me, I will say in conclusion, that these facts show that an official inquiry which will have the power to summon as witnesses the officers and soldiers of the Army who can testify in the matter is urgently desired. Our good name is to be preserved not by covering up such scandalous deeds, but by exposing them, disavowing them, and holding to strict accountability those who are responsible for them.

I call attention to one additional case. The following is quoted from the Manila correspondent of the Philadelphia Ledger:

"The present war is no bloodless fake, opera bouffe engagement; our men have been relentless, have killed to exterminate men, women, and children, prisoners and captives, active insurgents and suspected people from lads of 10 up, an idea prevailing that the Filipino, as such, was little better than a dog, a noisome reptile, whose best disposition was the rubbish heap.

"Our soldiers have pumped salt water into men to 'make them talk,' have made prisoners of people who have held up their hands and peacefully surrendered, and an hour later, without an atom of evidence to show they were even insurrectos, stood them on a bridge and shot them down one by one, to drop in the water below and float down as examples to those who found their bullet-loaded corpses."

This paper (the Ledger) is, as you doubtless know, one of the most reliable newspapers of the country; it is extremely careful about all statements of fact which appears in its pages. I instituted an inquiry as to whether the Ledger was satisfied as to the trustworthiness of this correspondent, in view of the great importance of the statement made. This elicited the information—while I was not given the name of the correspondent—that the letter had been written by the wife of an Army officer who had himself witnessed the incidents described, and who was anxious that such facts should reach the people of this country.

Very respectfully, yours, HERBERT WELSH.

Mr. FORAKER submitted the following:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 29, 1902.

SIR: Referring to an article published in the City and State, Philadelphia, January 2, 1902, alleging the use of the "water torture" as a means of extorting information from the natives in the Philippines by our troops, and especially Macabebe Scouts, I desire to make the following comments:

The first company of Macabebe Scouts was organized by me in September, 1899. This force was subsequently increased until I had under my command five companies, numbering 640 men. I was in command of these scouts until the latter part of November, 1899, being relieved on account of a wound received at Aringay. These men were, in May, 1900, reorganized and officially designated Squadron Philippine Cavalry, though they were generally known as "Macabebe Scouts." Upon the reorganization I was again placed in command of them, and remained in command until these men were finally discharged from the service, in July, 1901.

At this time there were other bodies of scouts known as Macabebe scouts, about the discipline and conduct of which I know nothing, as I never came in contact with them.

During the time that I was in command of these native troops the practice of torturing natives to obtain information was neither sanctioned nor practiced. On the contrary, it was prohibited under pain of severe punishment. I not only did not "knowingly allow it," but from the time I organized the first company of natives until my command was discharged, in July, 1901, my officers and men were strictly prohibited from mistreating prisoners or "piasanos" in any way.

From time to time charges similar to that made by Mr. Kennan in the article referred to have been made against my scouts. These charges have invariably been thoroughly investigated, and have nearly always been found to be without foundation. As a rule, these charges have not been made to me as commanding officer of the scouts, but have been sent direct to the division commander, and in a great many cases special inspectors have been sent out to investigate. These inspectors have always been given every assistance by myself and officers to get at the truth, and the natives encouraged in every way to make known any cruelty practiced against them. It has generally been found that the natives have been scared into making these charges, first, by insurgent officials, who sought that method of arousing the natives by telling them of the barbarous treatment that they would have at the hands of the Macabebes, and, second, by American officers, who tried to intimidate the natives by threats of Macabebe vengeance.

I am glad to be able to say, however, that those charges have almost invariably gone before my command, and not followed it. In proof of this I would call attention to the petitions which have been in a number of cases—but notably at Abando and at Montalban—submitted, in which the natives have appealed to the department commander not to remove my command from their towns, as we had always afforded them absolute protection against "ladronism" and outrages of all sorts, and that my men, as they expressed it, treated them like brothers. I request that the Adjutant-General also compare the records of courts-martial of men in my command with those of the Army in general, both in the United States and in the Philippines.

I have heard a great deal about the "water torture," or "water cure," as it is generally called, and I do no not doubt that it has been applied in a few cases. Outrages will be committed in any army in the world. They have been committed against our own citizens in our own country by our own soldiers. But I know that such methods were not sanctioned, as alleged in the article referred to, by the military authorities in the Philippines, and that when proof could be obtained that such methods had been practiced the offenders were promptly brought to justice.

Indeed, after nearly three years' service in the Philippines, I can conscientiously say that I believe the treatment which the natives received at the hands of the military has been extremely humane and tolerant.

Very respectfully,

MATTHEW A. BATSON,
Captain, Fifteenth U. S. Cavalry.

The ADJUTANT-GENERAL U. S. ARMY,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. McLAURIN of South Carolina. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege. During my absence a few moments ago from the Senate Chamber, in attendance upon the Committee on Indian Affairs, the gentleman who has just taken his seat, the Senator who has just taken his seat, said that improper influences had been used in changing the vote of somebody on the treaty, and then went on later and said that it applied to the Senator from South Carolina, who had been given the patronage in that State. I think I get the sense of the controversy.

I desire to state, Mr. President—I would not use as strong language as I intend to had I not, soon after the Senate met, replied to these insinuations and said that they were untrue—I now say that that statement is a willful, malicious, and deliberate lie.

[At this point Mr. TILLMAN advanced to Mr. McLAURIN of South Carolina, and the two Senators met in a personal encounter, when they were separated by Mr. Layton, the acting assistant doorkeeper, assisted by several Senators sitting near.]

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I ask that the doors be closed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order. Senators will please resume their seats.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President, if the Senator from South Carolina has concluded——

Mr. McLAURIN of South Carolina. Mr. President, I will now proceed with my remarks, which were so unceremoniously interrupted——

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I call the Senator from South Carolina to order.

Mr. McLAURIN of South Carolina. Which one of the Senators?

Mr. TELLER. This one, and the other one, too, for that matter.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I join in that. Surely there is some way of protecting the dignity of this body.

Mr. BURROWS. Certainly; the Senate can not let this thing pass, Mr. President.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I asked that the doors might be closed.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate go into executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After two hours and twenty minutes the doors were reopened.

PROCEEDING FOR CONTEMPT.

During the consideration of executive business, and while the doors were closed, the injunction and seal of secrecy was removed from the following proceedings:

Mr. FORAKER submitted the following order:

Ordered, That the two Senators from the State of South Carolina be declared in contempt of the Senate on account of the altercation and personal encounter between them this day in open session, and that the matter be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections with instructions to report what action shall be taken by the Senate in regard thereto.

The Senate proceeded by unanimous consent to consider the said order.

Pending debate,

On motion by Mr. TELLER that the doors be opened,

It was determined in the negative—yeas 18, nays 44.

The yeas and nays being, on motion of Mr. LODGE, desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are: Messrs. BACON, BATE, BERRY, BLACKBURN, CARMACK, CLAY, COCKRELL, GIBSON, McENERY, MARTIN, PATTERSON, RAWLINS, SIMMONS, SPOONER, TALIAFERRO, TELLER, TURNER, and WELLINGTON—18.

Those who voted in the negative are: Messrs. ALDRICH, ALLISON, BARD, BURNHAM, BURROWS, BURTON, CLARK of Wyoming, CULLOM, DEBOE, DIETRICH, DILLINGHAM, DOLLIVER, ELKINS, FAIRBANKS, FORAKER, FOSTER of Washington, FRYE, GALLINGER, GAMBLE, HANNA, HANSBROUGH, HAWLEY, HOAR, KEAN, KEARNS, KITTREDGE, LODGE, McCOMAS, McMILLAN, MALLORY, MASON, MILLARD, MITCHELL, NELSON, PERKINS, PLATT of Connecticut, PRITCHARD, PROCTOR, QUARLES, SCOTT, SIMON, STEWART, WARREN, and WETMORE—44.

So the motion of Mr. TELLER was not agreed to.

On motion of Mr. FORAKER, and the same having been seconded,

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of secret legislative business.

On the question to agree to the order submitted by Mr. FORAKER,

Mr. BACON demanded a division of the question; and

On the question to agree to the first branch thereof, as follows:

That the two Senators from the State of South Carolina be declared in contempt of the Senate on account of the altercation and personal encounter between them this day in open session—

It was determined in the affirmative—yeas 61, nays 0.

The yeas and nays being, on motion of Mr. HOAR, desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are: Messrs. ALDRICH, ALLISON, BACON, BARD, BATE, BLACKBURN, BURNHAM, BURROWS, BURTON, CARMACK, CLARK of Wyoming, CLAY, COCKRELL, CULLOM, DEBOE, DEPEW, DIETRICH, DILLINGHAM, DOLLIVER, DUBOIS, ELKINS, FAIRBANKS, FORAKER, FOSTER of Washington, FRYE, GALLINGER, GAMBLE, GIBSON, HANNA, HANSBROUGH, HAWLEY, HOAR, KEAN, KEARNS, KITTREDGE, LODGE, McCOMAS, McENERY, McMILLAN, MALLORY, MARTIN, MILLARD, MITCHELL, NELSON, PATTERSON, PERKINS, PLATT of Connecticut, PRITCHARD, PROCTOR, QUARLES, RAWLINS, SCOTT, SIMMONS, SIMON, SPOONER, STEWART, TALIAFERRO, TURNER, WARREN, WELLINGTON, and WETMORE—61.

None voted in the negative.

So the first branch of the order was agreed to.

The second branch of the order was then agreed to.

On motion by Mr. FAIRBANKS,

The doors were reopened.

After the doors were opened—

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, the seal of secrecy has been removed from the proceedings had by the Senate when recently in secret legislative session. During that time I made a certain statement to the Senate as to what it was the purpose of the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] to do when the doors of the Senate should be opened and we should be back in public session. The two Senators from South Carolina have been declared by action of the Senate to be in contempt of this body.

What I desire to know now, Mr. President, is as to whether the senior Senator from that State is entitled to recognition by the President of the Senate in order that he may make the statement which I assured the Senate it was his purpose and his pleasure to make.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate——

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire to have the Chair rule upon the question that I raised. The Senate, against my judgment, took this action prematurely, as I thought, declaring the two Senators from the State of South Carolina in contempt. Now, I want the President of the Senate to determine the rights and the status of these two Senators. That they are in contempt we all know and the public knows, because the seal of secrecy has been removed from the proceedings of this body while in the short secret legislative session. The record shows that both the Senators from South Carolina are now in contempt. The Senate knows, through the statement I made to the Senate, what was then the purpose of the senior Senator from South Carolina, and that, I aver, is still his purpose.

Now, I want the Chair to say, in view of the action taken by the Senate declaring these two members to be in contempt, whether the senior Senator from the State of South Carolina is entitled to recognition, in order that he may make that statement to the open Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair——

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, may I be permitted to make a suggestion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will hear the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to suggest to the Chair, as the application has been made to the Senate in behalf of the Senator from South Carolina by the Senator from Kentucky, if the proper way would not be for the Chair to submit to the Senate whether the Senator be permitted to proceed; in which case I am quite sure there would be unanimous assent.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Ah, Mr. President, to that I object. There will not be unanimous consent—not until the Chair has answered the parliamentary inquiry which I have submitted. Before the Chair answers that, I want to add that if either of the Senators from South Carolina (both of whom the Senate has just declared to be in contempt) is entitled to recognition by the Chair, it can not be for the given purpose of proceeding to make a statement that has been forecasted. If they, while in contempt, are entitled to recognition by the Chair, it puts the Senator in possession of the floor for any purpose that he sees fit to use it.

Mr. SPOONER, Mr. STEWART, and others. No.

Mr. ALDRICH. Not at all.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Show me the rule. I challenge the oldest Senator in service here. Show me either the rule or the practice or the exception to a rule under which any Senator was ever recognized and put into possession of the floor in which he did not have the right, as long as he kept within the lines of the rule, to discuss what he pleased upon the floor.

Mr. STEWART. The rule in court, I can state——

Mr. BLACKBURN. This is not a court, I beg the Senator's pardon. This is not even a high court of impeachment trying a question of impeachment. This is a deliberative body. It is a legislative body. It is governed by its own rules. We know its rules. I was once the chairman of its Committee on Rules, as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] is now.

The proposition I submit. I warned the Senate, I told the Senate what the senior Senator from South Carolina purposed to do and wanted to do. The Senate has seen fit to refuse him the opportunity of doing it. I now aver and avow that it is still his purpose and his pleasure to do precisely what I told you he meant to do. But by the action of the Senate the question comes up as to whether you have not deprived him of the right of making that statement or as to whether you have not conferred upon him the right to go on and discuss the Philippine tax bill or any other subject that he sees fit to handle.

I ask that the Chair shall rule upon the one question as to whether a Senator declared to be in contempt of this body is entitled to recognition by its Presiding Officer and to possession of the floor. If he is, the senior Senator from South Carolina wants to take the floor, but he does not want to take it by unanimous consent; he wants to take it in his own right, and I simply ask the Presiding Officer of this Chamber to answer and tell me whether the senior Senator from South Carolina has that right.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I assume that there is nothing in the history of the Senate or in the rules of the Senate that establishes a precedent for the resolution which has just been adopted by the Senate. I think that is clear.

Mr. TELLER. That is right.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is true.

Mr. ALDRICH. It seems to me that the two Senators from South Corolina, having been adjudged in contempt by the deliberate vote of this body, can not be heard by the Senate, except for the one purpose of purging themselves of that contempt.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the Senator from Rhode Island refer me either to rule, precedent, or practice for that conclusion?

Mr. ALDRICH. The second clause of the nineteenth rule provides that when the President of the Senate shall call a Senator to order for disorder in debate the Senator can only proceed in order by the consent of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Read the rule.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That does not touch this case.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will read the rule. It is as follows:

2. If any Senator, in speaking or otherwise, transgress the rules of the Senate, the presiding officer shall, or any Senator may, call him to order; and when a Senator shall be called to order, he shall sit down and not proceed without leave of the Senate, which, if granted, shall be upon motion that he be allowed to proceed in order, which motion shall be determined without debate.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask the Senator——

Mr. ALDRICH. This is a much graver offense.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Does that touch the question of contempt?

Mr. ALDRICH. Absolutely. The Senators from South Carolina being adjudged to be out of order——

Mr. BLACKBURN. Oh, no.

Mr. ALDRICH. And practically by a vote of the Senate——

Mr. BLACKBURN. I deny it.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is worse than being out of order. It is a more grave charge.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I grant you it is a much graver charge.

Mr. ALDRICH. Much graver.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The President of the Senate has not called either of the Senators to order; no member of this body has exercised his right of calling either of the Senators from South Carolina to order. The Senate itself by vote—a yea-and-nay vote—has declared not that either of the Senators from South Carolina was out of order, but that they are both in contempt of this body, and I want the ruling of the Chair on that question.

Mr. ALDRICH. But, Mr. President, by analogy it seems to me apparent that it is a much more serious offense, and it must be treated in the same way in which any disorder on the part of a Senator should be treated.

Mr. PATTERSON. May I ask the Senator from Rhode Island a question?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. Is not this the situation? This is not a question of being out of order——

Mr. ALDRICH. It seems to me it is the most serious disorder.

Mr. PATTERSON. There is no question about that; but, so far as parliamentary rules are concerned, it is not even analogous. The two Senators have been adjudged guilty of contempt—that is, the Senate has pronounced them guilty of contempt—but the Senate has not yet declared what the Senators shall do or what the nature of the punishment shall be. When attorneys in court or members of a legislative body are declared to be in contempt, upon conviction for the offense they then await the declaration of punishment. It is expected that this Senate will not only say that those gentlemen have been guilty of contempt, but what they shall be required to do by reason of it and how they shall purge themselves of it. If one is convicted of contempt in the presence of a court, the court announces that he is guilty of contempt, and then proceeds to declare the punishment, fine or imprisonment or suspension from practice for the time being. That is the exact parliamentary condition of this case.

For my own part, I hope, without any controversy as to this very disagreeable proceeding, that both Senators will be willing to proceed, by unanimous consent, to say what they desire to say. But if that is not their desire, they have no parliamentary right to the floor until the Senate itself shall declare what they shall do to purge themselves of contempt.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] is right in this respect, that no tribunal, except the Senate itself, can allow either of these Senators to proceed in the discussion of any question pending before the Senate or to make any statement before the Senate. The Senate has the right clearly to say what kind of a statement shall be permitted from those Senators or on what condition it will grant them the floor at all.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, it does not seem to me that there is any difficulty about this matter at all. It seems to me that we are clearly within the terms of the rule under anything like a fair construction.

If any Senator, in speaking or otherwise—

It is not confined to speech—in speaking or otherwise, transgress the rules of the Senate, the Presiding Officer shall, or any Senator may, call him to order.

Then follows the penalty.

Now what occurred?

Mr. ELKINS. Regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. FORAKER. As soon as this contempt was committed the Chair was addressed, and a motion was made to go into secret legislative session. There the Chair and the Senate were addressed, the contempt against the Senate was recited, and a motion was made with respect to it, which resulted in the action that has been taken. So the Senate acted, adjudging those Senators in contempt because they had transgressed, I may say, not only by speech, but also by action, against the rules of the Senate. Now, being in contempt, they can not proceed, according to all parliamentary law, except only by the consent of the Senate.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. Wait until I conclude.

It is for the Senate to determine whether or not those Senators shall be heard at all. I understand, from what the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] has said to the Senate, that the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] desires to address the Senate for the purpose of purging himself of his contempt. I ask that the Senate give unanimous consent. Without that unanimous consent, certainly not without a majority vote of the Senate, it is not possible for us to allow the Senators to be heard consistently with our parliamentary rules and regulations.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Very well.

Mr. FORAKER. Therefore, my contention is, Mr. President, that the Senators from South Carolina being adjudged in contempt directly within the terms of this rule, neither Senator can be heard except by permission of the Senate.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is ready to determine this question at any time.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Before that is done, Mr. President, I simply want to say that in submitting this inquiry to the Chair I was actuated, not by any purpose that was to be applied to the case before the Senate now, but we are making a precedent, and, as the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] has truly said, there is no precedent to guide us in what we are doing now. There has been no division of opinion among Senators as to the fact of the two South Carolina Senators being in contempt. The vote shows there was no division of sentiment there. We all knew that they were in contempt. The question I want determined here, Mr. President, is not with a view of applying to this case at all, for it will not, I apprehend, in the slightest degree affect the action the Senator from South Carolina will take—whether he proceed in his own right or whether he proceed by the sufferance of the Senate. I have no doubt that he will proceed; but I insist upon having a ruling from the Chair to determine whether the Senate, when it took its action in secret legislative session declaring these two Senators in contempt, did not preclude and cut those Senators off from any opportunity or chance to purge themselves of the contempt, unless the Senate should afterwards by further action agree to give them a chance to do so by unanimous consent or by a majority vote.

Mr. SPOONER. To which you object.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have objected, and said to the Senate that I intended to continue that objection until the President of the Senate ruled upon this question. I want to know whether the senior Senator from South Carolina in his own right can purge himself of contempt, as I apprised the Senate hours ago he wanted to do, or whether he must be clothed with that opportunity and given that chance as a matter of grace by the Senate. If this thing should ever happen again, I want to know what rights, if any, will result to a Senator as long as he stands under the judgment of the Senate in contempt of this body.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Chair to a further fact, which, it seems to me, complicates the matter here. I felt that it would, and I refrained from voting upon the question, not but that I thought both the Senators from South Carolina were in contempt, but it seemed to me that it was an irregular proceeding, and, as the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] has stated, it is an unknown proceeding in this body.

In addition to that, we have referred the whole matter to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which seems to me to complicate it further. I want to say that the Senator from South Carolina who sits on my left [Mr. MCLAURIN] is as anxious to make proper amends as is the Senator from South Carolina who sits on my right [Mr. TILLMAN], as was stated in secret session.

Now, are those Senators to get up here and make their speeches and the Senate say they are not satisfactory or say nothing, and is the matter then to go to the Committee on Privileges and Elections? Have we not put the matter where really the proper place for them to go, unless we retrace our steps, is before the committee and make their defense there? I do not believe that was the intention of the Senate, but it seems to me that, parliamentarily, we have got in that position.

Mr. FORAKER. The vote was taken on it in secret session, and there was an opinion held by some of us there that the two Senators from South Carolina should be adjudged in contempt, but that it ought to be referred to the committee. Then if the Senators wanted to be heard, to address the Senate and purge themselves of their contempt, the Senate would hear them; and what they might state to the Senate in open session in that behalf would be a proper subject-matter for consideration of the committee in extenuation.

Mr. TELLER. I had the floor, and the Senator took me off of it before I had finished my inquiry.

I want to know now, and I want the Chair to rule, first, whether the Senators from South Carolina have the right—and without the consent of the Senate—it seems to me, that it is not possible that they do have such a right—to be heard. Then I want to know, after they have been heard, if the Senate feels that their apology is ample and that they have discharged themselves from that contempt, what the next proceeding will be? Shall we stop there, or will they have another trial? Will they have two trials, one to purge themselves here and another before the committee?

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me, that is a matter for the committee to consider. The committee will take into consideration all that has occurred and all that the Senators have said in an endeavor to purge themselves of that contempt; and it will then be for the committee to determine whether any further punishment shall be imposed.

Mr. TELLER. Do I understand the Senate has deprived itself of the right, when it has heard either of the apologies, to determine whether it is sufficient or not?

Mr. FORAKER. The Senate can discharge the committee from the further consideration of the matter at any time, and that would end it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. While these two Senators are declared to be in contempt the Chair could not recognize either if he should rise and address the Chair; but on motion made by any Senator that they be heard the Chair would recognize the Senator making the motion, and would hold that the motion was in order. In the ordinary transgression of the rules or violation of order the Senator violating must take his chair, and he can not be recognized by the Presiding Officer again until the Senate has relieved him of that by motion. Of course, the Senators from South Carolina can be relieved from the condition in which they are now, so far as recognition by the Chair is concerned, by a motion and by a majority vote of the Senate. What will happen——

Mr. HOAR. And without debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What will happen after the two Senators have purged themselves, so far as it is possible, of the contempt, the Chair will be prepared to rule whenever that question is raised.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then, Mr. President, I move that the senior Senator from South Carolina——

Mr. SPOONER. Why confine it to him?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will apply it to both.

Mr. SPOONER. That is right.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the two Senators from South Carolina shall now be given the floor and be recognized by the Chair in order that they may in their own way proceed to purge themselves of the charge of contempt of which they have been adjudged guilty by the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER and others. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I have always esteemed it a high honor and privilege to be a member of this body. I had never had any legislative experience when I came here, and my previous service as governor of South Carolina for four years had unfitted me in a measure to enter this august assembly with that dignity and regard—proper regard, I will say—for its traditions and habits and rules that is desirable.

I have been here seven years. I have in that time learned to judge men with a little more catholicity of spirit than I did when I came here. I have found a great many people here in whose personal integrity and honor and regard for their obligations as gentlemen I have implicit confidence; but I have seen so much of partisanship, I have seen so much of what I consider slavish submission to party domination, that I confess I have felt somewhat at a loss how to judge men who in one aspect appeared to be so high and clean and honorable and in another appeared more or less despicable. I say this because of the fact that one of the Senators has seen fit to allude to some matters that occurred in the debate this morning.

I now want to say that, so far as any action of mine has caused any Senator here, or the Senate as a body, or the people of the United States to feel that I have been derelict and have not shown that courtesy and proper observance of the rules of this body, I regret it; I apologize for it. I was ready to do that two minutes after I had acted; but under the provocation, which was known of all of you, I could not have acted otherwise than I did; and while I apologize to the Senate and am sorry that it has occurred, I have nothing more to say.

Mr. MCLAURIN of South Carolina. Mr. President, I did not realize that I was in contempt of the Senate, nor do I think now, if my words are read in the RECORD, that I was, but, at the same time, as the Senate has ruled that I am in contempt of this honorable body, I beg leave to apologize.

I desire to say, Mr. President, that I have been very sorely and severely tried. I was in attendance on the Committee on Indian Affairs when I received a message from a friend in the Senate that my presence was needed here.

The history of the vote on the Spanish treaty is known to all of you. There have been statements made in newspapers and insinuations that I had been influenced by improper motives in connection with my vote on that treaty. Knowing in my own soul, and knowing that God in heaven also knows that it was false, when I was told that it was centered down to me, I was so outraged by what I considered a most brutal assault upon my honor as a man, and especially in view of the fact that in the beginning of the session, after the action of my party associates, I made a most careful and deliberate statement explaining all these matters, I did not feel as a man that I could ever hold my head up again if I did not resent it in the place where it was delivered, in the strongest and most forcible terms that I could employ.

With that, Mr. President, I am done, except I have this to say: If there is any more talk of that kind or any more——

Mr. PATTERSON. I beg the Senator to refrain.

Mr. McLAURIN of South Carolina. I will refrain, Mr. President.

PHILIPPINE TARIFF BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5833) temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, a number of Senators have said to me that they desire to speak. They do not, however, desire to go on now, but they would be glad to have an evening session. I therefore move that the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock——

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I hope not.

Mr. MASON. I hope we may have a short executive session.

Mr. LODGE. With the understanding that there is nothing to be considered at the evening session except the Philippine bill.

Mr. MASON. Will the Senator withhold that motion for a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will please be in order. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, before that vote is taken, I want to ask leave to be absent from the Senate this evening. I have an engagement, and do not desire to be sent for.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I may not be in order, but I hope the Senate will permit me to ask the Senator from Massachusetts not to insist on his motion for an evening session. The Senate is certainly not in a condition to proceed with its ordinary business to-night.

Mr. LODGE. Two Senators have told me that they would like to speak to-night; and I do not see why they should not be allowed to go on and do so, if they desire.

Mr. STEWART. I suggest that we go on now. We will not have a quorum if we have a session this evening. We had better proceed for an hour or two now, and let Senators who desire to speak submit their remarks. It would be very bad traveling to go home and come back.

Mr. LODGE. I am willing to go on now, if Senators desire.

Mr. STEWART. We will accomplish nothing by a recess, because we will not have a quorum at the evening session. I am willing to stay here and hear Senators speak.

Mr. LODGE. I am willing to go on now.

Mr. STEWART. We will accomplish nothing by a recess.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to accommodate Senators so far as I can. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN] I understand want to go on, and I wish to accommodate those Senators in any way they desire.

Mr. PRITCHARD. It is not my purpose to go on now, nor do I care to speak this evening, if we can have an understanding that the fifteen-minute rule will not apply on Monday.

Mr. LODGE and others. Oh, no!

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. It will suit me to proceed now or at 8 o'clock, but I should like to submit to-day what I have to say on this bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from Mississippi would like to go on now I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. It will suit me just as well.

Mr. LODGE. I withdraw the motion, but before the Senator from Mississippi begins I will state that at the conclusion of the Senator's speech I will move that the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock, the understanding being that the only business before the Senate this evening shall be the Philippine bill.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Mr. President, the bill and the substitute now before the Senate have legitimately opened the discussion of the entire Philippine question. I had intended until a day or two ago to say nothing further than a few words in reference to the two amendments, virtually the same, which I had prepared and which my colleague [Mr. MONEY] kindly introduced for me in my unavoidable absence. But I crave the indulgence of the Senate while I submit a few suggestions in reference to the bill and substitute, after calling brief attention to these amendments.

The first amendment mentioned is an amendment offered to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. The amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin proposes to refund to the party or parties who have paid internal-revenue taxes on articles shipped to the Philippines since the 1st of May, 1901, the taxes so paid. This amendment I propose to amend by providing that to entitle the party or parties to a refundment of these taxes they shall not have sold, bartered, or traded the articles before the passage of this bill. The bill provides for refunding taxes paid since November 15, 1901, and the amendment is in effect the same as the amendment to the amendment mentioned.

The amendment I offer appears to me to be clearly right. As I understand, nearly the entire amount of the taxes sought to be refunded were internal-revenue taxes collected on beer and whisky or other liquors. The payer of these taxes is the consumer. Nominally, the producer of the liquor pays the tax, but adds the tax to the price when he sells, and in this way the consumer in reality pays the tax. The tax has already been refunded to him who nominally paid it, if he has sold the article, in the price of the thing. If it is to be refunded it ought to be refunded to him who in reality paid it—to the consumer. To refund it to the nominal payer would be to give money to him which in equity belongs to another if not to the Government.

The parties to whom this bill would refund these taxes have no equitable claim to it. I suppose it is not denied that the law authorized and required the collection, and therefore these parties have no legal claim to it. If they have, then, no legal or equitable claim the provision ought to be stricken from the bill.

Now a few words in reference to the bill and substitute. I invite the Senate to compare the title of the bill with the provisions of the bill, and to compare the proposed title of the substitute with the provisions of the substitute and judge which is the more ingenuous. The bill is entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes." "Temporarily to provide," says the title of the bill, and yet you may look in vain for any provision in the bill that is limited in duration of time. It is not an answer to say that this law can be repealed whenever it shall have accomplished its aim. So can any law. Tariff laws are enacted and shortly changed, altered, or amended, but I have never yet seen a tariff law with a title stating that it is temporarily to provide revenue. If the title were to so say, the tariff bill would provide its own repeal at a stated period or upon a certain contingency. The title is not a part of the bill and does not operate as law, and the statement in the title that it is a temporary provision for revenue does not limit the act as to time. So you see the very title of the bill is misleading.

The Senator in charge of this bill [Mr. LODGE] says he "will never put into a bill for the Philippine Islands a legislative promise, vague, uncertain, perhaps impossible of fulfillment. Again, he says, "But do not let us make promises to them about a future as to which neither we nor they can tell." There may be laws that do not imply a promise, but since I heard the Senator I have tried in vain to conceive a law that does not either express or imply a promise. Surely the bill in this case implies promises as binding as if expressed. Indeed, I do not believe it would do violence to language to say that it expresses promise. So no Senator who supports this bill need be squeamish about legislative promise.

The bill proposes a law for the government of the Filipinos. It must be intended for the government of those Filipinos who have submitted to the authority of and are loyal to the United States. It can not be for the government of those who are denominated insurgents, because no law we enact can govern them until we shall have subdued them. We are told that the proportion of those who have submitted to the authority of the United States and are ready to yield obedience to the laws enacted by Congress to the entire population of the islands is exceedingly great. Bearing in mind that those people are agreeing to bow their heads and submit their necks to the yoke that a Congress of another tongue and another race many thousands of miles away, in which they have not the semblance of representation, may put upon them, I do not believe it is unreasonable for them, helpless as they are when opposed to us, to inquire as to what they are to expect or to hope in return for their humility and humiliation. So that the legislative promise, as it is termed, that is contained in the substitute offered by the committee minority is not obnoxious to the criticism directed against it, but it is prompted by high principles of right and noble sentiments of humanity.

In the Republican platform of 1900 it is declared that "a new birth of freedom" was given 10,000,000 of the human race by the result of the Spanish war. Is it possible that three years after those 10,000,000 were given "a new birth of freedom" we are making laws for those freedmen, which we compel them to obey, and refuse to tell them our purposes or designs toward them? The Senator says so, and those who support this bill say so by their acts. But while a grand principle of right and a lofty sentiment of humanity prompt the telling of the Filipinos what they may expect and hope of us, there is higher than these a duty we owe to the American people, whose servants we are and whose agents they have constituted us, to tell them—the American people—what we intend to do, in order that they may sanction or condemn.

The policy of the party in power seems to be to conceal rather than proclaim its policy in reference to the Philippines. The Republican platform of 1900, in reference to the Philippines, is vague and inexplicit, while the Democratic platform is clear, pointed, and unmistakable in reference to this subject. Compare them. The Republican platform reads:

In accepting, by the treaty of Paris, the just responsibility of our victories in the Spanish war, the President and the Senate won the undoubted approval of the American people. No other course was possible than to destroy Spain's sovereignty throughout the West Indies and in the Philippine Islands. That course created our responsibility before the world and with the unorganized population whom our intervention had freed from Spain to provide for the maintenance of law and order, and for the establishment of good government, and for the performance of international obligations.

Our authority could not be less than our responsibility, and wherever sovereign rights were extended it became the high duty of the Government to maintain its authority, to put down armed insurrection, and to confer the blessings of liberty and civilization upon all the rescued peoples.

The largest measure of self-government consistent with their welfare and our duties shall be secured to them by law.

This is vague and indefinite, concealing whatever policy was intended under the cover of words, instead of making language the vehicle to convey its meaning to the people.

The Democratic platform on the same subject reads:

We condemn and denounce the Philippine policy of the present Administration. It has involved the Republic in unnecessary war, sacrificed the lives of many of our noblest sons, and placed the United States, previously known and applauded throughout the world as the champion of freedom, in the false and un-American position of crushing with military force the efforts of our former allies to achieve liberty and self-government. The Filipinos can not be citizens without endangering our civilization; they can not be subjects without imperiling our form of government; and as we are not willing to surrender our civilization nor to convert the Republic into an empire, we favor an immediate declaration of the nation's purpose to give the Filipinos, first, a stable form of government; second, independence; and, third, protection from outside interference, such as has been given for nearly a century to the republics of Central and South America.

This is terse, pointed, and easy of comprehension. Yet the Republican campaign was so conducted, regardless of the enunciation of principles and policies in platforms, that the people were induced to infer that it was as much the policy of the Republican party as of the Democratic party to give independence to and be dissevered from the government of the Philippines, and the opportunity to accomplish this was committed to the Republican party in pursuance of its administration during the Spanish war, though Democrats did do some of the fighting in the battles of that war.

The Republican platform evaded the questions of a future Philippine policy in words laudatory of the party's past conduct in the premises. The Republican party now, in this bill and in this debate, refuses to take the American people into its confidence and tell them of its policy. The Democratic platform distinctly stated its policy in language susceptible of but one construction and so fraught with utterance that there was nothing left uncovered. The Democratic party now, in this substitute, follows this platform and reiterates its policy in language that may be understood of all the world.

The Senator in charge of the bill [Mr. LODGE] says, in speaking of the Philippines, that he holds an open mind "as to the relations which we shall maintain with them in the present, in the immediate future, or ultimately." And this after more than three years of American occupancy, and after, according to Republican advice, they have practically all submitted to American jurisdiction; more than three years after "a new birth of freedom" was given to the entire 10,000,000 of people, as asserted by the Republican platform of 1900. If they have been given freedom they, the whole "10,000,000," are free now unless that freedom has been taken from them.

What a strange freedom that does not allow an American in the islands to read the Declaration of Independence on the Fourth of July without subjecting himself to conviction of a felony and to be sent to the penitentiary, as declared by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. Those people who are free, unless that "freedom" to which the Republican party gave "a new birth" has by somebody been taken away from them, dare not, except at the risk of the penitentiary, belong to a society that has for its object the promulgation of any political opinion or policy. Nor are they permitted to advocate in any way the peaceable separation of the islands from the United States.

If a brother says to a brother, or a father says to a son, let us have a talk to the American authorities, and if necessary let us send some one to Washington to petition Congress to let us be a separate people and a separate government, because that is what I think is best for the islands, he is guilty of a crime. And this is the definition of freedom to which the imperialistic policy of the Republican party has brought us. Aye, "a new birth of freedom." No wonder that the Republican party with such a conception of freedom, mad with power given them by the people, should send special representatives to witness the crowning of the great-grand-son of the king who incited and let loose upon our ancestors the merciless savages, sparing neither age nor sex nor condition, because our ancestors desired to be free under the British Crown if possible; and if not possible to be free there, then the liberty of independence.

No wonder that while the representatives sent by the Republican party are kneeling to the coronation of that King the same party is afraid to speak, even in bated breath, a word of recognition, or comfort, or cheer, or of respect to a struggling republic, fighting for its existence against the heartless invasion of the cruel King at whose feet those representatives are kneeling, lest that party should give offense to royalty. It is a heartless invasion and a cruel King that will concentrate women and children and noncombatants under such conditions that more than 25 per cent of them die therefrom in six months.

But Senators ask if the substitute offered by the Democrats on the committee does not propose to keep the objectionable laws in force. I answer, no. No impartial court in Christendom would so construe it. The provision of the substitute is this:

That until the people of the islands shall establish a government, as hereinafter provided, all laws, rules, and regulations now in force for the government of the islands and the raising of revenue therefor shall be in force, except as the same may conflict with this act.

The first paragraph of the substitute is:

That, subject to the provisions hereinafter set forth, the United States of America hereby relinquish all claim of sovereignty over and title to the archipelago known as the Philippine Islands.

The next sentence says:

That from and after the passage of this act said archipelago shall be foreign territory, etc.

As the substitute makes it foreign territory, the law making it a crime to advocate peaceable separation from the United States is in conflict with the substitute, and therefore, by the terms of the substitute, is repealed. So that objectionable law would be repealed by the substitute. I refer to this to show that the taunt of Senators that the substitute proposes to retain all objectionable laws is based upon misconception of the provisions of the substitute. It may be that some objectionable law would be continued, but it would be only for a little while. It would hardly be expected that an act limited by its terms to a very short duration, and necessarily prepared in haste, could be prepared with such care and accuracy that no mistake could appear in it.

Coming to the charge of cruelty in the islands, I am prepared to believe that it has sometimes been exaggerated. But there is one thing that has impressed me about those charges. The Secretary of War has sent to the Senate the report of the investigation of these charges, and it is printed in Senate Document 205. The charges, generally, were not written for publication. They were written by privates or noncommissioned officers—in one instance "a colored man"—to relatives at home, sometimes to a mother, and not intended or expected to be read by any other than the family. They were not written for political effect.

In every instance, if I am not mistaken, where the soldier was still in the service the officers produced a quasi retraxit, or explanation, or modification from him. But the "colored man" was no longer in the service, and they produced no retraxit, or explanation, or modification from him. The colonel of the regiment, George S. Anderson, of New Jersey, says there were but four "colored men" ever with the regiment. He says one turned out to be a robber and assailant of a native woman, another a robber, and one "a crazy exhorter." The other he only accounts for by saying that he believes he returned with the regiment to the United States.

I do not charge any officer with obtaining those modifications and explanations by duress, but the practical unanimity with which they come from soldiers still in the service and with which they do not come from any out of the service is calculated to create a suspicion that the soldier did not feel as free to act when he was writing the quasi retraxit as he did when he was writing to his mother. I will say, however, that if any officer did use his rank to extort from a soldier such an explanation or modification, he was guilty of infamous conduct. I go further; I recognize that in order to have an army every soldier or officer must yield implicit obedience to every lawful order of his superior officer, but the officer, I do not care what his rank, who uses the opportunities afforded by his position to compel a private soldier to do menial service or to obey any order not necessary to proper discipline is a living, animate mass of infamy. The soldier who endures all the hardships of camp life and the dangers of the field in the service of his country is entitled to the respect due to a gentleman as long as he conducts himself as a gentleman.

I can not let one expression of General Otis, and virtually indorsed by the Secretary of War because he sends it here as a part of his case, pass unnoticed. He says:

While there is little truth in letters written by soldiers to their homes, etc.

That is a slander as foul as the hand that wrote or the heart that conceived it. No denunciation is too severe for the man who will use such indiscriminate language of those through whose fidelity, courage, and endurance he wears his epaulettes. What will the Union soldiers who served between 1861 and 1865 say of this language, and of the Secretary of War who indorsed it by sending it here as a part of his case? If they are the men I think they are, they will resent it. What will the Confederate soldiers who fought as their comrades fell around them when they were as 1 to 10 against their antagonists say of this? I know they will condemn it.

Does anyone answer that the morale of the Army has deteriorated? If so, I ask is it due to the imperialistic policy of the Republican party? That there are soldiers who are untruthful, as there are others untruthful, no man will deny; but to use such language indiscriminately, taking in all soldiers whose love of home prompts them to write to kindred and friends, is intolerable. The private soldier does the drudgery of the camp and is exposed to the direct danger of the battlefield, and receives an insignificant salary as compared with the officers. Grant, for the argument's sake, that this is proper. But when the war is over and they all return to private life, where they ought to be relegated to terms of equality—in the granting of pensions the inequality is reestablished, the ex-officers being given larger pensions than the ex-privates, and for this I have never heard a satisfactory excuse—judged by our American standard of equality of all men before the law.

In conclusion, however much I desire that our Government and country shall deal honorably and justly with the Filipinos, I am more interested for our own country and our own people than I am about the welfare of the Filipinos. Governor Taft is reported as saying that he is undecided as to whether we should give the Philippines independence, quasi independence, or statehood.

It is against the theory of our Government to hold subject colonies or to hold subjects of any kind—waiving the question of power under the Constitution. Where and how would the United States be benefited by admitting the Filipinos as a State? The Secretary of War says, in effect, that they are barbarous and uncivilized. He says:

> The war on the part of the Filipinos has been conducted with the barbarous cruelty common among uncivilized races, and with general disregard of the rules of civilized warfare.

I could quote much more from Republican evidence to the same effect. Do we want to make a State in our Union of such a people?

I believe that there are about a million and a half Chinese in the Philippines. S. W. Groesbeck, judge-advocate of the Army, says:

> Chinamen are persistent and industrious in looting property from abandoned houses, and the men knew that to leave anything that they could apply to their own comfort was to let the Chinamen carry it off.

Add the "barbarous and uncivilized Filipinos" to the "looting Chinamen" and what kind of an equal State in this Union would the mixture make? What kind of United States Senators and Representatives in Congress would they send to participate in the making of laws to tax and govern the American people?

As an investment we have spent hundreds of millions of dollars and sacrificed tens of thousands of lives in the Philippines, and our trade with them is less than five millions annually. Over half of our exports to Manila are wine and beer and whisky. What a return for the millions of dollars expended and tens of thousands of lives sacrificed! What a commentary on the acquisition as an investment! The money expended by the United States in the purchase and subjection of the Philippines would have cut the Nicaraguan Canal and a canal across Florida, and in addition would have put our Navy upon a footing that would have challenged Great Britain's supremacy upon the seas. And these expenditures by the United States on the Philippines have not yet ceased.

In addition to the costs of the Army and Navy there, this bill proposes to give to the Philippines the customs taxes collected in this country on imports from the Philippines, estimated by the Senator from Massachusetts at $400,000 per annum. Four hundred thousand dollars a year taken from the people of the United States to assist in defraying the expenses of the civil government of the Philippines, in addition to the cost of the military and naval establishments necessary to be kept in the islands to sustain the civil government and suppress insurrectionary disturbances. Would it not be better to apply this money to the improvement of some harbor or harbors on our own shores, giving employment to laborers at home and at the same time advancing our commerce?

When you send $400,000 taxes from the American people to defray the expenses of the civil government of the Philippines you must replace it by other taxes—in other form, perhaps—upon the people of the United States. The money does not drop from the skies into the Treasury. Last fiscal year $62,481,907.13 was collected in taxes from the consumers of tobacco. Every time a man used a pound of tobacco he paid 12 cents of this tax; and when he had used a hundred pounds he had paid $12 of these taxes. On fermented liquors, such as ale, beer, lager beer, etc., $75,669,907.65 was collected in taxes. Every time a man took a drink of any of these fermented liquors he paid a part of this sum of taxes. It was added to the price of his drink and in many instances he did not know that he was paying a tax. I only instance these two articles of taxation out of hundreds of other articles taxed in like manner as an illustration of how the money gets into the Treasury.

Suppose a direct tax were imposed upon these people and they were told when the tax collector came for it that it was for the support of the government of the Filipinos. They would answer, let the Filipinos support their own government. Suppose one State were required to pay the taxes to support the government of another State or Territory. The time will come when the taxpayers will consider. They will know that the enormous sums of money that are appropriated from the Treasury are collected from them—indirectly, but as burdensome as if done directly. They will know that they are paying taxes to support the government of the Filipinos, a government from which they derive no benefit. Then they will revolt and the deluge will come.

If pride, to show that we are able to whip the barbarous, uncivilized people, is keeping us there, let us come away, for the Administration party tells us that they are practically subdued. If we hold the islands to give offices to satraps or to allow an oligarchy to exploit the islands, let us return with shame. As long as there is a fight between the United States and the Filipinos my loyalty is to the United States and my sympathies are with the Americans, regardless of causes that produced the strife. But this does not prevent my desire to get out of the strife without inflicting wrong upon friend or foe.

The power supreme has been with the United States in all their wars. When in infancy the Union was formed upon the principles of liberty, and attending to its own business and letting alone the affairs of other people, He sheltered it with His hand. Whatever the abstract power to do so, by the spirit of that union, blessed of Heaven, we can not with impunity mingle with the Filipinos in any way. They are of no account to us, and they do not want our interference. It is a good place to part from them. Let us not tempt the Power who has attended this Government all the way, lest we should dig a cavern into which we may drop out of the hand of Providence.

HOUR OF MEETING ON MONDAY.

Mr. LODGE. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock on Monday.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I now move, in accordance with the understanding, that the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock for debate this evening upon the Philippine tariff bill, and for no other business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening for debate upon the pending bill, no other business to be transacted.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 13 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m.

PHILIPPINE TARIFF BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NELSON in the chair). The Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5833) temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President, I desire to discuss briefly some of the questions which have been referred to in the discussion which has been conducted in this Chamber during the past few weeks with respect to the Philippine tariff bill. We hear a good deal of late about the outrages which the opposition say are being committed by the American troops in the Philippine Islands, but strange to say, those who undertake to give us information as to the conduct of our soldiers are silent as to many outrages that are being committed by those who claim to be insurgents, and who are in opposition to the authority of the United States in the territory in question. Not a word of sympathy or encouragement for the boys in blue who are risking their lives in order to maintain the integrity and honor of this Government in the Philippine Islands has been uttered by our Democratic friends, but, on the other hand, much has been said and done by the leaders of that party which has been calculated to discourage and dishearten the American soldiers and to encourage those who have been engaged in a guerrilla warfare against the authority of the Government of the United States. The people at the last election condemned the course pursued by the Democratic party with respect to expansion, and rendered a verdict which sustains those who are now endeavoring to deal in an intelligent and patriotic manner with the results that have necessarily followed in consequence of the war with Spain. We are informed by distinguished Senators on the Democratic side of the Chamber that the American soldiers are engaged in "dirty work" in the Philippine Islands. The army in the Philippine Islands is endeavoring to assert the supremacy of the United States over a territory the title to which was obtained in a peaceable and orderly manner, and any party that aids, abets, or encourages those who are engaged in resisting the authority of the United States places itself in direct opposition to the authority of the Government under which we live.

It is contended by the opposition that those who are engaged in resisting the authority of the United States in the Philippine Islands occupy the same position as those who were engaged in resisting the oppression of the British Government during the war of the Revolution. There is nothing in connection with the Philippine question to warrant such a contention. The American people rebelled against the Government of England upon the ground that they were taxed without representation; they rebelled because a foreign government sought to control their action by requiring them to pay tribute without giving them any voice in the control of their own affairs. They were of the Anglo-Saxon race. The majority of them were the peers of any people upon the face of the earth, and no one ever suggested that they were not capable of properly administering the governmental affairs of the territory of which they had so recently taken possession.

From an intellectual standpoint they were the equals and in many instances the superiors of those who sought to oppress them, and it was but natural that they should have rebelled against the authority of the Government which sought to reduce them to a condition that was more intolerable than that of the slave. It is different with the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands. As a race of people they are not prepared to assume control of their affairs under a republican form of government; and until we have fully restored law and order within those islands it is perfectly absurd to talk about placing the reins of government in the hands of those people. As a result of the war with Spain the United States by treaty acquired title to the Philippine Islands by paying therefor the sum of $20,000,000; but before we succeeded in securing the ratification of the treaty months were wasted in a debate in this Chamber which was precipitated by the Democratic leaders and which, in my opinion, ultimately resulted in bringing about a revolt on the part of the Filipinos against the authority of the United States.

During the war of the Revolution the British Government sought to subjugate the American forces for the purpose of continuing in force the oppressive form of government under which our illustrious ancestors had been compelled to live prior to that time. The purpose of the American Government in prosecuting the war in the Philippines is not to subjugate the people of that island, but it is to compel them to respect and obey the authority of the Government of the United States in order that the policy of this country with respect to the inhabitants of those islands may be made effective. What has been that policy in the past? On the 8th of January, 1899, the late President McKinley, in a message to Admiral Dewey and General Otis, with respect to the treatment of the Filipinos, among other things, said:

> Time given insurgents can not hurt us and must weaken and discourage them. They will come to see our benevolent purpose and recognize that before we can give their people good government our sovereignty must be complete and unquestioned.
> Tact and kindness most essential now. Am sure you both, having full knowledge of situation, can be trusted to accomplish purposes of this Government with least discord and friction. We accepted the Philippines from high duty in the interest of their inhabitants and for humanity and civilization. Our sacrifices were with high motives. We want to improve the condition of the inhabitants, securing them peace, liberty, and pursuit of their highest good.

Here we have the policy of the United States in a nutshell. It is not our purpose to enter the home of the Filipino for the purpose of denying him the blessings which he now enjoys, but we meet him as a neighbor and a friend, with the assurance that although we own the islands, at the same time we want him to remain, and instead of doing that which will be an injury to him it is our purpose to build schoolhouses and erect churches, and thereby furnish the means of educating his people.

In other words, the war against Spain was one for humanity's sake, and we are endeavoring to restore law and order in the Philippine Islands with a view of giving to the inhabitants thereof the very best form of government which can be successfully administered under existing conditions. That a majority of the Filipinos are incapable of participating in the administration of a republican form of government no one will deny. Those who oppose the present policy of the United States with respect to the Philippine Islands are doing more to postpone the establishment of a government for the Filipinos than all other agencies combined.

On the 15th of this month, among other things, Governor Taft made the following statement before the Committee on the Philippines:

> The condition of the people of the Philippine Islands to-day is such that the extension of constitutional rights now would interfere very much with the question of establishing a stable and successful government. A government ought to be established under American guidance, under which the Filipinos would gradually improve their knowledge of what individual liberty is and what constitutional government is, and subsequently the time will come when the United States and the Filipino people can agree on what their relationship shall be. Whether it shall be a quasi independent colony, as Australia and Canada are to England, or as a State in the Union, is a question so far in the future and so dependent on the success of the operation of a stable government now that I have not myself reached any conclusion on the subject.

Senator CARMACK asked Governor Taft the following question:

> You think, then, that it is an open question whether the Philippine Islands should be admitted to the full rights of American citizenship?
> Governor TAFT. That is a question which I would not answer two or three generations before it arises. I think that the great evil to-day is the discussion of something utterly impossible of settlement to-day. What the Filipino people need to-day is a stable government under American control, teaching them what individual liberty is and training them up to a knowledge of self-government, and when they have that the question of the relationship between them and the United States may be decided. But the attempt to decide the question in advance seems to me very unreasonable.

Governor Taft gives us a clear and concise statement as to the relations which we sustain to the Philippine Islands, and no amount of sophistry can becloud the situation so as to prevent the American people from appreciating the great responsibility which rests upon us as a nation with respect to our conduct toward those islands in the future.

That the doctrines of civilization and Christianity must be carried to the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands by some one can not be questioned; and such being the case, the question naturally arises which nation is best calculated to perform such a mission. Are Senators willing to admit that there is a government on the face of the earth better prepared to undertake the performance of this task than the Government of the United States?

The character of the statements made by Democratic Senators would lead one not acquainted with the facts to believe that the question as to whether or not we are to assume control of the Philippine Islands has not yet been settled. The ratification of the treaty of Paris forever settled that question, and no one except those who seek to raise a false political issue will undertake to say that the question is now before us for consideration.

The following from the Vicksburg Herald is, in my opinion, a correct statement as to the situation:

> The Philippine question has resolved itself into terms that need not be misunderstood and can not be avoided. It is no longer a question of possession and retention, but merely a question of administration.

The Herald is a Democratic newspaper, which, to say the least of it, renders any statement it may make with respect to this question entitled to be considered as emanating from a nonpartisan standpoint. The position of the Democratic party in regard to this question is an inconsistent one in every respect. For months before we declared war against Spain our Democratic friends in both branches of Congress labored in season and out of season to secure an interference on our part with the action of the Spanish Government in Cuba.

Members of this body devoted the most of their time to the discussion of resolutions having for their object the independence of the Cuban government. The President of the United States was denounced as a coward and as being under the control of Wall Street and the corporations of the country. It was intimated that the Republican party's refusal to interfere on behalf of the Cubans was the result of corporate influence and a desire to not disturb the business interests of the country. Amidst all the vituperation and abuse that was hurled at the Chief Executive of this nation, that distinguished statesman remained calm and undisturbed, and had it not been for the destruction of the Maine I am inclined to the opinion that the late President would have reached a satisfactory settlement of the question by diplomacy, and thereby have prevented the loss of many lives and the consequent evils attendant upon a declaration of war against Spain. But when it was known that the Maine had been destroyed, the indignation of the American people knew no bounds, and the Chief Executive of the nation at once inaugurated that which proved to be the most successful war in modern times, which, among other things, resulted in the freedom of the Cubans and the acquisition of the Philippine Islands.

The Democratic party, under the leadership of Mr. Bryan, seeks to make an issue with the Republican party in regard to our policy with respect to the Philippine Islands. Mr. Bryan's attempt to keep alive the issue of imperialism is an effort to infuse life into a carcass that has been dead and buried since the day that the treaty of peace between Spain and the United States was ratified. The Southern people can not afford to give their support, under any circumstances, to any party that opposes industrial expansion. The acquisition of the Philippine Islands by our Government will in the end result in more substantial benefit to the South than all other sections of the country combined. The thing which the Southern people need above all others is a market for their surplus cotton and cotton fabrics, and the Orient is the principal section whose people are by climate and habits the natural customers of the cotton planters of the South. In the Orient we can find a ready market for our surplus raw cotton, as well as our cotton fabrics, and the Southern man who stands in the way of extension of our trade in that direction is either short-sighted or willing to sacrifice the best interests of his section in order to be able to have a false political issue on which to ride into power.

The Southern people are especially interested in the policy which is being pursued by our Government with respect to our trade in the Orient. They have suffered much in the past on account of not being able to secure a sufficient market for their cotton and cotton fabrics. The extension of our trade in the direction of the Orient is the solution of the problem with which we have been contending for a quarter of a century. The future prosperity of the South depends in a great measure upon our ability to secure a market for the staple to which I have referred. Until the recent disturbances in China the South was making rapid strikes in establishing a trade in the Orient. The acquisition and retention of the Philippine Islands is hailed with delight by that class of people who are doing so much to give the South the position which she is so justly entitled to occupy among the commercial nations of the world.

In discussing industrial expansion, in a speech delivered in the city of Greenville, S. C., on the 22d day of last May, Senator MCLAURIN, among other things, said:

I will not undertake to demonstrate the wisdom of expansion, but will content myself by saying we are a nation of expansionists. We have extended during the last one hundred years on this continent from 800,000 to 4,000,000 square miles. Expansion is the bed rock of Democracy. Thomas Jefferson, the first expansion President, added 1,222,000 square miles to our area.

The annexation of Texas, California, Arizona, New Mexico, and Nevada were by Democratic Administrations. Andrew Jackson would to-day be denounced as an imperialist by the very same people who eat "Jackson-Day dinners" and worship at his shrine. "Old Hickory" said on this subject: "I have thought with the ancient Roman that it is right never to cede any territory within the boundary of the Republic, but always add to it by honorable treaty, thus extending the area of freedom." All this talk about imperialism is bosh. The people understand it as the cry of "wolf" when there is no wolf. When Mr. Bryan abandoned the money question and attempted to substitute imperialism, he stood about as much chance of being elected as a split-foot bullfrog did of kicking all the water out of Lake Michigan. At least that is the opinion of a friend of mine.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Will the Senator give the name of his informant?

Mr. PRITCHARD. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MCLAURIN] is present and can speak for himself. He was a gentleman of good judgment, I presume.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MCLAURIN], in the speech from which I have been reading, delivered at Greenville, S. C., proceeded as follows:

The price given for these islands has been given as an objection. This is absurd. England, France, Germany, Russia, or Japan would pay ten times as much to occupy our position in the Philippine Islands. Lying as they do, along the Asiatic coast, they are the gateway to the Orient. The people of the South are vitally interested in the trade of China. So far we have touched one of the provinces. Minister Wu the other night in Charlotte told of the teeming millions in South China, and said the great problem was to clothe the people. They are forced to use silk to make their clothes, but this was expensive and almost an impossibility.

If any argument was needed to show the importance of these markets, the effect of recent troubles in China is sufficient. Cotton goods are stacked up in the warehouses unsaleable, and when the best judges thought last fall that cotton would be 12½ to 15 cents per pound it has declined more than 3 cents. I am an expansionist. I favor the political, commercial, and religious expansion of our country. This is along the line of progress. We can not attain a certain growth and then stand still. As in the individual, so in the nation. We either move forward toward perfection or backward toward decay. There are certain crises in the life of every man, which, seized, lead to success. Let them pass, and the chance is lost forever.

The capacity to take advantage of opportunity constitutes the difference between the man who succeeds and the man who fails, and so it is with nations. We have grandly seized our opportunities, and I for one am in favor of pushing it to the limit. During the past century we have been absorbed in testing great questions of constitutional representative government, and the development of America. The time has now come when we must have foreign trade, and not merely subsidiary to our industrial development at home, but as necessary to our continued prosperity. Our resources and population demand world-wide avenues of trade, and we can not separate the commercial and political elements involved. What are we to do with our surplus products? This is the question engaging the attention of all the civilized nations of the earth. The only field unoccupied is the Orient. I believe that the time is near at hand when the cotton trade of the South will be with the Orient.

We have become a Pacific power, with 5,000 miles of coast on that ocean. With the Hawaiian Islands and the Aleutian Islands as resting places and the Philippines as a key to the "open door," we are the only nation strong enough to compel Russia, with her trans-Siberian railroad, to respect the integrity of the Chinese Empire. As long as the United States and Japan say "No," the Chinese Empire must remain intact and the door be left open to our products.

These are the sentiments of one of the leading Democrats of the South, a man who has studied the question from an industrial standpoint and who has the courage of his convictions and is willing to give the facts to the country, regardless of what effect his action may have upon his own political fortunes in the future.

The late President, whose death the whole world mourns, used his best efforts in the field of diplomacy in order to secure an increased demand for the principal product which is grown south of Mason and Dixon's line.

The Republican party of the nation stands back of President Roosevelt in his efforts to carry out the policies inaugurated by President McKinley—policies which mean everything to the Southern cotton planter—and it remains to be seen whether the Southern business men will in the future be influenced by the false teachings of those who have done the South so much injury in the past. We have frittered our time away on trifles, and have lost the substance in our efforts to catch the shadow. When we consider the enormous undeveloped wealth of the South, it is a question of great importance as to whether or not the blight of Bryanism is to be permitted to arrest Southern progress.

The South has more natural advantages than any other section of the country. West Virginia has 16,000 square miles of coal, as compared with Great Britain's 12,000. The South has nearly one-half of the standing timber of the United States. It furnishes three-fourths of the cotton required by the 100,000,000 spindles in the world. It has a monopoly of the phosphate rock, which is the basis of the fertilizer business, both in this country and Europe, to say nothing about the many other advantages that are to be found in abundance throughout this section.

In spite of the efforts of Southern Democratic Representatives to discourage the investment of capital in the South, its cotton mills represented, in 1900, a money value of $150,000,000, against $61,000,000 ten years earlier. The amount of cotton consumed in these mills was 1,597,112 bales, against 546,898 bales in 1890. The railroad mileage in the South has increased in these same ten years from 42,825 to 53,000 miles. The amount of coal mined has increased from 21,500,000 to 48,192,053, and the amount of pig iron produced from 1,953,459 to 2,604,671 tons. The same ten years saw an increase in the value of agricultural products in the South from $60,000,000 to $1,200,000,000, and in the value of exports from $315,021,008 to $530,317,545.

For the first time since the American occupation of the Philippines the United States in the month of May last headed the list of nations sending merchandise to the Philippines. The imports into Manila from the United States during the month of May were valued at $2,460,431. While I have not had an opportunity to examine the report with the view of ascertaining the character of exports which we sent to that country, I am satisfied that the majority of the items represent Southern products. In this connection I call attention to the fact that the total exports from Wilmington to foreign countries in 1900 were $10,975,511. In 1901 they were $12,013,659, an increase of $1,038,148. This is most encouraging for our chief seaport.

From the ports of Norfolk and Portsmouth, Va., the exports from the United States to the Philippines in 1899 amounted to $70,336, and in 1900 the exports amounted to $118,173, showing an increase of $47,837 within a period of one year from this South Atlantic port.

In 1899 the total amount of the exports from the United States to the Philippine Islands amounted to only the sum of $404,193, whereas in 1900 it amounted to $2,640,449, showing a net increase of $2,236,256 in one year.

Let us see from what source the Philippine Islands obtained their cotton goods. I have examined with great care the importation of cotton and cotton goods to the Philippine Islands from all countries, both manufactured and unmanufactured cotton, for the twelve months ending June, 1901. I find that the total importation of cotton and cotton goods to those islands for the period named amounted to $9,510,307. Of this total the United States furnished the small amount of $127,325. These figures are surprising but true. Those islands imported $9,382,982 worth of cotton and cotton goods from countries other than the United States in 1901. Is it not reasonable to suppose that when our commerce with those islands is firmly established, as it will surely be at an early day, that the South will furnish the greater part of this $9,382,982 worth of cotton and cotton goods that has heretofore been furnished by other countries?

These statements within themselves are sufficient to warrant me in the assertion that those of us who live in the South can not afford under any circumstances to give our sanction to any policy which undertakes to permit these islands to pass from under our control as a nation. Being in the gateway to the Orient is not the only feature which renders them desirable, but when we come to consider the possibilities of our future trade with the people of those islands, there is every reason why we should give our hearty support to the policy advocated by the Republican party with respect to them.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, it is with some reluctance that I enter the cyclonic atmosphere of the Philippine debate. A sense of duty alone impels me to venture some observations upon the questions which have been discussed upon the pending bill.

The discussion has taken wide range, covering many subjects not germane to the measure before us, and we have been long familiar with many of the arguments made. In fact, we have heard most of them at frequent intervals since the treaty of Paris was laid before the Senate for its ratification.

One question, however, which was argued at length, and with ability and vigor, has not been conspicuous thus far in the present discussion; that is the question of our constitutional power to acquire and hold the Philippines. Those who detained the Senate by profound and learned observations upon our want of constitutional capacity to hold the fruit of our arms and our diplomacy are confronted by the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States in the insular cases, in which our power to hold and govern is authoritatively established.

Sir, the great questions before us should be considered without passion and without prejudice; they should appeal alone to our higher and better judgment. The way to their solution is not always plain, for we are walking in unfamiliar and untried paths. We are remote from the theater of action, and must in the very nature of the case see conditions through other eyes.

We will be confronted and no doubt often confused by conflicting and contradictory opinions and testimony as to what has transpired and as to what is transpiring. There will be sharp and opposing opinions from those who visit the scenes of our activity, growing out of personal bias, selfish interest, and honest difference of judgment.

The task which rests upon us of separating truth from error and of doing the proper and best thing is a difficult one, but we can reach better conclusions by exercising a catholicity of spirit and yielding to each other honesty of purpose and uprightness of motive. Here is not the place nor is the present the time for mere dogmatic opinion.

The greatest danger we have to fear in dealing with the Philippines is not insurrection in the islands, but political exigencies in the United States. The danger is that parties may seek to make issues of conditions in the islands, and that our course there will be determined too often by supposed party necessities here. In fact, the danger is that our domestic policies at home may be shaped with reference to our course in the Philippines. We observed in the last national campaign a strenuous effort to subordinate our domestic policies and to hinge them upon our attitude with respect to the islands.

The debate upon the pending bill, which has been earnest and very able, has not changed a vote in the Senate. Nor is there anyone who believes, no matter how long the discussion may continue, that a solitary vote remains to be changed. The roll call might have been ordered when the bill was reported by the committee and the result would have been precisely the same as it will be when it is finally taken. Party lines are drawn, and, with an exception or so, we are arraigned upon one side or the other of the question according to our party affiliations.

With respect to some very material aspects of the question we are in entire accord. Speaking largely, the matter of difference between us is as to the wisdom of an immediate declaration of our future permanent policy in the Philippines.

The opposition demands that we should now declare our ultimate purpose to retire from the Philippine Islands when stable government is established, retaining only such military, naval, and coaling stations as may be designated by the United States.

It seemed to me from the beginning that our chief danger in dealing with the new problems before us was inconsiderate haste, immature conclusions. We are dealing with new questions; we are unable to turn to our past national experience for precedent to aid us in their solution.

I have felt that we would do well if we should thoroughly investigate the facts and familiarize ourselves to the utmost with the conditions with which we must deal, and act as an enlightened, patriotic judgment should dictate. I have felt that we should at all times keep our minds open and free, so that we might deal with the problems which may arise from time to time, and not feel as though we were hampered or bound by any hastily preconceived opinions.

The profoundest and wisest among us can see but a little way into the future. The Almighty in His beneficent providence has endowed no one with that clear vision which enables him to see our way far into the future of the Philippines. We are in a manner groping our way, guided by a clear and lofty conception of those fundamental principles of personal rights and individual liberty which have been our guide in dealing with territory and with people who have come to us since the Louisiana purchase, in 1803. Our course has never been harsh and tyrannical or in disregard of the principles of human liberty upon which our institutions are predicated.

Both sides of the Chamber are agreed as to the commanding necessity of remaining in the Philippines and of establishing peace and orderly government there. It is a gratifying fact that all parties recognize this supreme duty, this sacred obligation.

Our arms overthrew Spanish power, the one power which maintained peace and order in the great city of Manila and in other portions of the islands. It is true that this authority was challenged, but it was not successfully challenged, unless, perhaps, in a very small portion of the islands. After our Army and Navy overthrew the Spanish power, it became incumbent upon the United States to hold disorder and anarchy in check, compel obedience to the authority of the United States wherever it was resisted, and to give the people orderly and stable government modeled, so far as practicable, after our republican institutions.

We are dealing with people who have not been educated in the principles of self-government, and who have for centuries known nothing but Spanish rule; a poor education, indeed, for the duties and responsibilities of republican government.

How long we shall be engaged in the work of erecting such a government in the Philippines as is contemplated by both sides of this Chamber no mortal man can tell. But the better judgment seems to be that many years will be required. It is a work which can not be done in a day, for it must be done well.

The opposition contend that the manner in which we are going about the task of pacification and the establishing of government is subversive of the principles of human freedom, for which our patriotic and illustrious forefathers contended and made war.

It is said that we are ruling in contravention of the rights of the governed. This charge raises essentially a question of fact. I have examined with some care the reports of our authorities, and the conclusion at which I have arrived is that only a minority of the Filipinos have ever disputed our sovereignty, and that only a very small minority to-day object to our presence in the islands. In other words, a vast majority of the inhabitants, either affirmatively or passively, accept and acknowledge the sovereignty of the United States.

It is true that a minority took up arms against the Government, and that there are bands to-day engaged in a guerrilla-like warfare and who oppose our sovereignty.

When we acquired the Philippines in an entirely lawful and constitutional way, under the distinct and positive terms of the treaty of Paris, it became the duty of our Government to establish its authority, and those who opposed it did so wrongfully. If, in fact, a majority of the Filipinos accept our sovereignty and a minority only challenge it, can it rightfully be said that we are ruling against the consent of the governed, and that we are violating the great doctrines for which our immortal forefathers pledged their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor?

We are advised by our Commission—that a great majority of the people long for peace and are entirely willing to accept the establishment of a government under the supremacy of the United States.

We are informed by Dr. Schurman that—out of a total population of 8,000,000 Filipinos, Christian and non-Christian, about 5,000,000 have already received civil government and are now subject to American inspection and control, themselves administering the affairs of their own towns and provinces. They are, however, restrained by fear from taking any action to assist the suppression of the insurrection which has for its indispensable support a conspiracy of murder. Without this, armed resistance to the United States authority would have long ago ceased.

We have the assurance from a large number of the provincial governors, many of whom are natives, that peaceful and prosperous conditions exist in their provinces, and that the people are devoted to American sovereignty.

Outside of five provinces, according to the second report of the Taft Commission—there is peace in the remainder of the archipelago. This remainder includes 30 organized provinces and all the districts of Mindanao, the Jolo Archipelago, Paragua, Lepanto, Bontoc, and Nueva Vizcaya, Principe, and Infanta. Most of the insurgents have surrendered and in most of the provinces, except among the Lake Moros, it is entirely safe during the day for travelers unattended to go from one town to another.

In other provinces recent war conditions and suffering and hardships from cattle pest and locusts have developed ladronism. The people are friendly to the civil government and manifest no desire whatever for a continuance of the war, but only a desire for peace and protection.

Our military strength has been materially reduced. There are now but 43,000 officers and enlisted men where we had 74,000, and further reductions are soon to be made, leaving the force for the time being at 32,000. There are some 2,000 Filipino troops organized by the authority of the Congress. These, I believe, are in addition to the above.

This is significant proof of increasing tranquillity, and would seem to forcibly negative the assertion that we are making comparatively no headway in the establishment of good order.

I am not disposed, Mr. President, to challenge the accuracy of the information which is submitted to us through our chosen representatives, men of good ability and high character. By every just consideration we must accept their statement of actual conditions as founded in fact. And if their statements be true, we are not ruling in contravention of the will of the governed. The minority are those who are engaged in guerrilla warfare, and who are bent upon pillage and murder. Is it at their behest and their dictation that we should proclaim our purpose now or hereafter to withdraw from the Philippines?

It is one of the cardinal doctrines of republican government that the majority shall rule. This doctrine prevails in national, State, and municipal governments with rare exceptions throughout the entire United States, and until the opposition can show by a fair preponderance of evidence that a majority of the inhabitants of the Philippines are hostile to American rule there can be no predicate for the charge that we are ruling without the consent of the governed. Sir, has it come to this, that we shall respect only the will of the minority? Minority rule is utterly repugnant to our conception of republican government in the United States, and it is equally at war with our conception of the principles of government which should maintain in the Philippines.

If the annexation of the Philippines to the United States were to be determined by referendum, and it were to appear that a vast majority assented and the minority dissented, could it be said that the annexation was violative of the rights ot the governed? Could it be said that the minority should defeat the will of the majority, and that they might rightfully rebel? Such, I conceive it, is in essence the case here.

But three years have passed since the ratification of the treaty of Paris. It is, indeed, a brief period in the life of a nation, but much has been accomplished.

The course of the Administration has been from the beginning characterized by a thoughtful regard for the welfare of the Filipinos, and a pacific policy has been desired and pursued. We have sent no army of avengers and no military or civic officers who have not been instructed by the Chief Executive to avoid undue severity and deal with those who oppose us in the most pacific and liberal manner possible. Endeavor has been made from the beginning to win the allegiance of the Filipinos by an appeal to their sense of justice rather than by the sword.

President McKinley, desirous of establishing peace and prosperity in the islands, promptly sent a Commission of able and experienced men to supplement the war power, and to report such measures as should be requisite "for the maintenance of order, peace, and public welfare."

The Commissioners were authorized to recommend the loyal inhabitants of the islands for appointment to their own civil offices, and they were enjoined particularly that in their intercourse with the inhabitants they should "exercise due respect for all ideas, customs, and institutions of the tribes which compose the population, and also to emphasize the just and beneficent intentions of the Government of the United States." The commissioners were to be "the bearers of the good will, protection, and the richest blessings of a liberating rather than a conquering nation."

This was indeed the dominant note of the national purpose. It was so then, it is so now.

I do not believe that any other Administration, no matter what its political complexion, will proclaim a less exalted standard.

The national intention so felicitously expressed by President McKinley is one that can give little encouragement, little support, to those who seem to see lurking in our national attitude some imperialistic purpose.

The first Commission discharged in an effective manner its delicate functions. It made proclamation of its pacific purpose and assured the people that American supremacy must be acknowledged and that the utmost liberty of self-government would be granted to the Philippine people consistent with a wise and economic administration of public affairs and consistent with the sovereignty and the obligations of the United States. It gave assurances of the desire of the United States for the welfare and advancement of the Philippine people, and that neither they nor the islands were to be an object or means of exploitation. The people were further assured of provision for the establishment of schools and the education of their people, and that they should be accustomed "to free self-government in an ever-increasing measure."

The Commission, though confronted with great difficulties, rendered invaluable service in gathering information and cooperating with the military and naval authorities in the establishment of our sovereignty in the islands, and in making recommendations with respect to the organization of a civil administration of government.

The first or Schurman Commission was followed by a second or the Taft Commission composed of equally eminent, patriotic, and just men, charged with the important function of promoting peace and erecting civil government in the islands. Most commendable progress has been made in the accomplishment of their purpose. It is, indeed, surprising that, beset with so many difficulties and embarrassments, our authorities have accomplished so much in so brief a time. It is, indeed, a happy augury for the future.

The venality and corruption of the Spanish courts in the islands were flagrant and a scandal. The courts are the very foundation of a stable and well-ordered community. Courts where justice is honestly administered, and where it is not a commodity to be bought, are the safeguard of the rights and liberties of the people. In recognition of this fact, our Government has established in the islands the judicial system upon a higher plane than ever before, and the courts are administering justice without the taint of fraud or bribery and are an assurance of security to life and property.

> provision has been made for the administration of justice by civil tribunals in which Filipinos are well represented. There is a justice's court in each of the 765 municipalities, and all of these justices of the peace are Filipinos. There is a court of first instance in each of the 14 judicial districts into which the archipelago has been divided, with 1 judge to each district, besides 2 from the court of first instance in Manila; and of these 16 judges at least 6 are Filipinos. And there is a supreme court, consisting of a chief justice and 6 associate justices, sitting in Manila, Iloilo, and Cebu, of whom 4 are Americans and 3 Filipinos—one of them, the wise, high-minded, and capable Florentino Torres, and another, the chief justice, that model Filipino and man of spotless integrity, Cayetano S. Arellano, a lawyer of great eminence and renown, and a gentleman of learning, culture, and most charming refinement of life and manners.

There has been considerable debate as to whether the Constitution follows the flag. No matter how diverse and conflicting our opinions may be upon this subject, there is one opinion which we all entertain, and that is that the American schoolhouse follows the flag. The transports which carried our soldiers into the Philippines also carried our school-teachers, until to-day there are some 835 American teachers distributed through 550 towns in the Philippines, and nearly "four thousand Filipinos are employed as elementary teachers."

Governor Taft says that the normal school at Manila was attended by 750 Filipino teachers and that—> there is great interest and great enthusiasm on the part of the teachers in studying English and in preparing themselves.

The people of the Philippines are generally uneducated. Perhaps less than eight per cent can read and write in any language. Fortunately, they evince a commendable desire for an education, and, I believe, we shall find in the magic of the schoolroom a potential influence working for the advancement of civilization, good order, and civil government in the Philippines. We do not find here any evidence of that imperialistic purpose which seems to disturb the imagination of our patriotic friends in opposition.

When we came into possession of the islands we found much need for the improvement of harbors, the construction of roads, the improvement of municipalities, for Spain, during her centuries of control, had done little toward the betterment of the conditions in the islands. We have been carrying forward the work in an American way so as to promote the health, the commerce, and the prosperity of the people.

While Spain, in 1896, appropriated nothing for public improvements, our Commission has already appropriated $1,000,000 for the improvement of public roads, and a like amount for the improvement of Manila Harbor. The public revenues have been faithfully collected and intelligently and conservatively administered, so that there is to-day in the insular treasury a surplus of about $5,000,000.

During the fiscal year 1901 the revenues of the islands amounted to $10,817,662.31, and the expenditures were $6,763,821.68, leaving a surplus for the year of $4,053,840.63. This is certainly a most creditable exhibit. The surplus does not go into our treasury, but is to be devoted to making improvements in the islands—to the construction of much-needed works, long neglected by Spain.

We invite the attention of our friends to what we have accomplished in Porto Rico for the advancement of the principles of republican government and for the promotion of the welfare of the inhabitants of that island. We heard much criticism a few months ago of our legislation with respect to that island and its people, and the country was for a time deeply stirred, fearing that we were ignoring and subverting the doctrines for which our forefathers stood.

It is a gratifying and reassuring fact, indeed, that the people are so sensitive of the national honor, and that they will not readily sanction any supposed breach of it. The storm, which raged with intensity for a time, subsided in due course, and the integrity and beneficence of our action are now beyond challenge. Porto Rico is enjoying a measure of republican government which is entirely new to her and is blessed with an unprecedented measure of prosperity.

We are attempting to do in the Philippines, under greater embarrassment, precisely what we have been doing in Porto Rico, and if we will but persevere in the right and have confidence in each other's patriotic and humane purposes similar results will doubtless follow.

Mr. President, I supported the treaty of Paris with a full consciousness of what its ratification involved. I realized fully that grave responsibilities would rest upon us by the cession of the Philippines. I did not support the treaty because of the material or commercial possibilities which the islands might afford our citizens.

I have not been able to bring myself to the conclusion of our duty in the islands from the standpoint of their commercial advantages to us, no matter how considerable they may be. I have from the beginning put our duty upon a higher plane. The obligation to care for and protect those who, through one of the great evolutions of human history have been committed to us, has seemed to me always to be our paramount duty.

It does not matter to me whether the Philippines have gold in abundance, or forests of rare and valuable woods, or fields of unexcelled fertility, or ports filled with a large commerce present or prospective. The supreme question with me, as with an overwhelming majority of the American people, has been and is that question which concerns our duty to men and to humanity.

While we are a nation of tremendous commercial activities and untold wealth, they are not our greatest glory, nor are they the controlling factors in determining our national duty. The questions of human rights and human liberty are the potential questions which have summoned our mightiest armies and have assembled our fleets and stirred our country to the utmost depths.

It was not gold nor the dream of empire that summoned us in 1898 from the fields of peace to the theater of war. It was not the thought of territorial aggrandizement which led the American Congress in the exercise of its exalted constitutional power to declare war against Spain. It was not the lust for mere martial victory for which 250,000 of the flower of the youth of the land left the vocations of peace and went down to the battlefields of the Republic. No, not that. But be it said in honor and praise of the great Republic that it was to overthrow the power of tyranny, and to give to the oppressed children of men the privileges of republican government.

In the presence of such questions as confront us we must not take counsel of our passions nor of our mere material interests, but we must take counsel of our conscience, of our exalted sense of justice.

It should be remembered that originally President McKinley did not wish to take the islands. Who among us was actuated by more exalted motives than he? Who was moved by a higher sense of right and justice than he? He was a total stranger to the elements of an oppressor. He stood against the war, though knowing that it could but result in the triumph of our arms and in increasing throughout the world his prestige and his renown.

The protocol provided that we should—occupy and hold the city, bay, and harbor of Manila, pending the conclusion of a treaty of peace which shall determine the control, disposition, and government of the Philippines.

The President later thought it essential to take the island of Luzon, and such were his first instructions to our peace commissioners who went to Paris; commissioners who were of the most able, experienced, and enlightened among us, with no desire or thought to do at the international council table anything which was in derogation of our national rights, our national duty, or which was in contravention of the great cardinal principles upon which our Government is founded.

As the discussion progressed and the difficulties seemingly increased and the full measure of our responsibilities gradually unfolded, the conclusion was reached by the President and the commissioners that we could not in honor and duty stop short of the cession of the entire Philippine Archipelago; not, sir, because of any desire of foreign domain or of mere commercial conquest, not for the mere reimbursement of our National Treasury, but because of the supreme dictates of humanity; not for the purpose of holding a subject people; but for the purpose of lifting a subject people into the full sunlight of modern civilization; and to preserve the peace of the world, which would have been placed in instant peril if we should have left the islands like derelicts upon the high seas.

The joint resolution of the honorable Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] declares that—

To maintain the relation of sovereign and subject between the Government of the United States and a people under its dominion would be repugnant to the principles of the Constitution.

In what essential particular, we may ask, does our relation to the Filipinos differ from our relation to all the territories we have acquired, beginning with the Louisiana purchase; in what respect is it different from our relation to Oklahoma, to New Mexico, to Arizona, to the Indian Territory, to Alaska, and to the District of Columbia? Who is there that holds that the government of these Territories and the District of Columbia through the direct action of Congress is in derogation of the rights of the inhabitants or is violative of the principles of the Constitution? The great Territory of Alaska, which we acquired some thirty-five years ago, has been and is governed absolutely and solely under the laws enacted by the Congress, as it has no Territorial legislature.

Excise duties are imposed by the Congress, and both parties have long voted for them without a word of protest or a suggestion that we were dealing with "subjects" in the sense in which that term is used by the opposition. We have been and are acting under the broad grant of power of the Constitution "to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States." When we legislate for Alaska we are acting within the clearly granted authority of the Constitution, and when we legislate for the Philippines we are likewise within the scope and plain purpose of the Constitution.

Mr. President, there is not a Senator upon this floor who sat here when we declared war against Spain who does not well remember the impatience there was because the President did not sooner send to the Congress his war message of April 11, 1898. There were deep mutterings; and the prediction was frequently heard that if there was a day's further delay, there would be a declaration of war without the message. Who is there here who does not remember the intensity of the strain which all experienced, night and day? Who does not recall the sharp and intemperate criticism of the President because of his stand against war? The diplomatic correspondence shows how earnestly he sought to preserve peace. After all efforts seemed unavailing he prepared his message, setting forth the conditions in Cuba and the efforts of the Administration to ameliorate them, and concluded with these impressive words:

The issue is now with the Congress. I have exhausted every effort to relieve the intolerable condition of affairs which is at our doors. Prepared to execute every obligation imposed upon me by the Constitution and the law, I await your action.

Although the Congress was impatient of all delay, the President withheld his message, awaiting further advice from the Spanish cabinet. A crisis was near at hand, but he did not wish to foreclose, if possible, even a remote chance for an honorable peace. Having received further advices from Spain, he communicated the fact to Congress for its consideration.

Yesterday—

Said the President—and since the preparation of the foregoing, a message was received by me that the last decree of the Queen Regent of Spain directs General Blanco, in order to prepare and facilitate peace, to proclaim a suspension of hostilities, the duration and details of which have not as yet been communicated to me. This fact, with every other pertinent consideration, will, I am sure, have your just and careful attention in the solemn deliberations upon which you are about to enter.

The supreme responsibility then rested with the Congress of the United States, and right well it was met.

No one who shall read the history of our country during the great crisis through which we have passed can fail to give President McKinley all honor for the honest and patriotic service he rendered in his effort to accomplish an honorable and enduring peace in the blood-stained island of Cuba without an appeal to the sword. Sir, the patience, the moderation, and the self-restraint of the President in the gravest emergency which could face an executive challenged the admiration of the world, and it will have the approving judgment of history. He yielded, but it was to the inexorable logic of events. Sir, it will be indeed a sad hour for the Republic when the President shall love peace less than war.

The reported progress we have made in the organization of provincial and municipal governments must be gratifying to those who give the subject a thought. There are already some thirty organized provinces under a liberal form of civil government in which the natives are invited to participate wherever they have shown requisite capacity. The governors of the provinces were first appointed by the Commission; wherever possible natives were appointed. Hereafter they will be elected by the people; in fact, an election of provincial governors was held during the early part of the present month.

It has been asserted upon this floor, and reiterated frequently, that we have been engaged in the unholy task of overthrowing a republic in the Philippines; that a republic had been established there, endowed fully with the functions of government; that it was exercising complete sovereignty, which we, disregarding the rights of a weaker people, overthrew. We have the authority of Dr. Schurmann, president of the first Philippine Commission, for the statement that the "Tagalog insurgents and the Philippine republic did not represent the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands, but only a minority of them."

The Filipino republic was nothing more or less, in fact, than an Aguinaldian dictatorship.

Prior to the fall of Manila an insurrection prevailed in the Philippines, having for its purpose not independence, but a modification of the unsatisfactory conditions existing under Spanish rule. There is nowhere a suggestion founded upon authentic fact that independence was either desired or secured. On the 24th day of May, following the victory in Manila Harbor, Aguinaldo issued a proclamation to his fellow-countrymen, in which he said:

I return to assume command of all the forces for the attainment of our lofty aspirations, establishing a dictatorial government which will set forth decrees under my sole responsibility, assisted by the advice of eminent persons, until these islands are completely conquered and able to form a constitutional convention.

In this proclamation we have an acknowledgment of the fact that the islands were not then completely conquered, and of the further significant fact that a simple dictatorship was to be established and that Aguinaldo was the dictator.

Is this the republic which the United States has overthrown?

In a message dated June 23, 1898, Aguinaldo declared the purpose of his revolution:

> And now they (the Filipinos) no longer limit their claims to the assimilation with the political constitution of Spain, but ask for definite separation from her; they are fighting for their independence, firmly convinced that the time has come when they can and must govern themselves.

This is a distinct recognition that prior thereto the Filipinos did not entertain the thought of independence and that the effort for independence was not attempted until after our victory in Manila. The thought of independence undoubtedly took its root in the vanity and ambition of Aguinaldo.

In his declaration of July 15, Aguinaldo, addressing the admiral of the squadron of the United States in the islands, said:

> The revolution having taken possession of the various provinces of the archipelago, this government has found it necessary to adopt the form and organization best suited to the popular will. I have, therefore, the pleasure and honor of placing in your hands the inclosed decrees.

These proclamations are sufficient to indicate the general character of the government which, it is alleged, was exercising sovereignty in the Philippines at the date of the treaty of Paris; this indicates the character of the republic which challenged the sovereignty of the United States, and which we overthrew.

The fact is that the so-called republic had no real substantial existence; it did not exercise the usual functions of government; it was not acknowledged by the masses of the people of the islands; nor was it recognized by any other nation in the world. In fact we have the opinion of Dr. Schurman to the effect that it "never had extensive jurisdiction except in ink and paper."

Mr. President, the honorable Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK], in the course of an impassioned appeal, said that—

> If the Church of God is to be established in the Philippine Islands, it will not be by an Administration whose hands are red with innocent blood. It will be by some Administration that is to come after, bearing in its hands the gift of liberty and the blessings of peace.
> Sir, these are mere pretexts; they are the mere fig leaves of imperialism and of criminal aggression.
> Sometimes the arguments of our friends are garnished with the pretexts of humanity, but wherever you hear it, the staple of the argument—in the press, on the hustings, or on the floors of Congress—is simply the greed for gain and the lust for power.

Whoever says that the course of the majority is inspired by the sordid and ungenerous motives attributed by the honorable Senator, grossly misjudges men.

Aid of the Government in its effort to maintain the laws wherever its jurisdiction extends and wherever it is assailed is not censurable, it is not criminal, and it never will be. Opposition to the efforts of the Government to assert its lawful authority has never been regarded with favor. We erect no monuments to commemorate the efforts, no matter how earnestly and honestly they may have been rendered, of those who put themselves in the pathway of national duty and national progress. Blood has, indeed, been shed, but it has been shed in an effort to establish the lawful authority of the Government in territory which indisputably belongs to it by virtue of the law. I regret most sincerely that blood has been shed, but I am gratified to know that it is not upon our hands.

Mr. President, so long as a vestige of insurrection remains in the islands, opposition in this country means an increase in the death list of our soldiers and seamen. It means an increase of the money required to support the Army and Navy; it means an increase in the pension roll; it means hindrance in building up the waste places in the islands and in the establishment of civic government. Granted that such opposition springs from exalted motives, and I do not question it for a moment, we can only regret that there are those who so erroneously, though honestly, read their national duty.

The suggestion that our attitude is governed by "the greed for gain and the lust for power" is unfounded and ungenerous. Our responsibility came unsought and without any desire whatever for the extension of our commercial dominion. All parties recognize that we are under certain obligations and duties which we can not rightfully or honorably abandon. We are in the Philippines, and must continue there, in the discharge of our solemn duty. All parties seem in accord as to this. The divergence of opinion is with respect to a proclamation as to the length of our stay.

The minority, by their substitute, frankly acknowledge our lawful presence in the islands, and the inexorable necessity of continuing there for an indefinite term. The substitute provides:

> That the United States shall continue to occupy and govern said archipelago until the people thereof have established a stable government, and until sufficient guaranties have been obtained for the performance of our treaty obligations with Spain, for the safety of those inhabitants who have adhered to the United States, and for the maintenance and protection of all rights which have accrued under their authority.

This is certainly a sound and wise provision; it is a distinct and wise acknowledgment of our national duty and obligations. When will these eight or ten millions of people, unskilled in statecraft, untutored in self-government, composed of many hostile tribes, attain to that degree of self-restraint and capacity to furnish "sufficient guaranties for the performance of our treaty obligations with Spain," and when will they, in the language of the substitute, be able to furnish sufficient guaranties "for the safety of those inhabitants who have adhered to the United States, and for the maintenance and protection of all rights which have accrued under their authority?" Who among us has wisdom profound enough to calculate the time which will necessarily elapse before all of this will be properly accomplished?

The Philippine Commission advises us that—> one fact which is clear above every other is that these people are not, either the small minority of educated people, or the very large majority of ignorant people, prepared to establish a government which would hold together for any length of time, and which would not, in a very short time, present all the evils and oppression which were known in Spanish times.

But the substitute of the minority, after laying down so well the broad principles upon which we must proceed and pronouncing the wholesome end we must accomplish by our advocacy (regardless, it would seem, for the time being, of their solicitous regard for the consent of the governed), proceeds to declare that—

> As soon as the results above mentioned have been accomplished, it is declared to be the purpose of the United States, which the President is directed to carry into effect, to withdraw from said islands and leave the government, control, and sovereignty thereof to the inhabitants of the same, retaining only such military, naval, and coaling stations as may be designated by the Government of the United States.

Sir, we have been engaged in the work of pacification and of erecting civil government in the islands during the brief period of but three years. We are in the lawful and rightful possession of the archipelago, and, as we have observed, but a small minority dispute our sovereignty, yet the opposition demand our withdrawal under the conditions indicated in the substitute and the retention of certain military, naval, and coaling stations. Is this, Mr. President, in the interest of a majority of the Filipinos? Is it in the interest of the United States? Are the terms of withdrawal such as the interest of both peoples should dictate, when all within the intendment of the substitute has been accomplished by our occupancy? Is there any demand for such present declaration of our future purpose? Is it the part of wisdom, in the present posture of affairs, to put upon the statute books expressions of our national purpose in the indefinite and, possibly, remote future?

Under the McEnery resolution, adopted by the Senate soon after the ratification of the Paris treaty, we declare it as "the intention of the United States to establish in the said islands a government suitable to the wants and conditions of the inhabitants of said islands, to prepare them for local self-government, and in due time to make such disposition of said islands as will best promote the interest of the citizens of the United States and the inhabitants of said islands."

The last Republican national convention declared that a "just measure of self-government, consistent with their welfare and our duties, shall be secured to them by law."

Such assurances are broad and liberal. There is no suggestion here which is in contravention of the generous policies which have always characterized the Government in its relation to the inhabitants of all the Territories.

I do not consider that it is the part of sound and wise statesmanship to adopt the substitute of the minority. I do not entertain this opinion because of any desire to abridge the rights of the Filipinos or to leave open the way for future imperialistic rule in the United States. I base my opinion upon the broad ground that all wisdom and all patriotism will not die with us, and that those who will follow us and who shall, in all probability, be obliged to deal with these questions, will be as enlightened and animated by as exalted sense of justice, and be in every respect as sensitive of the national honor as we.

It has seemed to me to be unwise to be engaged in fulminating policies upon this subject while we are in the experimental stages of our undertaking, and that we should act up to the full measure of our duty for the time being, and that we should deal with the problems of the future according to our most enlightened judgment when our way is made more clear by a larger and more enlightened experience. There need be no fear, no matter what political party may be in power for the time being, that there will ever go upon the statute books of the United States a solitary oppressive act or any measure which shall not be inspired by a just sense of the fundamental principles of republican government. Justice Brown, in announcing the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Downes case, well said:

> Grave apprehensions of danger are felt by many eminent men—a fear lest an unrestrained possession of power on the part of Congress may lead to unjust and oppressive legislation, in which the natural rights of territories, or their inhabitants, may be engulfed in a centralized despotism. These fears, however, find no justification in the action of Congress in the past century, nor in the conduct of the British Parliament toward its outlying possessions since the American Revolution. Indeed, in the only instance in which this court has declared an act of Congress unconstitutional as trespassing upon the rights of territories (the Missouri compromise), such action was dictated by motives of humanity and justice, and so far commanded popular approval as to be embodied in the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution. There are certain principles of natural justice inherent in the Anglo-Saxon character which need no expression in constitutions or statutes to give them effect or to secure dependencies against legislation manifestly hostile to their real interests.

Sir, the utter folly of making declaration of the national purpose, as proposed by the substitute of the minority, is fully shown by Governor Taft in his statement before the Philippines Committee.

Said he—

the great evil to-day is the discussion of something that is utterly impossible of settlement to-day. The thing the Filipino people need to-day is a stable government under the guidance of American control, teaching them what individual liberty is, and training them to a knowledge of self-government, and when they have that the question of what relation shall exist between the islands and this country may be settled between them and the United States. * * *

Nothing that can be said to-day to the Filipino people in the nature of a promise as to the form of government which may take place after an established stable government shall be framed, could be otherwise than misleading to them and confusing in establishing that government. It would at once begin the agitation among those who desire that separation to have separation, because in their opinion they are fitted for it at once. It would drive away from the support of the stable government that conservative element who are strongly in favor of American guidance and control, because they would anticipate an early change. They would think they would early be left without the support which presence of the American Government necessarily gives, and the promise of something in the future, instead of helping to establish, would render unstable any government which was attempted to be established.

The Governor further approved the report of the Commission wherein it was said that—

To make of the Philippines a colony of the United States or to grant independence to the Philippines would be to hand the islands over to disorder and to anarchy, to destruction and to chaos.

The opinion from those who have spent some two years in thoroughly familiarizing themselves with the conditions of the people, with their manners, customs, intelligence, and aspirations, has much weight. I know of no better source of information than this. Shall we utterly disregard it? Shall we make a present declaration of the Congressional purpose which will multiply the difficulties and embarrassments which attend our administration in the islands?

It would seem that the substitute of the minority, if adopted, would defeat itself. The minority of the committee is composed of Senators of great learning and ability, but shall we accept their judgment and give no heed to the opinion of our officials who are charged with the responsibility of directly dealing with the Filipinos, and with the arduous task of erecting a stable government? It seems to me, sir, that it would be very unwise for us to now act in absolute disregard of the opinion which our own representatives have laid before us—an opinion which is in entire harmony with our knowledge of human nature.

The distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] said in a speech during the present debate:

You could not have ratified the treaty if you had declared your present policy to be the policy to be pursued under it. You lacked but a vote or two of being defeated. You would have lacked a dozen. You would have received no votes except from those who surrendered their judgment to the party caucus if you had told the truth when the treaty was before us, if you knew the truth. I do not charge now that any Senator here meant to misrepresent. I believe that the policy then was the policy enunciated in the fourth resolution with reference to Cuba up to a time after the treaty was ratified. And then, Mr. President, in some way—I do not know how—some evil influence became dominant and took control of the executive department of the Government, and the President's voice was no longer for peace, but for war.

The honorable Senator does not give us the grounds of his belief. He is content to put upon the pages of history for the perusal of the student of the future the imputation that some unholy purpose lay at the foundation of Executive action.

Mr. President, was there ever imputation which had less basis of truth upon which to rest? Was there anyone upon this floor who suggested during the consideration of the treaty that the policy enunciated in the fourth resolution with reference to Cuba was to be adopted? No, sir; unless my memory fails me, neither the Administration nor anyone in its behalf hinted or suggested that the policy of the resolution indicated by the Senator was to maintain in the Philippines.

Before action was taken upon the treaty and while it was pending before us, the President transmitted to the Senate a report of the Secretary of State covering—copies of the reports and instructions exchanged by telegraph with the commissioners in the course of the negotiations, excepting only certain matters of collateral import, which in the opinion of the undersigned [the Secretary of State] it would be inconsistent with the public interest to communicate, but which, however, in no wise affected the negotiation as between the United States and Spain.

The undersigned believes that the telegraphic correspondence so submitted contains all that is necessary to a full understanding of the peace negotiations, and therefore does not submit the more detailed reports received by mail after the cabled summaries and inquiries had been received and acted upon, inasmuch as they fully appear in all essential particulars in the protocols and accompanying papers already laid before the Senate with the treaty of peace signed December 10, 1898.

Everything was laid bare before the Senate. There is not a word in the correspondence transmitted giving even remote warrant to the charge that there was anything occult in the course of the Administration.

The embarrassments which attended the negotiation of the treaty and the necessity of taking over the entire archipelago are fully disclosed. The McEnery resolution adopted by the Senate but a few days after the ratification of the treaty does not support the opinion of the honorable Senator.

Furthermore, an amendment was proposed to the treaty similar in terms to the policy enunciated in the fourth resolution with respect to Cuba, and it was defeated mainly by Republican votes. As was shown by the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], the Senator from Colorado voted with the Republicans against it. Is it not reasonably possible that he is now mistaken when he says the policy as to Cuba was the policy as to the Philippines until after the ratification of the treaty?

Evil influence forsooth! Has the Senator forgotten the President's opposition to the war from the beginning? Has he forgotten his message transmitting the report of the board of inquiry into the Maine disaster and his appeal for conservative judgment and action? Has his last appeal to Spain for peace been forgotten? Has the Senator also forgotten his instructions to our military commanders and civil officers sent into the Philippines to do everything possible to promote and maintain peace? Has he forgotten that every act and every aspiration of the President was in the ways of peace? Our sovereignty in the Philippines was assailed, and it was imperatively incumbent upon the President to see that it was maintained peaceably, if possible, but forcibly if must be. This duty he could not avoid. The record, sir, is written; it is a clean one; there is nowhere to be found upon it a blemish of bad faith on the part of the Administration.

Evil influence! No, Mr. President, do not write into one of the sublimest pages in American history so base a word. There was no influence which guided or controlled the Chief Executive save that influence which sprang from the great, enlightened, patriotic heart of the American people.

The Supreme Court of the United States has lately defined the relations which the islands acquired by the treaty of Paris sustain to the United States. They are held to be property belonging to the United States, and the Congress is left free to legislate for them as their peculiar and varying interests may require. No Procrustean rule must apply as to them. Uniform impost and excise duties are not required as in the United States, but we may enact such laws and adopt such tarift as their respective interests may require.

We are charged with the duty of promoting the commercial welfare and the prosperity of the people of the Philippine Islands so far as it can be done by the enactment of laws. We must have a care that our laws are not unduly restrictive, and that they do not unnecessarily burden the commerce of the islands. Prosperity in the islands will accomplish much toward the promotion of peace and contentment among the inhabitants.

Revenue must be provided for the support of the insular and municipal governments, for the support of public schools, the improvement of harbors, the construction of much needed highways, and for other needful and useful governmental purposes.

In order to safeguard in a reasonable and proper way the commerce of the Philippines, the committee has reported the pending measure. I shall not pause to discuss the details of the bill, nor the amendments modifying schedules. The committee having the bill in charge has given and will give to them all necessary consideration.

Our present duty in the Philippines may be stated concretely thus: First, put down all insurrection and compel recognition of American sovereignty; second, establish schools and educate the people; third, promote public improvements, construct highways for the ready intercommunication of the people of the islands, improve harbors for the accommodation of commerce; fourth, erect municipal, provincial, and insular governments, modeled, so far as possible, after our republican institutions, and as rapidly as is practicable admit the Filipinos into the administration of their own affairs. These are a few of the vital objects to which we are addressing ourselves, and which will engage our attention indefinitely. They command the best and profoundest statesmanship among us. If we but discharge these paramount duties in an intelligent, earnest way, we shall have gone far toward solving the Philippine problem, and our friends need not concern themselves greatly as to the future.

As is well known, there is before the Senate a bill providing for an insular government in the Philippines, republican in form. The essential features of this bill will undoubtedly become a law, and the Filipinos soon will enjoy a very large measure of representative government and under the express sanction of the Congress. This will, indeed, be a radical transformation in the brief space of four or five years. There is certainly nothing in this proposed legislation which can have any other effect than to assure the Filipinos of the broadest and most generous purpose of the United States.

Mr. President, I shall not further detain the Senate. We find in what the Government has accomplished in the Philippines much to commend. We find in what it is doing the most abundant assurance of our ability to successfully solve the great problem which is upon our hands. We have the courage, we have the ability, to meet every emergency which lays before us. Let us go forward, animated by the one great purpose to discharge our duty in full measure, inspired by the same high purpose which actuated us when we resolved upon war against the Spanish power.

Sir, those who read in a large way the purpose of the All-wise Ruler see in the tragic events of the last four years a far-reaching Providence. Habana and Manila and Santiago and Buffalo tell of the mighty cost of human liberty; they chasten us; they show how narrow is the boundary set to our finite vision, and how we should address ourselves to the duties of the hour and courageously and hopefully await the demands of the future; they show that moral duties abide with nations as with men. If, sir, we shall nobly meet the demands of the hour, accomplish peace, and lead the Filipinos in the way of civilization and self-government, we shall have earned the approval of our own conscience and have won the admiration of the world.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 9 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 24, 1902, at 11 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last when, on request of Mr. LODGE, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal will, without objection, stand approved.

BRIG LOUISA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting the conclusions of fact and of law filed under the act of January 20, 1885, in the French spoliation claims, set out in the findings by the court relating to the vessel brig Louisa, Benjamin Wheeler, master; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore announced his signature to the enrolled bill (H. R. 3104) to grant the right of way through the Oklahoma Territory and the Indian Territory to the Enid and Anadarko Railway Company, and for other purposes, which had previously been signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads:

The bill (H. R. 299) for the relief of William C. Dodge was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

The bill (H. R. 11353) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PLATT of New York presented a petition of the Board of Trade and Transportation of New York City, praying for the re-establishment of the pneumatic tube postal service in that city; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Central Federated Union, American Federation of Labor, of New York City, praying for the enactment of legislation providing that the maximum salary of letter carriers for the fourth year of service, and thereafter, shall be $1,200 per annum in cities of the first class and $1,000 in cities of the second class; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented the memorial of F. X. Brandecker and sundry other citizens of New York City, remonstrating against the restriction of immigration; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a petition of Command No. 22, Spanish War Veterans, of Niagara Falls, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the payment of medical expenses of sick officers and enlisted men of the Army while absent from duty with leave or on furlough; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Allied Printing Trades Council, American Federation of Labor, of Syracuse, N. Y., praying for the removal of the duty on paper and pulp; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

IMITATION DAIRY PRODUCTS.

Mr. PROCTOR. I am directed by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9206) to make oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products subject to the laws of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia into which they are transported, and to change the tax on oleomargarine, and to amend an act entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886, to report it with amendments, and to submit a report thereon. The minority of the committee will later submit their views.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

REPORT OF INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by the Senator from California [Mr. BARD] on the 19th instant, to report it with amendments, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That 5,000 copies of the report of the Industrial Commission on irrigation, which is incorporated in the final report of the Industrial Commission, Volume XIX, pages 1071 to 1084, inclusive, be printed, and that 2,500 copies thereof be printed and bound in paper covers for the use of the Geological Survey.

The amendments of the Committee on Printing were, in line 1, to strike out "five" and insert "six;" and after the word "printed," in line 5, to strike out the remainder of the resolution and insert:

And bound in paper covers, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 2,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,500 copies for the use of the Geological Survey.

So as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That 6,000 copies of the report of the Industrial Commission on irrigation, which is incorporated in the final report of the Industrial Commission, volume 19, pages 1071 to 1084, inclusive, be printed and bound in paper covers; 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 2,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,500 copies for the use of the Geological Survey.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

INDEX OF PUBLIC DOCUMEMTS.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. CULLOM on the 19th instant, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed the number of copies hereafter stated of Tables of an Annotated Index to the Congressional Series of United States Public Documents, prepared under the supervision of the Superintendent of Documents, 5,000 copies, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 3,000 for the House of Representatives, and 1,000 for the Superintendent of Documents.

SENATORIAL INVESTIGATION.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President, it is my purpose to introduce a resolution, and before doing so I desire to have the Secretary read a letter from the junior Senator from South Carolina, which is self-explanatory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., February 24, 1902.

Hon. J. C. PRITCHARD,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I was prevented, as you know, from offering the resolution which I wrote at my desk on Saturday, demanding an investigation of the charges made by my colleague, by being adjudged in contempt of the Senate. I am now debarred the privilege, and request you to introduce the resolution, for the reason that if the charges are true I am unfit to remain a member of the Senate, and if they are untrue the man who made them is unfit to remain a member of this honorable body. In any event, I feel that I am entitled to a vindication by the same body that makes investigation in the proceedings for contempt. I herewith inclose the resolution.

Yours, very truly,

JOHN LOWNDES McLAURIN.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas the senior Senator from the State of South Carolina charged in a speech on the floor of the Senate that the junior Senator from the same State had been improperly influenced in casting his vote for the ratification of the treaty of peace between the United States and Spain; and

Whereas the said charge was emphatically denied by the junior Senator: Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be directed to investigate and report as to the truth of the said charges, with full power to send for persons and papers.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator rise to this resolution?

Mr. HALE. I rose to object, so that it will go over, unless it can be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I do not think the Senate should instruct the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine objects, and the resolution will go over under the rule.

Mr. HALE. I give notice that I shall move that it be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. HOAR. Let the Senator make the motion now.

Mr. HALE. Very well; I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The motion was agreed to.

EMPLOYMENT OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. PROCTOR submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be, and is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer to report hearings on bills coming before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee be authorized to have said hearings printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. C. R. MCKENNEY, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 219) for the relief of Mary Chambers, widow of Thomas Chambers; and

A bill (S. 1573) to authorize Commander James M. Miller, United States Navy; Surg. Oliver D. Norton, United States Navy, and Mr. Edwin V. Morgan, formerly secretary of the Samoan Commission and now secretary of the legation of the United States at Seoul, Korea, to accept presents tendered to them by His Majesty the Emperor of Germany.

PHILIPPINE TARIFF BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed, and the Chair lays before the Senate the regular order.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5833) temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I expect to vote for this bill unless it shall be pointed out in the debate that there is something in it other than what I have found there. It seems to be merely a provision by the power at present in control in the Philippine Islands for the regulation of imports into those islands, which, of course, some power must do, and for the regulation of imports from those islands into this country, which, of course, the legislative power in this country must do. I do not, therefore, find in the bill any violation of those principles of liberty and free government in regard to which my own opinion is unchanged.

But I can not vote for the amendment proposed by the minority, because that amendment in terms, if I understand it, gives the express sanction of law to some rules and regulations and enactments now in force in the Philippine Islands which to my mind seem utterly vicious and unjust. So I shall vote for the bill as at present advised, and vote against the amendment.

I did not mean to speak further on this question until the pending investigation had been concluded or had so far progressed as to bring out the case on both sides. There will be a bill for declaring a more permanent policy, by and by, to which such a discussion will be pertinent and on which that investigation will throw much light. So I should not have said a word but for the speech of my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], who I thought was in his seat when I rose to address the Senate. I would have preferred to have said what I had to say in his presence, and should not have risen at this time if he had not then been here. I think I ought to say a word or two about that.

Mr. SPOONER entered the Chamber.

Mr. HOAR. I will repeat what I just said, that I should not have said anything now, except to announce my purpose to vote for the bill and against the amendment, but for what has been said by my honorable friend from Wisconsin. The Senator chose his time for his earnest and protracted remarks very skillfully. It was at a time when the evidence of a gentleman entitled to great respect, and whose opinions are entitled to great weight, thoroughly committed to the policies which have been pursued in the Philippine Islands, had made his powerful statement; when the evidence on the other side had not been heard at all, and when the cross-examination of Mr. Commissioner Taft himself was incomplete.

That evidence, as far as it has gone, is not yet in print, or if it be in print this morning, it has not come to us in time for any purpose useful to this debate. We only get what the gentlemen who heard it tell us about it or what has been filtered through the press, which is generally favorable to that side.

And yet, Mr. President, there are two or three facts which stand out already which ought to be noticed now. One is that that gentleman has declared in substance—and, if he be correctly reported, in words—exactly what the chairman of the other great Commission sent there to represent the Government declared lately with so much emphasis, that it would have been better for our country if we had never gone there. What becomes of the traitorous men, who, thinking they were acting and had a right to act for the interest of the United States, at least as American legislators and American citizens, dared to oppose this policy when its great defender admits that all American considerations make it appear that we never should have gone there, and it has been to no advantage to the country?

We have spent hundreds of millions of treasure; we have sacrificed thousands of American lives; we have slain 100,000 Filipinos; we have given away all the old ideals of the country in the past. The human intellect for us, so far as righteousness and liberty are concerned, has changed masters, and yet it has been no advantage to this country, according to Mr. Taft, that we went there.

Now then, what is the advantage to the Filipinos? You have got a condition of things there, according to the same authority, where no party in the island wants your rule. The only party that submits to it is a party that submits to it on a condition which you all say you will never grant, and that is that they are to come into the Union as an American State. You have substituted hate for love; you have substituted despair for hope; you have substituted despotism for a republic. You have been no advantage to us, according to Mr. Taft himself, and you have not as yet got a single Filipino, as far we know, who is reconciled to your rule as a colony or as a province, but only in the fallacious hope, which no man will stand on this floor and encourage, that they will come in as an American State.

But look a little more, as far as it has gone now, at the advantage to the Filipino of this thing which is of no advantage to us.

Mr. Taft gives an account of schools established, of children eager to learn, and of American teachers at work. All those are good things. But, Mr. President, Admiral Dewey sent through those islands just after we landed our army there two officers who, he says, have given the best account of things there, who give an account of orderly government, of an eager desire to learn on the part of those people quite as good as this. One of our consuls describes his landing in the Philippine Islands, and says that the people thronged to him, as an American, with expressions of love and gratitude, eager almost to kiss the hem of his garment.

What have you got? What have you got in Mr. Taft's report of an eager desire to learn on the part of those people, or a readiness to learn, which is a better story than what you had then? You have slain a hundred thousand of them. You have had your reconcentrado districts; you have had a little water torture, not much; and those islands are not so well off, except in the single fact that the schools they were then all ready to establish have been established, every one of them at the cost of the Filipino, not yours. That is all.

No, that is not all. You have, so far, slain more parents than you have children in school.

Now, Mr. President, what have you got for them and for you? Coming to the essence of the thing, you have no advantage for us and no substantial advantage for them. And what you have got you have got at the cost of thousands of American young lives, of hundreds of millions of treasure, of the sacrifice of every ideal of the Republic.

My friend says he loves the Declaration of Independence. He can not state a doctrine of the Declaration of Independence that he will get up in the Senate and stand by—not the right of a people to establish their own government; not the doctrine that all men are created equal; not the doctrine that governments rest on the consent of the governed. These three things constitute the whole of the Declaration of Independence. There is not one of those that my friend will now say he loves, although he thinks he loves the Declaration of Independence. But you have got for an example to mankind a government where there is no consent of the governed, a state where men are not created equal, a flag the symbol of absolute government, not of liberty; a flag which the water torture follows a little, but the Constitution does not follow at all; treason without an overt act and without a trial by jury; taxation without representation; election without free speech; printing without a free press, and schools where they can not teach liberty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly that I was unable to get the floor until we passed under the fifteen-minute rule. I have this regret because a great many things have been said in the course of this debate to which I desire to make answer, or at least attempt to make answer. I shall hope that there will be an opportunity yet given to make the answer which I desire to make and to which I refer in that remark.

If such opportunity is presented, I think I shall be able to show, Mr. President, that the United States did not act unwisely in acquiring the Philippine Islands; that we not only acted wisely, but that we could not, under the circumstances, have acted otherwise than as we did act. I shall undertake to show, and I think I shall be able to do so, that from the hour we took possession of the Philippines until this time our work has been an uninterrupted success, instead of a miserable and dismal failure, such as it has been represented to be on the floor of this Chamber during the last two or three weeks. And I trust I shall be able to show, without any difficulty whatever, to the satisfaction of every unbiased and unprejudiced mind, that the American Army in the Philippines, officers and men alike, have been guilty of no unnecessary cruelty, no unnecessary harshness, certainly no barbarity such as has been depicted here; that, on the contrary, they have been the same gallant and heroic men the American Army, officers and men alike, have ever been wheresoever they have carried our flag to battle and to victory.

I shall undertake to show also, Mr. President, when I have opportunity to speak at length, that the civil commission, the Taft Commission, as it is called, has acted only wisely and judiciously, patriotically and efficiently, in all that it has done in the Philippine Islands. I shall undertake to show it has enacted no statutes that have not been called for and justified by the necessities of that situation, and that to-day, as the result of what has been done in the Philippine Islands since we took possession, we are in peaceful control of four-fifths of that archipelago, and soon, if we continue the policy we have been pursuing, we shall be in peaceable control of the whole of the archipelago.

But, Mr. President, as to all these subjects I must, as I have indicated, pass them by until I have opportunity to speak at length. Having only a few minutes at my disposal, I want to confine myself to a discussion of this bill upon its merit. The debate has been so extended and so exciting in some respects that I think I may safely say that pretty nearly everything suggested by a mention of the Philippines has received more consideration than the measure under consideration.

It is a bill to raise revenue, not for the benefit of the United States Government, but for the Philippine Islands, to sustain the civil government that we are establishing there. The bill approves and puts into continued force and operation the tariff schedules adopted for importations into the Philippine Islands by the Taft Commission, and it provides that upon all imports into the United States there shall be levied and collected 75 per cent of the full Dingley rates of tariff duties on all dutiable articles.

I have given notice that at the proper time I shall offer an amendment to strike out 75 per cent on importations from the Philippine Islands and insert 25 per cent. I want to indicate in the little time allowed me why I shall move that amendment.

In the first place, Mr. President, I shall make that proposition because the Philippine Islands are our own, and being our possessions they ought to be treated as nearly as circumstances will allow as we have treated other possessions belonging to the United States. All know how we have treated Porto Rico and Hawaii. Porto Rico and the Philippines came to us by the same title, by the same deed of cession. They sustain toward us in a legal sense precisely the same relation. We have given Porto Rico free trade, for a short time levying a small duty on certain articles of commerce between the two countries because there was a necessity for it to support the Porto Rican government. Now they have free trade with us, however, on everything.

I think we ought to approach as nearly as possible to free trade with us in levying tariff duties for the benefit of the Philippine Islands. I mean free trade between the United States and the Philippine Islands. I have looked into this matter somewhat and I have found, what I think every other man will find who examines the question, that there is no necessity for levying any duties upon importations from the Philippine Islands into the United States, except only to raise revenue for the Philippine Islands. There is no danger, in my judgment, to any protected industry of country, certainly not to tobacco or sugar or anything else that has received tariff protection under the Dingley statute.

Mr. President, I have not time to develop and elaborate it, but it is my opinion that there will be more revenue raised by collecting only one-fourth the Dingley rates than there will be if we undertake to collect three-fourths of the Dingley rates; for the simple reason that 75 per cent of the Dingley rates will prove practically prohibitory.

But aside from that there is another reason of greater force why I hope we will cut the duty down to 25 per cent, and that is the effect it will have upon the Filipinos themselves. We have heard a great deal in this Chamber during the last two or three weeks about the unsatisfactory feeling and disposition of that people toward the United States. I do not know to what extent all this is true. I think much that has been said has been an exaggeration, but it is undoubtedly true to some extent. To whatever extent it may be true, there is nothing we can do to help our authorities and representatives in the Philippine Islands so much in their effort to restore law and order and establish government as to create a feeling of kindliness and friendship on the part of that people toward us; and the best way to do that is to show that we have a feeling of kindliness and friendship toward them; that they are possessions of the United States, and that we propose to treat them as possessions of the United States.

Now, Mr. President, why is that? There is something more than sentiment about it. The sentiment itself might be sufficient, but there is more than sentiment about it. If we would have those people live satisfactorily under the government that we will establish, accepting it and abiding by it, we must make them satisfied with it. I do not care how good a government you establish, and I do not care how good a set of men you put there to discharge the duties of that government and operate the governmental machinery, there will be trouble unless the people themselves are satisfied with their domestic condition, and no people will be satisfied who do not have prosperity, and no people can have prosperity who do not have markets.

Therefore what we want to do is so to legislate as most efficiently to help the Filipinos, not only to have peace, law, and order, and protection for property, and liberty and life, but also to have an opportunity to develop their country. To accomplish this they must have an opportunity not only to reap, but also an opportunity to sell, and therefore I think we should let them into our markets upon the best possible terms we can afford to accord to them. Their prosperity is our prosperity.

Now, there is a reason why we should make the tariff at this end of the line as low as possible. We have been demanding the open-door policy in the Far East. We have been demanding it as to China and Japan and all other countries. We want an opportunity to trade on equal terms with the six or eight hundred millions of people in the Orient. But we can not demand the open door as we have been demanding it and refuse it consistently as to the Philippines. But if we are to grant the open door as to the Philippines, then that means that every other country with its importations into the Philippines will go in there on precisely the same terms we go in upon. If we go in without tariff, every other country will go in free of duty. If we levy only half rates, we can collect only half rates from other countries.

The result is that if we would supply the civil government of the Philippine Archipelago with a sufficient revenue to support it we must, as the Taft Commission has already provided, levy and collect important tariff duties on importations there, and we must collect the same from ourselves that we collect from all other countries of the earth. In other words, we can not show favor beyond certain limitations to the Filipinos at that end of the line. The favor must be shown here; and if we show it here, we have no way to show it except only by reducing, as much as we can afford, the rates of duty which we impose and collect on their importations into this country.

For reasons of this character, which under the circumstances I have no time to elaborate or dwell upon or enforce by argument, I have offered this amendment. I have offered it from a sense of duty. I speak in support of it from the same prompting, and I sincerely hope that it may be adopted by the Senate. The bill I am most heartily in favor of in every other respect.

Now, Mr. President, if I have a moment left let me employ it to say that if there is anybody in the Senate of the United States or in the country who is estopped to complain of our policy in the Philippines or to criticise what has been done there it is the man who favored the annexation of the Philippine Islands, the man who favored the ratification of the treaty of peace with Spain under which we took the cession of title to the Philippines, and particularly, Mr. President, the man who favored the acquisition of the Philippines by the ratification of that treaty after the insurgents and our troops had come into hostile conflict on the 4th day of February, 1899. The treaty was ratified on February 6.

Senators have spoken here—I refer particularly to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON]—in criticism. He, I am sure, will admit that during all that period he advocated the ratification of that treaty; he advocated it after this conflict to which I have referred; he advocated it also, Mr. President, when he knew what the policy of the United States Government would be in the Philippine Islands, for he advocated it after the order issued by the President—which has been referred to here—to criticise it, dated the 21st day of December, 1898, in which the President outlined what our policy would be, and pointed out that it would be precisely what it has been; for President McKinley in that order announced that it would be our effort to enforce law and order, establish government, maintain, uphold, and enforce the American authority, using whatever of force and power might be necessary to that end. We have done nothing more than that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, I shall confine myself this morning to a few thoughts suggested by the speech of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] last Friday. That was a most eloquent speech, but I was surprised as it proceeded to see that the Senator had worked himself up into what appeared to me to be a fine frenzy, causing him to lose his usual fine sense of the relation of things and to take an exaggerated and almost grotesque view of his own position and of that of his political opponents. One listening to him would imagine that everybody on this side was engaged in a desperate attempt to blacken the fame of our Army, impeach the veracity of our officers, assail the honor of the nation and its flag, and to decry the virtue and the sanity of the American people.

I assure that Senator that neither he nor his side have a monopoly of admiration for the truth, the honor, the courage, and the humanity of the American soldier. The Senator is not singular or alone in love and reverence for the flag of the nation. There are others besides him and his side who have confidence in the sanity, the virtue, the integrity, and the magnanimity of the American people. If they have not felt called on to sing a continual and never-ending pæn in eulogy of the first and of the second, and have not felt called on to continually throw themselves incontinently at the heads of the third in paroxysms of delirious protestation, it has not been because they have not had as high a regard for them as has the Senator from Wisconsin; it has been because they did not care for the applause of the unthinking, and were careless of the meretricious aids to that end which the Senator from Wisconsin has not disdained to employ.

There is another thing which I wish to state to the Senator from Wisconsin—and I am sorry he is not in his seat—because it appears to be necessary, and that is that the Republican party is not the nation, and that it has long since ceased to stand, if it ever did stand, for those things which the flag of the nation symbolizes. It may be measured, therefore, like every other human instrumentality, and one may criticise its sins of omission and commission without subjecting himself to prosecution for treason or misprision of treason—unless he happens to be in the Philippine Islands.

I hope that the Senator in the course of time will come to recognize this fact and thereby be enabled to take a more just view of the position maintained by his political opponents. When he does so, he will not see insult, innuendo, and assault on the honor of the nation and the flag in every criticism, even in the most severe criticism, upon the Republican party and its leadership.

The Senator from Wisconsin is fond of discussing the question whether our officers promised the Filipinos independence as a return for their aid in the war with Spain, and he never fails, as he did not fail in this instance, to drive home to the public mind with great force the mean and contemptible attitude of those Americans who he assumes are willing to believe the testimony of the leaders of the Filipino insurrection upon this subject rather than that of American officers and American representatives. For one I have never undertaken to make, and have never made, an issue of veracity between American officers and American representatives on the one side and the leaders of the Philippine insurrection on the other concerning the promise of independence made to the Filipinos in return for their aid in the war with Spain, nor has anybody on this side done so in this debate.

That is an issue which the Senator from Wisconsin is fond of raising and discussing. I have, however, asserted on the testimony of American officers and American representatives alone that we sought the aid of the Filipinos in the war with Spain, knowing that in giving that aid they knew nothing of us and cared nothing for us, and that the only reason they could be expected to have for giving us their aid was that they hoped thereby to secure their own independence, and that no representative of this Government, from beginning to end, during all of their connection with us in that war, gave them to understand that after they had helped us to end the war we proposed to deny them their independence.

This assertion is so well supported that the Senator from Wisconsin, in his wildest bursts of eloquence, has not undertaken to deny it or to controvert it. I have asserted as a corollary of that proposition that to conclude a peace with Spain without giving our Filipino allies any voice therein, even the voice of remonstrance, and to take their country as a part of the spoil of war, and not only to deny them their independence, but to propose to hold them as vassals and subjects and not as citizens, was an act of perfidy and bad faith which had dishonored the nation.

The Senator from Wisconsin, of course, denies that proposition, but if the premise be correct—and neither he nor anybody else in this Chamber or anywhere else in this country, so far as I am informed, has ever undertaken to deny it—if the premise be correct, then I am willing to leave the validity of the conclusion which I have drawn to the intelligent and magnanimous judgment of the American people, and I have no more fear of that judgment than has the Senator from Wisconsin. I only beg that he will not befog that issue. The nation has been dishonored, but it has not dishonored itself. It can not do so until, with full knowledge of all the facts, it shall ratify and confirm the perfidy practiced by its agents in its name. It never has yet done so, and I have so much more confidence in the sanity and the virtue and the good judgment and the honor of the American people than has the Senator from Wisconsin that I do not believe it ever will do so.

The Senator from Wisconsin in his speech made an involuntary confession of the weakness of his cause by undertaking to bolster it up with the aid of a great name now passed into history, and in doing so he reiterated the charge, which he has made on a number of occasions, that President McKinley had been grossly and outrageously assailed on more than one occasion in this Chamber. I have no doubt that I was intended to be included in that charge. I confess to having freely criticised President McKinley's course during his lifetime. If that criticism ever passed just bounds and degenerated into an assault, I regret it now more than I have words to express. De mortuis nil nisi bonum. I make no war upon the dead. Neither do I use their bodies as a bulwark. And if in dealing with the living I have sometimes been censorious and fault-finding I beg that there may be set off against that fault the undoubted virtue which I believe I do possess and which others might well emulate, that I never fawn on any man, no matter how high, nor by sycophantic adulation seek to win his favor.

I say it is unjust to the dead and cowardly to the living to project the name of President McKinley into this discussion. Even if he were living—and no man regrets his tragic and untimely death more than I do—he would be entitled to the same immunity from responsibility for administrative acts as every other ruler of every other nation on earth. Rulers are not omniscient and all seeing; they are human and act upon advice, and, therefore, we attribute, and justly attribute, the faults and shortcomings of an administration, if there be any, to the advisers who have caused the President to pursue the course which we criticise. They are responsible for that which has happened in the Philippines who pressed upon the President the course that has there been pursued, and who have since dinned into the ears of the American people, until they have almost been stunned and staggered, the false and blasphemous pretense that this nation was in those islands as the result of a trust devolved on us by Almighty God! They who have done that thing are the leaders of the Republican party, and they can not escape responsibility by calling on the name of any man or any men besides themselves either living or dead.

Why they have done it some of those leaders have not hesitated to confess. They have done it for the same reason that Cortez pursued a similar, but a more honorable and less perfidious course, in Mexico, for the same reason that Pizarro planted the standard of Spain in Peru. We know why Cortez and Pizarro did that. It was for love of gold and lust of dominion.

Men may babble about God, and prate about His mysterious ways in the effort to ease their own consciences and to lull the conscience of the nation; but this same God to whom they appeal has already written His verdict. No sham, no false pretense, no legerdemain of cheap rhetoric can reverse or avert it. When the awful day comes that that verdict shall be transmuted into judgment, woe be it unto the men who have had a hand in the chapter of avarice and greed written in the tears and the blood of the people of those far-off islands in the Pacific seas, as well as in the blood of our own young American manhood.

When I shall have retired from service in this body, Mr. President, the most pleasant and most honorable recollection of my service here that I shall carry with me will be the recollection that I have had no lot or part, from beginning to end, in this Philippine folly, either in pushing our country out upon its evil course or in preventing it, now that that evil has become apparent of all men, from rehabilitating itself in the eyes of God and man by retracting that evil course. I will have no lot or part in it now. I will not touch, taste, or handle the unclean thing. For that reason I decline to be drawn into the trap presented by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] in the amendment offered by him to reduce these duties to 25 per cent. We have no right, under our own institutions, we have no right, consistently with the principles of eternal justice, to make those people pay one solitary single red cent, and I will cast no vote which now or hereafter may indicate that I have ever held a contrary opinion.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Mr. President, I had desired to discuss this bill, and incidentally the substitute, on Saturday last, but I will postpone that discussion on my part until later. The agreement made as to this debate, however, leaves me but fifteen minutes in which to make a statement, which I think it is my duty to make, and while my colleague [Mr. WELLINGTON] is present I take the only opportunity which remains to make it.

My colleague has thrice stated that President McKinley gave him assurances which induced him to vote for the treaty of Paris, which assurances were not fulfilled. My colleague's statements vary somewhat from each other. I was present at the conversation my colleague had with the President concerning the treaty.

When my colleague deserted the Republican party——

Mr. WELLINGTON. Mr. President——

Mr. MCCOMAS. Which elected him, and went over to the Democracy; he made a speech at Cumberland, where Mr. Bryan took the Senator into the fold.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to his colleague?

Mr. MCCOMAS. If I have time later, I will yield.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I want to object to my colleague's words as to my desertion from the Republican party.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Then I will accept the objection.

My colleague's prepared speech was fully printed in the Baltimore Sun. From it I read these rather vague statements:

> A few days before the vote was taken I called upon him (the President), at his request, in company with a Senatorial colleague [meaning myself], and the question of the treaty was discussed at length.

Further, my colleague said:

> The conclusion then reached was that I would abstain from amending the treaty and that I would cast my vote for it. This was agreed, upon the assertion of the President that it was not his purpose permanently to acquire or hold against the consent of the inhabitants the Philippine Islands, that it was his purpose only to restore order by American arms in the contest then being waged, and to prevent foreign interference in the affairs of the archipelago. This was the understanding, and upon that promise I voted for the ratification of the treaty; without my vote it would not have been ratified. The treaty was ratified, but the promise of the President was not fulfilled.

This charge is absurd and is without foundation. Let me show the absurdity of the charge.

The Constitution makes a treaty part of the supreme law of the land, and the treaty of Paris in terms provides:

> That the civil rights and political status of the native inhabitants of the territories hereby ceded to the United States shall be determined by the Congress.

The commissioners who made the treaty and the President who transmitted it to Congress were familiar with our Constitution, which provides that—

> Congress shall have power to dispose of and to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory of the United States.

It is for Congress to say how we will govern the Philippines, which belong to us, if we do not cede them. It is not for the President, nor did he, as my colleague says, arrogate to himself that function in his talk with my colleague and myself.

On December 5, 1898, the President sent his annual message to Congress. This was sixty days before the ratification of the treaty. Of course my colleague had read before our visit this statement therein about the Philippines:

> I do not discuss at this time the government or the future of the new possessions which will come to us as the result of the war with Spain. Such discussion will be appropriate after the treaty of peace shall be ratified. In the meantime and until the Congress has legislated otherwise it will be my duty to continue the military governments which have existed since our occupation and give to the people security in life and property and encouragement under a just and beneficent rule.

Had the President in our interview claimed power to dispose of the Philippine territory, I am bound to believe my colleague would have reminded him that power was in Congress and not in the President and that the President in his annual message had admitted the sole power of Congress to permanently dispose of the Philippines when ceded by the treaty.

The treaty was ratified on February 6, 1899. Ten days thereafter the President made his notable speech in Boston. It was no doubt read by every Senator, including my colleague. If my colleague then believed the President had misled the Senator he should then have called attention to this speech of the President:

> The treaty has been ratified by the votes of more than two-thirds of the Senate. Spain is now eliminated from the problem. It remains to ask what we shall now do. I do not intrude upon the duties of Congress or seek to anticipate or forestall its action. Congress will have the power and I am sure the purpose to do what is right and just and humane for these people in distant seas. This whole subject is now with Congress, and Congress is the voice and conscience and the judgment of the American people. Upon their judgment and conscience can we not rely? I believe in them. I trust them. Until Congress shall direct otherwise it will be the duty of the Executive to possess and hold the Philippines, giving to the people thereof peace and order and beneficent government.

Surely my colleague read the part of the President's message of December 5, 1899, in which he said:

> The future government of the Philippines rests with the Congress of the United States. It does not seem advisable that I should recommend at this time a specific and final form of government for these islands. When peace shall be restored it will be the duty of Congress to construct a plan of government which shall establish and maintain freedom and order and peace in the Philippines. The insurrection is still existing. As long as the insurrection continues the military arm must necessarily be supreme. Until Congress shall have made known the formal expression of its will, I shall use the authority vested in me by the Constitution and the statutes to uphold the sovereignty of the United States in those distant islands as in all other places where our flag rightly floats.

Surely, I say, my colleague must recollect that statement of the President in his message of December 5, 1899. If he believed the President made a different statement to my colleague and myself, why did he not then make his charge against the President? These three statements of the President's purpose all agree with each other and disagree with my colleague's statement.

To my knowledge, neither in public speech nor in any conversation with me did my colleague ever complain that the President had pledged him in our interview that the Philippines should not be permanently held. It was impossible that the President could have made such a statement for the reasons I have given, and it appears impossible that my colleague could have been persuaded to believe any such statement made by a President, for I assume my colleague had read the Constitution and read the treaty and the two annual messages to Congress concerning the Philippines.

With full knowledge of all these statements of the President's purpose, clear, explicit, and constitutional, thereafter, in the early days of December, 1899, my colleague, as I am informed by General Agnus, called upon the President to assure him that he (the Senator) would loyally support the President's Administration. Gen. Felix Agnus, the editor of the Baltimore American, was with him, and asserts that my colleague assured the President of his support of the Administration nearly one year after the ratification of the treaty.

My colleague never made this absurd charge until in the midsummer of 1900, when he was about to go over to the Democracy in support of Mr. Bryan.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Mr. President——

Mr. MCCOMAS. I can not yield just now. I will try to yield if I have time. I will hurry on with what I have to say.

I have shown the absurdity of this charge. I say further there is no foundation for this charge, and I give the substance of the conversation which occurred when we visited the President.

In the first place, my colleague is in error when he states that we visited the President at his (the President's) request. We, by telephone, asked an interview with the President. He replied that he would receive us.

My colleague is again in error when he says the conclusion then was that he would abstain from amending the treaty. I can not say to what pending amendment my colleague refers, because no amendment was discussed in our twenty-minute conversation with the President. My colleague said he would vote for the treaty. Thereafter the burden of my colleague's talk was complaint of the Spanish war. He said nothing of its glories, but still considered it a calamity; and after the President had stated substantially what he said in my quotation from his Boston speech my colleague again assured the President he intended to vote for the treaty and to give the President loyal support in his Administration.

My colleague did say he was opposed to a Philippine State or Territory, the President replying, "You gentlemen are in Congress, and Congress will have the power to determine the future government of the islands." My colleague voluntarily assured the President that he would vote for the ratification of the treaty without any pledge or promise or representation from the President other than the general statement that the President, when the treaty was ratified, would go forward to enforce peace and order and exercise a temporary civil control until Congress should provide by legislation a government for the Philippine Islands.

This was, in substance, the whole conversation—nothing more, nothing less, nothing different. I regret that my colleague has forgotten the conversation, not only because it imputes to our martyr President forgetfulness of the Constitution and the treaty, but because it imputes to my colleague that he has forgotten the fundamental difference between the powers of the Executive and of Congress.

More than all that, I am profoundly sorry that my colleague in his place in the Senate, when that noble President is in his grave, mourned by all the world, mourned by the whole nation, and nowhere more deeply mourned than by all the people of the State we both represent, has repeated a statement which I have shown could not have been made by the President and was not made by the President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Maryland has expired.

Mr. McCOMAS. My colleague is entirely mistaken in his statement of the conversation with President McKinley which occurred in my presence.

Mr. BERRY obtained the floor.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Will the Senator from Arkansas yield to me?

Mr. BERRY. I have only fifteen minutes. Otherwise I would. It would deprive me altogether of the right to speak, according to the arrangement.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I desire to say merely this——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BERRY. I will yield if it does not come out of my time.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I must reply to the statement of my colleague.

Mr. BERRY. But I can not yield if it is to come out of my time. But for the arrangement by which fifteen minutes only is to be given to a speaker I should be glad to yield to the Senator from Maryland. He will have an opportunity later.

Mr. President, a little more than three years ago, in December, 1898, the Republican party and the Republican administration had the choice between peace and war in the Philippines. It was a great responsibility thrown upon that party, and which they and they alone were to determine. It is due to the then President to say that he hesitated long before he determined what that policy should be. But having made that determination, and having issued a proclamation which brought about the war, the Republican party can not escape the responsibilities which come from it.

I understood the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] to say the other day that Mr. Bryan and the Democratic Senators who voted in favor of the ratification of the treaty were responsible for the consequences which followed. I thought that an unkind statement, coming from the Senator from Wisconsin, because day after day in the discussion of the treaty the Senators upon the other side of the Chamber urged and pleaded with Senators on this side to vote for the treaty, and no men were more eloquent in their pleadings than the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Wisconsin, and no men were more liberal in the promises they made as to what the President would do in giving this people their liberty. And yet, after having persuaded some of our friends over here to vote for the treaty, after having promised them, as the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Wisconsin did, that these people should be made independent, then comes the Senator from Wisconsin and reproaches these men for having done what he urged them to do and which they did, relying upon his promises.

Mr. President, I was not one of them. I told the Senator from Wisconsin on this floor that I did not trust their promises, and therefore that no power on earth could make me vote for the ratification of the treaty. Therefore I say it was unkind and unjust to attempt to thrust the responsibility upon Senators who, misled by their promises, gave their votes in favor of the ratification of the treaty.

But it was before the treaty was ratified that this policy had been inaugurated. When that proclamation was issued by the President in which absolute sovereignty and dominion were proclaimed it was the proclamation of war. Those people had fought for hundreds of years for liberty and believed they had it almost within their grasp. They had aided us in the contest. They believed the long-deferred time had come; and when that proclamation was made, came a proclamation, too, after the treaty was signed, but before it was ratified, wherein absolute sovereignty and dominion were asserted, it was only a question of time when the conflict would come. When a people with arms in their hands, who had fought for three hundred years for liberty, with the belief that they had won it, were suddenly deprived of their hopes, it was the most natural thing on earth for the conflict to come.

But these Senators seek to shift the responsibility on Democratic Senators, and yet they say that their policy has been a success. It seems to me that if you really thought your policy had been a success you would not try to put the responsibility for it upon others.

We say it has been a miserable failure. You say it has been a success. That policy has already cost the Government of the United States $500,000,000, and no dollar has been returned. That policy has cost the lives of more than 10,000 of our soldiers and has sent 1,000 more to insane asylums. That policy has brought sorrow and pain and despair to thousands of American households. That policy has brought ruin and destruction upon a far-off people who never injured us, but who aided us in the war with Spain. You have burned their houses and desolated their homes. You have killed, as the Senator from Massachusetts says, a hundred thousand men and at least some of their women and children, and all of this has come from your policy which you say has been a success.

Not only that, but this policy has brought forth a Commission, clothed with arbitrary power, which has made it a crime for one of those people to breathe a hope for liberty; a Commission which has denied them the writ of habeas corpus, which has denied them the right of trial by jury, which has denied them the right of free speech. And yet you say that policy has been a success. What do you mean by success? In what way has it been beneficial to the American people?

All this has been done. Three years have rolled by and yet you dare not say to-day what is your ultimate purpose. You dare not stand upon this floor and assert that it is your purpose to admit the 10,000,000 Asiatics into the American Union with equal rights and equal privileges with the American citizens. There is not one man here who will say that he favors that policy. You dare not say that it is your intention for all time to come to govern them under the arbitrary and unconstitutional method now employed, and you have not the courage to say, "We made a mistake, we committed an error, and we will retrace our steps and yet do justice to these people."

Why should you not grant them independence? What reason can you give? We went to war with Spain for the sole purpose of freeing Cuba. Every man who testified before the Paris Commission, including Admiral Dewey and General Merritt, said these people were more competent for self-government than the Cubans. If we were willing to give money, if we were willing to give the lives of our soldiers to make the Cubans free and independent, can any just man tell me why we should not give it to the Filipinos, when it would not cost us one dollar or one life? No man yet has ever given a reason why in that proclamation we should not have offered them their ultimate freedom. If there had been one word or one sentence in the proclamation which promised them independence, even in the far-off future; if there had been one word that the executive department of this Government favored a policy of that kind; if there had been a single hope or a single light held out to them, there would have been no war. Do you not think it would have been better, do you not think it would have been more honorable, to give them that promise, and thereby save all the bloodshed that has followed? You can not shirk the responsibility, because you deliberately pursued that course.

Mr. President, I have no hope that anything I can say will induce you to retrace your steps. It is too late to right all the wrongs which have been committed. It is too late to bring back $500,000,000 which we have expended. It is too late to restore the lives of our 10,000 soldiers who have found graves in that far-off land. It is too late for that, but it is not too late to do justice. All seasons and all times ought to be a place for justice, and if you are to be true to the traditions of our Government, if you are to be true to all we have ever professed and all we have ever taught and all we have ever believed, if you are to relieve this Government from the stain which has been put upon the fair name of the Republic by doing an injustice to these people, you yet can in a measure redeem what you have done. You may not erase the blot altogether, but you can obscure it, and you can thereby regain the confidence of the American people in the belief that this Government shall be what it was intended to be, that it shall still be the friend of liberty wherever it may be. You may yet, if you will, retrace your steps and tell these people that ultimately you intend to make them free. That will bring peace within thirty days. If you do that, while I say now it will not fully atone for the wrongs done, yet it will hold out to those in every land and in every clime the hope that the American Republic is still the friend of liberty and is still opposed to oppression, come from whatever source it may.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, I have had a good deal of hesitation, amounting, I may say, almost to timidity, in taking any part at all in this controversy, and that feeling of timidity has increased rather than diminished as the debate has drawn toward a conclusion on account of the bewildering variety of talents which have been brought into action.

There are some questions, and I have all along felt that this is one of them, the proper solution of which requires the counsel and the good will of everybody. There are situations in which a country like this ought to present a united front, and in which contentions of a merely partisan character are not only damaging to the public interests, but injurious to the national prestige.

The questions presented in this bill, if I have got the meaning of it correctly, are comparatively simple. It is not a question of constitutional law. It is a question of practical public policy in our commercial relations with the Philippine Islands. The bill proposes to reenact the Taft Commission schedules in the dealings with these islands of the outside world, including ourselves, and it proposes to cut the Dingley rates 25 per cent in the dealings of the islands with us.

I have been informed that an amendment is pending proposing to enlarge the commercial opportunities of the islands in their dealings with us, and while I do not intend to set my own opinions against the judgment of the committee which has had this matter in charge, I can not forbear to confess here my conviction that the time will come when we will, in order to preserve a manageable situation in these islands, be required to establish conditions of trade comparatively free, so far as their dealings with us are concerned.

There is an incongruity which the world has not been slow to perceive in the policy of permanently protecting ourselves from our own possessions, especially those possessions which are so situated that they have to buy nearly everything they consume and export nearly everything they produce.

The other day I asked a Democratic friend on the other side of this Chamber how it happened that when this great opportunity arises for constructive legislation, for creative work in the affairs of our Government, we are treated to a six weeks' controversy on matters that are dead and gone, which passed out of the consideration of Congress more than two years ago. My friend replied that he and his colleagues were engaged in making a platform for the Democratic party. I suppose that may be taken at least as an explanation of the singular attitude of our affairs here to-day.

Now, that platform has already fallen down under the feet of the Democratic party. The Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] a moment ago said that this question had never before been presented to the American people. That is not my recollection about it. My memory about it is that it was presented to the American people two years ago, and under auspices at least as encouraging as surround it to-day.

It had the advocacy of the most famous Democrat living in the United States, the leader, and the tried leader of the Democratic party, a man who hardly yet 40 years of age, by the unaided force of his own genius and his own character, has made himself the well-beloved leader of millions of people in the United States; and it had also an alliance, more or less valuable, with the venerable Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] and others scattered about sparsely over the United States.

At least that alliance held good while Congress was in session, though I am pleased to say that the moment that honored and indefatigable student of American history got home he made haste to say that the success of the Democratic party, while it might possibly save the Declaration of Independence, would probably cost the American people all their other worldly possessions.

It was presented on the part of our Democratic friends as well as it will ever be presented again, and with the encouragement and help of many people who before that time had only a languid interest in the Democratic party. It was submitted to the American people, and, in my humble opinion, it was disposed of finally as an issue in the politics of the United States.

I heard a Senator say the other day that a matter is never settled in this country by a mere count of heads and clack of tongues. That may be true, but it would be at least a valuable exercise for our Democratic brethren to inquire into the reasons why that propaganda in favor of human liberty under the patronage of the Democratic party failed to make headway in the United States two years ago.

I intend to point out, if my fifteen minutes last, some of the morbid aspects of this platform which in my judgment make it incurably defective and fatally objectionable to the country. I wish to point out in the first place that it disparages the Army of the United States. Now, I have heard several eulogies on the Army in this Chamber, followed almost instantly by the most vehement and most unaccountable slanders and libels ever uttered against a national army in the history of the world.

I have sat in this Chamber and heard the officers of the United States Army denounced for murdering prisoners and shooting down helpless men after they had surrendered. I have heard letters read and rumors set afloat here that the Army is an organized scheme of cruelty in the Philippine Islands. Of course, nobody pretends to believe such a thing, and I honor the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts for rising in his place on Saturday and calling a halt on the scattering of these wicked scandals against the good name of the Army of the United States.

I have read this literature both since this session of Congress began and before Congress met, and I say here that not a single syllable has been put on record which would be accepted in any court of justice. Every allegation is a hearsay, in most cases two or three times removed, and I have felt that the United States Army ought to be protected from a campaign of that sort. Our soldiers over there have had a hard task. They are on the other side of the world, in a land of strangers, far from their homes. They are doing their duty—officers and men alike—with fidelity and with heroism. Some of them have made themselves famous in the legends and traditions of the service. They have had enough to bear—burdens enough—without hearing a constant fusillade in the rear from so-called politicians in the United States.

I say to you that the American people will not tolerate a campaign of that sort very much longer. The patriotic sentiment of the nation everywhere is, always has been, and always will be, God bless the soldiers of the United States Army wherever they are encamped.

Again, this platform is fatally defective because it disparages the Government of the United States. Whatever has been done in the Philippine Islands has certainly been done in the light of day. I was interested as I listened a moment ago to the Senator from Washington trying to lighten the weight of the accusation made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] that these bitter denunciations of the national policy fall, in reality, upon the late President of the United States.

How is it possible to attack with intemperate abuse our Philippine policy without desecrating the grave of William McKinley? My friend said he had great admiration for him, and in the same breath he denounced our proceedings in the Philippine Islands as an infamy, a perfidy, and a dishonor without a parallel in the annals of the United States.

We who have lived through these times know that no step has been taken without the counsel of William McKinley. We know, what the Senator from Washington does not seem to know, that the former President was not a weakling driven by the evil influence of others.

We know that in every step of this great transaction he himself gave to the policy of the United States the weight of his influence and the value of his public counsels; and it is not possible, whatever may be said on either side of this Chamber, to utter a railing accusation involving the character of the Government of the United States, filling the air with charges of perfidy and dishonor and tyranny, without covering with degradation and reproach the central figure in the progress of these times—the man whose name can not be separated from this epoch in the national life, and whose grave, yonder at Canton, has become a shrine for the pilgrimage of the human race in all ages.

Again this platform disparages the people of the United States. We sat in this Chamber, Saturday, and heard the American people described as a "set of asses." We sat in this Chamber and heard the American people derided as so besotted as not to be open to Democratic arguments; and I could not listen without feeling that this Democratic attack upon the national policy belittles the whole character and purpose of the American people.

They have entered upon the administration and management of far-off islands with doubts and uncertainties and misgivings. They have taken, step after step, many of them in the dark, but judging from what I know of the American people, and what I was able to find out from the last election returns, that they are walking steadfastly and calmly, aware of the difficulties and dangers that have surrounded us, and true to their national characteristics, they intend to go through with this work in the fear of God, even without the aid of the Democratic party.

This Democratic platform has this morning been paraded to confute those who still cherish the faith of our fathers in the Providential government of this world. I have inherited an old-fashioned belief that nations are subject to a guidance by powers somewhat higher than our poor human wisdom.

If I did not believe, I will say to the Senator from Washington, that there is a less fallible direction in our affairs; that there is a wisdom in the concerns of men somewhat more perfect than is found in the streets of Washington or Paris or London or Berlin, I would despair both of civil government and of human society itself; and I do not regard it, as the Senator from Washington seems to regard it, as an evidence of weakness in the character of the fallen President of the United States that in the midst of the darkness which has surrounded the American people as they have tried to deal with these difficult and complex questions, he more than once publicly avowed his dependence on the arm which is almighty and recognized with reverence our divine commission to stand in the arena of the world's great affairs, as the obedient servants of mankind. I am not ashamed of that philosophy.

If I read the history of the United States correctly, this platform is a disparagement of every stage in our national growth. Even these pleas in behalf of liberty, these citations more or less accurate from the Declaration of Independence, are not new. They have beset the footsteps of the great statesmen who have guided the enlargement of our frontiers in other generations.

For my part, I have no fear for human freedom, and I will say also that I have very little patience with a man on any side of this Chamber who thinks that the cause of civil liberty will stand a better chance under the proclamations of the military chieftains of the Malay tribes in the islands of the Pacific than it does under the flag of the American Republic. [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The occupants of the galleries must understand that under the rules of the Senate no marks of approval or disapproval are permitted, and if repeated the galleries will necessarily be cleared.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri offers an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the bill the following as a new section:

SEC. 8. Nothing herein contained shall be held to mean that the United States intends to incorporate the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands into citizenship of the United States, nor is it intended to retain permanently said islands as an integral part of the United States; but it is the intention of the United States to establish on said islands a government suitable to the wants and conditions of the inhabitants of said islands, to prepare them for local self-government, and in due time to make such disposition of said islands as will best promote the interests of the citizens of said States and the inhabitants of said islands.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, this amendment is identical in its provisions with the McEnery resolution, which was adopted by the votes of Republican Senators in 1898, after the ratification of the Paris treaty.

It is not my purpose to enter into a discussion of the general question which has occupied the attention of the Senate for the past six weeks. I simply wish to emphasize the fact that the only successful attempt in either House of Congress to offer to the people of the Philippines local self-government and independence has come from the Republican party in this Chamber. If anything has been said in this debate more frequently than anything else, it is that while hostilities are going on in the Philippine Archipelago any suggestion of independence or self-government in the Philippine Islands is giving aid and comfort to the enemy, and we have been told that those of us who even dared to criticise in the slightest degree the conduct of the war after the ratification of the Paris treaty are perilously near to treason itself.

Now, Mr. President, I should like to know from any of my friends upon the other side if we are guilty of giving aid and comfort to the enemy by any of the remarks or amendments we have offered contemplating self-government and independence for the Filipinos, in what position have Republican Senators, embracing all the leaders in this Chamber, placed themselves by voting for the McEnery resolution in 1898? I repeat, that the only successful attempt to offer self-government and independence to the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands has come from the Republicans themselves, and they were the first to tender aid and comfort to men who had arms in their hands against the Government of the United States.

The McEnery resolution was adopted by a vote of 26 to 22 five days after the battle had been fought in front of the walls of Manila, where it was said 4,000 Filipinos were killed, wounded, and captured.

Mr. President, let me say for myself that, so far from desiring to give aid and comfort to the enemy resisting the authority of the United States, I deplore the existence of that war. Although I sympathize with every people upon the face of the earth struggling for self-government and independence, if my voice could reach the Filipinos to-day I would advise them to cease this hopeless struggle, which can only result in the loss of blood and the expenditure of treasure, and can not benefit the Filipinos themselves, and certainly not the people of the United States.

While I say this, I wish it to be distinctly understood that I will not cease to oppose, so long as I can, the unnecessary, cruel, and unconstitutional methods adopted by the Republican party in carrying on this war. I do not abdicate, while I deplore the existence of this strife in the Philippine Islands, the right as a Senator and citizen to declare that the Constitution of the United States is supreme, and that it can not be violated by members of Congress in either House unless they deliberately violate their oaths to support that instrument.

The greatest evil that can befall the people of the whole world is the destruction of free and constitutional government upon this continent. We are engaged in the great experiment of the people governing themselves; and if that experiment is a failure, a calamity greater than the destruction of all the islands of the ocean with all their inhabitants has fallen upon the human race and upon the cause of liberty and human rights.

Sir, I shall not indulge in any theological discussion such as we have just heard from the eloquent Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], nor will I apply offensively what was said once in the British Parliament that the last refuge of a hypocrite is religion. Whenever our mistakes and crimes and follies are placed at the door of Providence, we may be very certain that we can give no adequate and sufficient reason for conduct which all the world sees to be wrong and the effects of which we seek to evade by placing the responsibility upon a higher power.

Never, Mr. President, will I vote to place in the hands of any one man what has been given to the President of the United States by what is known as the Spooner enactment, placed in the Army appropriation bill of the Fifty-sixth Congress. I was astounded the other day, long as I have listened to amazing statements in this Chamber, when the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] declared that the Spooner law, as I have said, in the Army appropriation bill, was framed after the Louisiana act of 1803 and that the Constitution gave to the President as great a power in itself, proprio vigore, as was conferred upon the Chief Executive by these two legislative enactments.

Mr. President, there is no more similitude between the Spooner law and the act of 1803 than between night and day, or fire and water, or truth and falsehood.

In 1803 the Congress of the United States passed an act giving to President Jefferson the right to fill all offices then existing in the Louisiana Territory and to preserve peace and order until Congress should see proper to apply a systematic code of laws to that newly acquired Territory. The Spooner bill creates an autocracy as unlimited as that of Russia or Turkey. It gives to the President of the United States, in so many words, the power to create offices in the Philippines, to appoint such officials as he pleases, and to give them such powers as he thinks necessary. It gives him the power of life and death, the power to take property without compensation, the destruction of all the rights which the Constitution of the United States gives to every human being beneath our flag. There can be no pretense that this enactment was intended for any other purpose than to make the President of the United States an autocrat without limitation upon his power in any regard.

More than that, Mr. President, this act does not apply alone to the Filipinos. It applies to every man, whether a citizen of a foreign country or of the United States, who for business or pleasure is found in the Philippine Islands. No citizen of this country is exempt from the unlimited power conferred by this act upon the Chief Executive of the United States.

I ask the other side where in the Constitution is found their right to confer any such power upon the Chief Executive. If there is one thing marked out in the Constitution more distinctly and emphatically than any other, it is the independence of the three great branches of the Government—the executive, the legislative, and the judicial. Yet by the Spooner enactment all the legislative powers and all of the judicial powers are conferred upon the Chief Executive and he can do as he pleases, when he pleases, and how he pleases, without regard to Congress or even the Supreme Court of the United States.

It was not enough that the President of the United States construed his power to mean that the bill of rights even did not obtain in the Philippine Islands unless he permitted it to be done, and therefore he instructed the first Commission which went to the islands that the bill of rights by his will and his pleasure should be effective in those far-distant islands.

The Spooner enactment goes further, and it declares emphatically that the Chief Executive can fill all offices, give all powers, suspend all laws and privileges as to every man, woman, and child within those islands.

Mr. President, I am not here to-day to indulge in any laudation of the spirit of liberty which has heretofore actuated the American people, but I am compelled to say that commercialism has taken possession of this entire question. I am almost afraid, after the philippic of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], to mention the Declaration of Independence and Washington's Farewell Address. We read them from force of habit, but who pays any attention to them practically in our legislation here in Congress?

Professor Schurman told us in his eloquent address that the people of the United States desire to give the Filipinos independence and that we are governed by the great law of "do unto our neighbor as we would have him do unto us."

Mr. President, if the vote were taken to-morrow, with the promise of higher prices and increased commercial activity, it would be more than doubtful whether any single State in this Union would vote to withdraw the troops of the United States now from the Philippine Islands. The golden rule has had a new interpretation, the interpretation of David Harum, not to do unto others as you would they should do unto you, but "do unto others as you believe they would do unto you, and do it quick." [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, the discussion of the bill under consideration, "to provide temporary revenue for the Philippine Islands," has taken a wide range. The policy of the United States in holding the islands and the methods thus far adopted for their government, putting down the rebellion against our authority, establishing civil government by the Taft Commission, the acts and doings of the civil and military officers, and the general policy of the Administration in regard to these islands have not only been opposed, but at times most bitterly assailed. Nothing done by the Government in the Philippines seems to have satisfied the minority; some are even opposed to subduing the rebellion; others sympathize with the Filipinos in their opposition to our flag and our laws.

The dominant party in Congress is substantially united in all the Government has done or is trying to do in the Philippines, while there is no unanimity in the views of the minority. In respect to these and other great public questions the minority is agreed only on one point—opposition to almost everything proposed by the dominant party. Some of the minority favor giving up the Philippines, "the scuttle policy," some favor holding them under a protectorate, some having them made independent and allowing the Filipinos to govern themselves, and others favor withdrawing the Army.

PHILIPPINES TERRITORY OF THE UNITED STATES.

The Philippine Archipelago belongs to and is territory of the United States. Article 3 of the treaty with Spain says:

> Spain cedes to the United States the archipelago known as the Philippine Islands. * * * The United States will pay Spain the sum of $20,000,000 within three months after the exchange of ratifications of the present treaty.

This article clearly ceded the right of sovereignty, jurisdiction, and ownership of the Philippine Archipelago to the United States, to which Spain had an undisputed title for three hundred years.

The treaty was ratified by the Senate, Democrats voting for the same under the advice of their Presidential candidate at that time, William Jennings Bryan.

But the Supreme Court of the United States has put the question at rest by declaring that the Philippine Islands are part of and territory of the United States.

In the case of "The Diamond Rings," decided October term, 1901, the court uses this language:

> By the third article of the treaty Spain ceded to the United States "the archipelago known as the Philippine Islands," and the United States agreed to pay to Spain the sum of $20,000,000 within three months. The treaty was ratified; Congress appropriated the money; the ratification was proclaimed. The treaty-making power, the executive power, the legislative power concurred in the completion of the transaction.
> The Philippines thereby ceased, in the language of the treaty, "to be Spanish." Ceasing to be Spanish, they ceased to be foreign country. They came under the complete and absolute sovereignty and dominion of the United States, and so became territory of the United States over which civil government could be established. The result was the same although there was no stipulation that the native inhabitants should be incorporated into the body politic, and none securing to them the right to choose their nationality. Their allegiance became due to the United States and they became entitled to its protection.

CONGRESS HAS THE RIGHT TO GOVERN THE ISLANDS.

Being territory of the United States, Congress has the right, and it is its duty under the Constitution, to govern the Philippine Islands as it may see fit. Section 3 of Article IV of the Constitution says:

> The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States.

The treaty and decision of the Supreme Court make the Philippine Islands territory of the United States and settle the question of sovereignty and ownership. The Constitution settles the question how territory of the United States shall be governed by conferring this power on Congress. Unless Congress can govern these islands there is no other authority or power under our Constitution that can; they are in the charge and keeping of Congress, and Congress must meet this responsibility whether the Filipinos or their sympathizers are pleased or not. The Filipinos, according to the decision of the Supreme Court, owe the United States allegiance and the United States owe them protection and good government. The Republican party will see that both debts are discharged.

The Democratic party favored the war with Spain, which gave us the Philippine Archipelago, helped to ratify the treaty, but seemingly wish now to avoid the results of the war and carrying out the obligations of a treaty which could not have been ratified except with their aid.

The United States can not surrender its jurisdiction and sovereignty over the Philippine Islands. No nation ever gave up territory ceded by treaty following a war, especially where a large consideration was paid, as set forth in the treaty; it is unnatural for a nation to give up territory acquired in this way. An individual rarely parts with real estate for nothing, if it can be helped, and a nation never with its territory unless obliged to do so.

QUESTION DIFFICULT, BUT MUST BE MET.

Difficult and serious questions arise in considering what is best to be done with the Philippine Islands and how to govern them. Questions of this kind, however, are not new to the people of the United States. They were raised when Florida was acquired from Spain in 1815, and more seriously following the treaty with France in 1803, which gave us the Louisiana purchase, and were raised following the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo in 1848, by which New Mexico, Colorado, California, and Arizona were ceded to the United States by Mexico.

In the case of the Louisiana Purchase, stretching from the Gulf of Mexico to British Columbia and Oregon, now covering 12 States, with a population in 1890 of 11,232,439 freemen, with an area of 875,025 square miles, being seven times larger than the Philippine Archipelago, there was at the time of its acquisition relatively only a handful of people capable of self-government in all this vast territory. There were a few half-civilized Indians, and the balance were savages, numbering about 200,000. The conditions were about the same in the territory ceded by Mexico in 1848, except there came to us under this cession a foreign people who did not speak our language and knew as little of our institutions as the Filipinos, and in many respects resembled the civilized Filipinos.

When the Louisiana purchase was made, doubt was expressed as to the power of the Government to make it part of the United States and whether it was constitutional. Even Mr. Jefferson doubted the constitutionality of acquiring the territory and making it into States. There were all sorts of questions raised as to what disposition to make of this territory, how to govern it, just as are raised now in the case of the Philippines. The territory acquired from France and from Mexico were then much farther from the East and from Washington than are the Philippines now.

In 1867 we acquired, under a treaty with Russia, the Territory of Alaska, with an area of 577,393 square miles, and a population nine-tenths of which was Indians and the balance Russians. These three large accessions to the territory of the United States furnish precedents as to what may be done in the case of the Philippines, especially in the Louisiana purchase and the territory ceded by Mexico under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo. In the case of the Louisiana purchase the Government proceeded, without considering the question of the consent of the governed, to organize for the civilized inhabitants a Territorial form of government; and as to the semicivilized and savage portion of the inhabitants, they have since 1803 almost continuously until within the last twenty years been in open hostility to the United States, and we have maintained an army to keep them in subjection, and now they are living at peace and learning the arts of civilization after all these years of hostility. What was done in this case can and will be done in the Philippines. We had the same experience in the territory ceded to the United States by Mexico, with about the same results.

GIVE THE CIVILIZED A TERRITORIAL FORM OF GOVERNMENT.

It is claimed that in the city of Manila, with 300,000 inhabitants, there are cultivated, educated, and refined people, as well as in portions of the other islands, for which a Territorial form of government is well suited. First of all we must put an end to the war, stop the rebellion, compel respect for the flag and sovereignty of the United States, and obedience to its laws; then give these civilized inhabitants just such form of Territorial government as is proper and best suited for them and their needs.

The form of Territorial government for the civilized portion of the Philippines might be varied according to the exigencies of the case. It might be somewhat different from that adopted for our other Territories, but fashioned after the same. Treat the savages as we have treated our savage Indians. We have dealt with semicivilized people and savages for one hundred years, and there is no reason why we should not deal with the savages in the Philippines as we have done with our savage Indians from the beginning of the Government.

Take the case of Alaska. Congress governs it without even a Territorial form of government; it has established a court, some ports of entry, and appointed a marshal. The code for the government of Alaska was adopted by Congress, every Democrat in the Senate voting for it; it made laws for the people of Alaska upon every possible subject, provided methods of taxation on all business, going so far in section 460 of the code as to specify the license tax upon saloons, boarding houses, hotels, banks, billiard rooms, brokers, bowling alleys, cigar stores, meat markets, peddlers, and nearly every other kind or sort of business, and not one word was said about the consent of the governed or the power of Congress to make these laws and impose these taxes.

The people of Alaska had no part in making these laws—none whatever—were never consulted. Why should the Filipinos fare better than the people of Alaska or the people that came to us under the Louisiana purchase? The only difference is, the people of Alaska, after the cession, did not instantly engage in rebellion against our flag and authority, but became peaceable and law-abiding citizens. It is possible, however, had they organized a rebellion against the Government they would have had more active sympathizers in the United States against governing them and taxing them without their consent, but they did not get up a rebellion and therefore are not entitled to consideration at the hands of the minority.

CONSENT OF THE GOVERNED HAS NEVER BEEN ASKED IN THE TERRITORIES.

The consent of the governed was not asked in Alaska nor in the territory ceded by France and by Mexico. In all this national experience, covering not only vast territory with sparsely settled peoples, savages and semicivilized, Congress never asked the consent of the governed, but went on under the Constitution to provide such needful rules and regulations from time to time as it deemed best.

From the beginning Congress has at all times and everywhere compelled respect for the flag and obedience to its laws. It must follow the same course in the Philippines. Those who are civilized, worthy, and deserving, and who can appreciate it, should have a territorial form of government; those who can not should be governed and controlled as the Indians have been.

There is no other method or rule to be adopted in the case of the Philippine Islands than the one we have adopted and followed in dealing with acquired territory and the inhabitants thereof for a hundred years. Congress can not shrink from the task because there are difficulties in the way; it never has and never will. It can not give up these islands to the inhabitants nor to any foreign power; this is impracticable and impossible; and, considering our growing commerce and interests in the Orient, to become larger and more important as years go by, our relations to other countries, and our treaty obligations, we should not give them up even if we could do so justly and honorably. Much has been said in this debate about the sedition laws passed by the Taft Commission. These laws do not differ materially from the laws of West Virginia on this subject. If my constituents can stand them, I think the Filipinos can and should.

I have not the least doubt but that these islands will prove of great benefit to the United States in many ways in establishing and increasing our trade and business in the Orient, and in the end will be helpful to the people of the islands in uplifting them, giving them what they have never enjoyed—protection to life, liberty, and prosperity and the blessings of free government. I know this may be called commercialism, but whenever we can honorably extend our trade and commerce in any part of the world we should do it, and more particularly when we can by simply discharging our duty to people who have come to us by the fortunes of war and for whom we are responsible.

We can not bind the people and future Congresses by what we may do now in the way of promises as to giving the Filipinos statehood or absolute independence or establishing a protectorate over them. The most we can hope to accomplish is to end the rebellion in the islands, establish law, peace, and order, and give the civilized people such form of government as best suits their necessities, going forward doing our whole duty as we see it with the lights before us, leaving the rest to those who come after us.

The Republican party only insists upon carrying out the unbroken policies of the Government in respect to governing the people in acquired territory for a hundred years, having always dealt justly and fairly with them. It will insist at all times on subduing rebellion wherever it exists and upholding the flag wherever it floats on land or sea. It never had and never will submit to or even temporize with organized rebellion against the sovereignty of the United States.

CONDITIONS IN THE LOUISIANA PURCHASE THE SAME.

The conditions are not widely different from those in the territory that came to us by the Louisiana purchase, and particularly in the territory ceded by Mexico. The people that came to us by the cession from Mexico did not speak the English language, they were foreign to us, not accustomed to our institutions, and did not understand our laws. In the case of the Louisiana purchase the people complained of tyranny and oppression, protested, and said they were unjustly treated, but Congress under the Constitution did its plain duty. It made needful rules and regulations respecting this territory and its inhabitents.

Nearly every argument now put forth by the minority was then urged, but met, and the country moved forward. We are familiar with what has followed. There were doubts in the minds of the leading men in and out of Congress as to the power of the Government to create Territories with the view of making them States of the Union, but the difficulties were overcome and the apprehension, doubts, and fears disappeared. Ample authority was found in the Constitution to do what was done, and there is ample authority under the Constitution for what is being done now in the Philippines.

ISLANDS WILL PROVE BENEFICIAL TO THE UNITED STATES AND THE FILIPINOS.

The outcome of our efforts will be, under our beneficent Government, that the Filipinos in time will prosper, become law abiding, happy, and contented, enjoying the blessings of liberty and free government, which they have never known before. Let our Government put forth nearly a hundred years of efforts in the Philippines, as it has in the territory acquired by the Louisiana purchase; give it the same time and opportunity it has had in the territory acquired from Mexico under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, and I predict the results will be equally gratifying, and no Democrat in or out of Congress, in the Philippines or elsewhere, will be found to complain. Nations do not live for a day or a century, but for thousands of years, and they take time to work out great problems and difficult questions.

The day will come when we will have a population of twenty or thirty millions of prosperous, contented, law-abiding, free citizens in the Philippines enjoying the protection of our flag and the blessings of free government. Let us hope the United States will do better in the Philippines than the Dutch have done in Java and Sumatra, both prosperous islands with contented people. I believe we can govern people in far-off islands and in the Tropics better than European countries or monarchies, giving them better opportunities and better government. To say it could do less would be to admit for certain purposes the great Republic is a failure.

The bill before the Senate is simply to provide temporary revenue and in every way in the interest of the people of the Philippine Islands, and should pass.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, in the limited time allowed for debate under the present order of business it is obvious to all that only general principles can be considered. The position of the Democratic party, as I understand it, on this question rests upon two general principles—one, that during the temporary occupation of the Philippine Islands which we propose trade between them and the United States shall be free, and that upon the establishment of a stable government there they shall be independent. All else is mere nonessential detail, and upon these two general propositions we appeal to the judgment and conscience of the American people.

Mr. President, that under the circumstances our commercial relations with the Philippines should be free is dictated alike by our honor and their industrial interests. When we succeeded to the sovereignty of the Philippine Archipelago, assisted by the allied insurgents then in revolt, it already enjoyed free trade with Spain, which gave it an open and reciprocal market for its products with 18,000,000 people. Notwithstanding this, notwithstanding our obligations to those allies and the clearly implied promises of our military officers previous to the land assault at Manila, it is proposed by the majority to erect a tariff barrier around them, applicable to us and to all other nations, a barrier which will repress their trade, stifle their commercial development, and make of them industrial bondsmen. The minority protest against this as an act of national ingratitude and injustice. Instead of this we propose a compliance with our implied obligations, the freedom of trade as respects the mother country, accorded to their dependencies by the most successful colonizing nations, and the consequent individual prosperity and industrial development which such a policy will bring.

To add to the oppressive and faithless character of the course of the majority it is without the shadow of excuse, for the duties to be imposed on trade between the islands and the United States are wholly unnecessary in an economical yet progressive administration of Philippine affairs.

But, sir, the purpose in imposing those taxes is plain. Though the inhabitants of those islands are already impoverished and in want, the glamour of conquest must be maintained and great salaries must be provided to tempt men of character and enterprise to become their rulers and the apologists of empire. The treasury of the insular government, already the most extravagant under like conditions in the world, must be kept filled to serve the spirit and the purpose of exploitation.

But back of this, more potent, perhaps, than all else, stand the avarice and greed of American trusts and monopolies, at whose instance the Republican party puts on and off its policies as a lackey changes his livery at his master's command. So far has this subserviency already gone that the protected interests through class legislation now not only reap unconscionable profits at home, but in many instances sell cheaper to foreigners than to their own countrymen. It is sad enough and humiliating enough, Mr. President, that the American people, drunk with temporary and subsidized prosperity and unmindful of their danger, shall be within the grasp of these combinations; but to deliver to them an alien, poor, and defenseless people approaches governmental infamy.

Not content with this condition of industrial servitude, the Republican party proposes indefinite political dependency and subjugation for the Filipino. Admitting, Mr. President, as all must do, our sovereignty there under international law, at the bar of conscience and in the great forum of public opinion the question of final retention of that sovereignty must be met and determined by the United States. Whether it was wise or unwise to accept that sovereignty in the beginning, whether we did it under the idea of finality, as some believe, or with a view of ultimately disposing of it, as others think, in my judgment we ought to relinquish it now, both because of the circumstances under which we acquired it and because it is inexpedient and unwise to retain it.

Whatever appeals may be made to our pride as a people, whatever specious and subtle argument may be offered to the contrary, whatever narrow denial may be entered of promises made, yet the material facts are that the Filipinos had long been in revolt against Spain, they had practically achieved their freedom before our forces landed on the islands, and at our instances they became our allies with the understanding on their part, which our officers did not until long afterwards controvert, that success would result in their independence.

Having sought and accepted their aid in battle, Mr. President, upon such conditions as these, to deny them the share in the allied victory which they expected and had a right to expect would be an act of perfidy unparalleled in the history of free and Christian people, and would leave an ineffaceable stain upon the character of the Republic.

But, Mr. President, aside from the question of honor involved, aside from the moral principle at issue, whether regarded from a commercial or political view, the sovereignty of the Philippines ought not to be retained. All the world knows the vast sums we are spending there, and unless history shall be reversed they will always be a care and a burden to us. After centuries of experience, after the enormous waste of blood and treasure to improve their systems of government, there is not an Asiatic colony to-day which is self-sustaining. If all the trade of the Philippines which will come to us because of our sovereignty is placed against the cost of wars and armies and navies their retention will involve, or if it could be weighed in the balance with the precious lives that will be sacrificed, we would turn from it as profitless and as unworthy of our mission as a people.

In a still more sordid sense this trade is valueless in comparison with its cost, for the Asiatics do not use or need or purchase American or European products except to a very limited degree. In the Anglo-Saxon colonies, with a population of 17,000,000, in 1897 the imports amounted to $460,000,000, while the 730,000,000 of Hindoo and Mongolian inhabitants only imported that year $530,000,000.

When we turn from budgets and trade, countless obstacles arise to political union with the Filipinos; but alienage of race and civilization and the mortal wound which it would inflict upon our free institutions suffice for me. For myself, whatever others may think, above trade, above the dream of colonial possessions, above fleets and armies and martial glory, however enrapturing, give me our race undefiled, our civilization untarnished, and our institutions uncorrupted by oppression and the lust for power.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, at the proper time I shall move to amend this bill by adding a new section providing for an appeal to the general Board of Appraisers on questions of valuation and classification of Philippine products.

I shall also move to amend the clause in regard to foreign tonnage by inserting the date July 1, 1904, for the application of the coastwise laws; and, so far as I am concerned, I shall accept the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. HOAR] relating to the necessity of two witnesses in all cases of treason.

All the other amendments, Mr. President, I hope the Senate will vote down, and especially all large and general amendments relating to policy and sentiment, which I think have no place upon this tariff bill.

Mr. President, when this debate opened I discussed for an hour the merits of this bill and the purposes of its provisions. I have been led to believe since then that that speech in regard to the bill before the Senate was the only wholly irrelevant speech made. [Laughter.] The debate which followed began with the American Revolution, which lasted two days; then, by an easy transition, it passed to the character of a United States judge in Alaska; thence it returned to our entire conduct of the Philippine affairs from the time of the treaty of peace, and during that discussion, Mr. President, so much acrimony has arisen that we were finally witnesses to an incident on Saturday which I think we all deeply deplore. But, Mr. President, that was not a momentary incident. It grew out of the general character of the Philippine debate. In that debate, Mr. President, the ordinary decencies and proprieties of public discussion which have always characterized the United States Senate hitherto have all been rudely brushed aside; interruptions have increased in frequency until they have become mere disorder, and language of the most unseemly character has been freely used. The time has come, Mr. President, in my judgment, when it is the first duty of the United States Senate to restore the character of its debates by a rigid enforcement of its rules, and by more stringent rules, if necessary, to the high plane which has always caused them to be held in honor by the people of the United States.

Mr. President, it seems to me that it is possible to discuss this question in the Senate of the United States without calling one side traitors and the other side hypocrites and cowards. It seems to me that it is possible to debate this question of the Philippines without throwing every kind of slander upon the officers of the Army of the United States and without applying to them abusive epithets.

It also seems to me, Mr. President, that the time has come when, in the Senate of the United States, the Presidents of the United States, who, after all, are the heads of the nation, should have at least the respect which we accord to a debate in the House of Representatives.

Within the week, Mr. President, I have heard our dead President, honored above all men for his patriotism, his ability, and his generosity of soul, accused on this floor of deceiving one Senator deliberately and of bribing another Senator. I have heard him portrayed as a bloody tyrant, eager to cast down the Filipinos into ruin and oppression. I think, Mr. President, that debates of that character and aspersions of that nature should stop, and stop now.

In the few minutes which remain to me I do not desire to bring conflicting witnesses here; I do not want to reconcile one story with another; still less do I wish to discuss the foul anonymous charges which have found their way into this Chamber—charges emanating for the most part from busybodies outside, who can find no way to advertise their own virtues but by charging vice and crime upon all their fellow-beings.

Mr. President, I want simply to summon as witnesses in the few minutes that I have facts which can not be impugned. We went into the Philippine Islands three years ago; it is three years since we ratified the treaty of peace. War was then flagrant through all the Christian Filipino provinces. To-day there are 34 of the Filipino provinces with organized civil governments, withdrawn from military control. There are two Filipino provinces, Infanta and Principe, which are sparsely populated and on the eastern coast of Luzon which have not yet been organized, but which are at peace; there are four, Batangas, Laguna, Tayabas, and Samar, where there is still a smouldering insurrection fast sinking away into quiet.

We have brought peace to those islands. We have organized civil government in 34 provinces. The 9 provinces that are occupied by wild tribes and by Moros are at peace and have always been so. There is less brigandage there to-day than at any time under Spanish rule.

More than that, Mr. President, those organized civil governments have reelected their governors and municipal officers within the month under popular elections peaceably held. Governor Taft, unattended and practically alone, rode into the center of Luzon within a few months before he left and no man's hand was lifted against him.

We have put into those islands and scattered through the provinces outside of Manila 835 American school-teachers; they are in 445 towns, and in 200 of these towns there is no American garrison, and only one school-teacher has been molested in any part of those islands.

These are proofs of peace and quiet not to be refuted or sneered down, and the greatest proof of all, one that can not be denied, a witness whose honesty can not be assailed, as I have heard every other witness, no matter how honorable, attacked on this floor if his testimony did not coincide with the preconceived notions of the opposition—here, I say, is a witness that can not be impugned. A year ago we had 71,000 troops in the Philippines, to-day we have 41,000, and when the present orders of the War Department are carried out there will be only 26,000 troops left in the islands. There is a witness to the pacification that is going on and to the reduction of expenses which can not be overturned or set aside.

We have given the Filipinos schools. One Senator said it is oppression to teach them English, and I believe the editor of the Commoner says it is oppression to give them any education at all. So be it. I think the education we are giving them is a great and noble gift. We have given them efficient courts and quick justice. Mr. President, to go into a Spanish court, under the old rule, was a denial of justice; suits lingered, and lasted for twenty years. Now there is prompt justice. There were 90 prisoners in the Bilibid prison who had languished there for years, not knowing even the charge against them—men who had never been tried. They have all been released under the habeas corpus, which to-day in every organized province is a writ of right. We have brought them all these things, Mr. President—peace, justice, education. We have given to those people schools, habeas corpus, prompt courts, and a new code of legal procedure, and have started them on the road to civil government; and I say that the American people, sensible and wise, will know as they read that record that the three years have not been wasted and that every step has been in accordance with the wise and kindly policy of the President who is dead, carried out by his brave and patriotic successor who now holds his place.

Mr. President, we propose to go on and give these people more and help them further. In a bill which must pass before we adjourn we take back the lands of the friars, whose ownership is the greatest grievance those people have ever had, and return them to the natives. We give them all titles to their homesteads, which they have never had before; we give them a chance to work their forests, to open their mines, and, at the same time, an opportunity to American enterprise to build railroads and to develop the islands. We will settle the coinage and establish banks. We will go on in this path, and when Senators on the other side want us to utter vague promises of self-government, I say we are giving them self-government now, which is better than any promise. We are leading them in this way along the only road which can ever conduct them to independence, something that fine language and high-sounding resolutions can never do.

Mr. President, I do not underrate the commercial importance of the Philippines. I have never disguised my opinion of their value; but I say what took us there and what keeps us there, and the only valid reason for our expenditure of life and treasure, is our high duty, our clear responsibility, to those people, to ourselves, and to the world. We are not prepared to say now whether we will make them a State or give them independence under a protectorate, or absolute independence, or make them a self-governing colony like Canada or Australia, or whether we will hold them as a dependency. The time has not yet come for that. An attempt to settle the unknown future now would be dangerous to us and cruel to them. That is the question of another generation.

When the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] tells us what we dare not do, I will tell him what we dare to do, and that is to reject, while we are responsible for the Government, what the minority advises, and do what we conceive to be our duty as the party in control of all departments of the Government.

Here hard by our doors lies the island of Haiti. We have stood across the path; we said, as we were bound to say to all the nations of the earth under the Monroe doctrine, into that island you shall not come. The responsibility we would not allow to others we have cast aside ourselves, and those people calling themselves a republic—a mockery of the name—those people who are said to have self-government—the bitterest irony ever spoken—are sinking back into savagery, into fetchism and degradation. Within a week a traveler has told me that he has seen human flesh exposed for sale in the shops of that island. I say when self-government, so called, comes to that and results in barbarous misgovernment, and we have the opportunity and the duty and the power to prevent it, we are derelict to humanity if we fail. I do not want to see a repetition of Haiti in the Philippines in any degree or in any measure. It would be an eternal stain on the fair fame of the United States and upon our courage and honor as civilized men.

I believe if we withdraw from the Philippine Islands now it will mean blooodshed, anarchy, ruin, and the division of the islands among other powers less beneficent, less pitiful, less generous than ours. If we stay and go on as we are going on I believe we shall raise the Philippine people to self-government and put them in a position where they themselves can say intelligently what relations they wish to bear to us. When that day comes, and not before, it will be for them and for our successors here to determine that great question.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I shall cheerfully give my support to the substitute offered by the minority of the Committee on the Philippines and shall vote against the bill of the majority. Holding, as I do, that when the treaty of peace was ratified by the Senate this archipelago became a part of the United States, it is impossible for me to discriminate against them in the imposition of taxes. My interpretation of the Constitution is that we can not tax them with discrimination so long as they are a part of this country. Therefore I can not vote for the amendment offered by the distinguished Senators from Ohio and Oregon. There is no difference, in my opinion, between a 75 per cent reduction and a 25 per cent reduction. There is no difference between a reduction of 98 per cent and 2 per cent. It is not with me a question of schedules. I can not vote, in accordance with my oath of office, to tax them at all.

Mr. President, I left the Republican party and the United States Senate in 1896 not so much on account of the money question as because of the tendency of that party to allow the great corporations and the power of wealth undue influence in the councils of the Republican party. The bill before us is on the same lines; and if I had not left the Republican party for reasons which were sufficient to me then, I should have left it fifty times since after it started on this colonial policy. No one can deny or will deny now that when this bill shall have been passed this afternoon we will have a colony. The time has gone by when those on the other side attempt to deny it.

Mr. President, I do not impugn the motives of anyone who does not think as I do in regard to the Philippine Islands. It is my judgment, however, that the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] stated the motive which actuates the Republican party, not only in this Chamber, but outside of it. He said that the main reason was that the islands would be of value to us; that we would not let them go at any time, because they would be a valuable possession. The opinion is prevalent that it will be a profitable enterprise. It is not a question of duty or philanthropy or the uplifting of the Filipinos, but a question of gain and profit for us. Whether or not Senators on the other side of the Chamber and those outside who agree with them will admit the truth of that assertion, I firmly believe it is the underlying motive for their action. With the establishment of gigantic trusts and department stores in this country, we have gone very far toward accepting the statement that in the struggle for supremacy in trade only the fittest should survive, and the wealthiest and most powerful are the most fit.

Recognizing this tendency on the part of the Republican party, I am not sure that I would call them hard names even if they boldly avowed that their object in holding these people and their lands was their own commercial gain. I have already stated my belief that this is the object of the Republican party.

In my judgment they will be disappointed. Loss, not gain, must come to us. These people will not trade with us. There is very little we have which they want or ever will want. People of tropical countries do not need nor care for what we produce, and never will to any degree. What we sell there now we sell to foreigners mostly, and it will always be so. Our complaint against the Chinese in this country, who are the most industrious of all the Asiatics, is that they will not buy of us even while living here. Our merchants complain that the Chinese will not trade with them while earning their money in this country. They get their goods from home even while living here. They do not use our articles even while living in our midst. The Filipinos do not and will not want our goods, and would have nothing to buy them with if they did.

The Republicans intend to exploit the Philippines. They intend to grant franchises of all kinds and descriptions for railroads, for mines, to cut timber, etc., and they intend to sell the 60,000,000 acres of public land in large tracts, the limit to be 5,000 acres to any individual or corporation. According to Governor Taft, most of the 60,000,000 acres of public land is arable. Sixty million acres of land represents more arable land than there is in the States of California, Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, Utah, Nevada, and Colorado combined. It represents more land than there is land in the States of Indiana and Illinois.

The capitalists whom the Republican party proposes to invite to go to the Philippine Islands to exploit them, in addition to cultivating the lands and cutting the timber, will establish factories; and how are they to be conducted? Who is to perform the labor? I have talked with men representing our Government who have been there. I talked with one only last night. I will not give his name. He is a representative of our Government, and he says that they can not cultivate that country without Chinese and Japanese laborers. I have talked with other representatives of our Government who say the same thing. I will not give their names.

I will only quote Governor Taft. Every member of the Philippine committee knows of the close personal relations existing between Governor Taft and myself, and I would not, on any account, misrepresent him in the slightest degree or question his motives, but he was asked several times in regard to Chinese labor. I think I can safely say that he evaded it. He conveyed the impression, to my mind at any rate, that in that country the labor had to be performed by Chinese. He was asked this question:

Senator RAWLINS. I want to go a step further. Do you think it wise, in enacting a law, to dispose of these lands in any way that would lend encouragement to or extend the influence of those who would desire the introduction of Chinese labor to subserve their purposes in the islands?

Governor TAFT. What we want to do is to develop the islands, and certainly the attraction of capital, by offering what will return a reasonable profit, is our policy, and the sale of lands in tracts sufficiently large to attract capital is an essential part of that plan.

That is as close as he ever came to answering the question; but I assert that you can not exploit that country without Chinese labor.

In Hawaii, now, they are asking us to allow Chinese and Japanese to come in. They can not cultivate their sugar fields with their own labor or with any other except Chinese and Japanese, and in this country now the feeling in favor of Chinese exclusion is weaker than it ever was before. It will be somewhat difficult for us now to pass the proposed Chinese-exclusion act, and the demand will come from the Philippines, and you will accede to it, to allow the Chinamen to go in there in order to exploit that country, or it will not be exploited. White men can not and will not work in that clime, and the natives will not do it. The Hawaiians will not in the Sandwich Islands, and much less will these people living in a more tropical country.

I was opposed to the annexation of Hawaii. I am glad to say that I have been opposed to this departure all the way through. The capitalists who will be invited to go to the Philippines will establish great factories. They will establish, for instance, a cotton factory. They will employ a great many Chinese hands, because there are 400,000,000 Chinamen at their doors, for laborers. They will make goods as well as any other people can, under our guidance and superintendency, and put those goods in competition with us here. It will be so in regard to wool. They will get it from Australia and the Mongolian plains. It will be so in regard to iron. Gentlemen may say that by this bill you have demonstrated that you can put a tax on their goods and keep them out of this country. When they are at work there, if you keep the goods out of this country by law, you can not exclude them by law from other countries, and their goods will be in competition with ours either here in the United States or else in the other markets of the world, and especially in China. I say you can not exploit those islands without Chinese and Japanese labor, and, further, that the next step will be to allow them to come in here.

I went into a factory in Hankow, on the Yangtse River, and I saw 2,500 Chinese men and boys employed in a woolen factory, with only one white man, the superintendent, around the premises. The Chinamen were receiving the munificent salary of $1.75 a month and feeding themselves. They are so imitative that under skillful superintendents from America they can make just as fine goods as we make. The clamor, as I say, is now going on to let the Chinese and the Japanese enter the Hawaiian Islands, and the Japanese can not be kept out of the Philippines and the Chinese will not.

This whole thing appears to me to be wrong. Our nation has stood as the beacon light to all people in all climes who were struggling for freedom of thought and action and religion. We have invited them to come and live under our benign laws. We have allowed them to participate in all our affairs. We have given them citizenship and the right of the ballot after a short probation. We have assimilated them, and I say that our mission is to the white people of the world, and the hope of the white people of the world, in my judgment, lies between the country west of the Missouri River and the Pacific Ocean and north of that region in British Columbia. Let us not depart from the foundations. We have grown to be the greatest and the mightiest nation in trade by living under our own laws and not by annexing or trying to assimilate foreign people. It is time, it seems to me, for us to think a little of what is to come, and not do as those on the other side say, "Shut your eyes and blindly follow whatever we ask you to do." They twit us with being traitors if we even take a look into the future. They say, "The future will take care of itself. Follow us blindly now. We must not discuss what is to happen afterwards."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Idaho has expired.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I have not been impressed with the usefulness of this debate. I can not understand what good is to be accomplished by finding fault with what is already decided upon by this Government. I do not see why men should engage in criminations and recriminations about the fact. It seems to me it is our duty to consider pending questions; to give our attention to the duty of the hour. We have acquired the Philippines. Our title is perfect under the treaty we ratified and under the decision of the Supreme Court. Everybody knows that. We have undertaken to suppress rebellion there, and we have suppressed it mostly; it is nearly accomplished, and by appropriations made unanimously by both Houses. The Government of the United States is responsible for what has occurred. Why charge individuals? Why make long speeches that have no good purpose in view? Our duty is in the present. What are we doing?

As nearly as I can ascertain, we are extending the blessings of freedom to a people who never had them before. More has been done for the Filipinos in the last three years than was done for them by Spain in three hundred years, and the world knows it. They have in this period made more progress than was made by them during all their history.

The minority say we must establish government there and then turn it over to the Filipinos. When we have established government, when we have taught them the lessons of freedom, it will be time enough to decide what to do next. If you say you will do that now, it will be a question whether or not such a government has been established. The question will be, "When will it be done?" There will be no rest or content anywhere. We should go on as we have been going on in establishing governments and giving them, so far as we can, the privileges that we enjoy. Then will be the time to consider that question.

As to this particular bill, relating to the tariff, I would much prefer that there were no tariff upon goods produced in the Philippines and imported into this country. I am glad the Senator from Ohio has proposed an amendment reducing it from 75 per cent to 25 per cent. I would prefer that it should be free trade. The tariff established by the Commission, under the authority it possesses, against all the world was necessary in order to raise revenue to carry on the Philippine government. There is no other way of raising revenue but from a tariff on imports. The tariff duties that are paid on Philippine goods entering the United States will also go to that government. They will not be paid into the Treasury of the United States. The Government of the United States does not want them. They will be a small amount, anyway, but I do not think it is necessary for the Philippine government to have that amount. I think they can get an equal amount from other sources.

The idea that the Philippine Islands will interfere with the business of this country; that they will interfere with the raising here of tobacco or sugar or anything else, is very absurd. It will be so infinitesimal that it can not affect us. I am a protectionist on principal. I have always been. But that does not deprive me of my common sense. When I see that we can do a great good to the Filipinos by encouraging them without injuring our industries I want to have it done.

Furthermore, it must be remembered that the time is not far distant when we shall have free trade with them, because they are a part of our country. It is only a temporary arrangement, anyway. I prefer there should be no tariff, but I will vote for any reduction that may be proposed by amendment.

How can we help the Filipinos in establishing a government? We have helped people before. We will help them as we helped the New Mexicans. We will help them as we helped the people of Florida, and as we helped every people who have come under the jurisdiction of the United States. What did we do for New Mexico and California? We gave New Mexico a Territorial form of government. For four years we gave California a military government, but that military government was a mild one. The people elected their alcaldes. I lived under that government. It was not oppressive. It was American, breathing the American sentiment. The people did not rebel; they did not resist; and they had all the privileges they ever had. The State government came in after four years of that kind of government.

In New Mexico for half a century there has been a Territorial form of government, conferring all the blessings of free government that we enjoy. How can the Government of the United States be injured by governing as we always have governed the people whom we took under the jurisdiction of this country, giving them a Territorial form of government? That government is elastic. It can be changed to suit conditions. It is not arbitrary. You must let the people exercise the functions of government so far as they are capable. See how we have done with all our Territories—with Utah and other communities—hostile for the time being, but by allowing them to play government they have learned to govern themselves. That will be the case with the Philippine Islands, if we give them a chance to govern themselves, with organized institutions, letting them vote, etc., under our Territorial form of government. If they never learn it at all—if we can not teach them—then will be the time to consider the question of letting them go.

The Government of the United States has undertaken to extend free government to the Philippines. The world is watching our progress. Shall we fail? We never have. We will not now. How can the Government of the United States be injured by it? The Filipinos do not vote here. They do not participate in making our laws. Our Government will go on just the same as it always has. Their voting there for their local officers and for Delegates in Congress will not affect us. While the great experiment of extending to the Orient the free institutions we enjoy is being made, we will keep order; we will carry out the obligations that we have assumed toward Spain to preserve law and order and protect life and property there. We are bound to do that. Nobody is in favor of doing otherwise. The whole country is in favor of that. We will preserve order so that nobody will be injured.

Why in the name of humanity may not the people of the Philippines have an opportunity to learn this great lesson? They can not learn it by themselves. See what our example has already done. We first established a government here, and see how it spread over this continent. Gentlemen may say that some of the governments in Mexico and South America may not be good examples, but they are progressive governments. They are republics and are growing up to understand and appreciate liberty. Without our example what could they have done? Without our protection what would New Mexico have done? Without the Government of the United States having been spread over the Far West to the Pacific Ocean what kind of country would it have been? Mark the benign influence of the spread of free institutions. We now being in the Philippines, having been brought there by the fortunes of war, having acquired the islands legitimately, having undertaken to give an example in the Orient of the benign influence of free government, why should we not go on?

Why should we stop here and announce what you will do when you have given them free government, as the minority propose? We will know what to do with them when we have established free government. If the United States were to find fifty or a hundred years from now that they are fit to come in as States they will come in as States. Nobody proposes to let them come in as States now. Nobody proposes to do anything with them that could possibly affect our institutions. To extend to them Territorial privileges will not injure us. The system was wisely devised by the fathers. It is amply sufficient for all purposes that can possibly arise. It is the system by which free institutions have been spread over this vast continent to the West. It is the system by which they will continue to spread. It is an example that has elevated the whole continent of America.

It is our example, and shall we here, after having undertaken this great work, after having assumed this responsibility and carried it forward, with the expenditures of millions of money and the loss of thousands and thousands of lives, abandon it? Shall we say that our soldiers have died in vain? Shall we withdraw the flag in dishonor by saying that the cause is an unworthy one? Will the people of the United States consent that their graves shall be desecrated by the slander that they were murderers and pirates, and that the army must be taken away? No, no! The American people say that where the flag is planted and where it has been upheld by the blood and treasure of the American people there shall it remain.

It always has stood and it will not be torn down. The flag will not be torn down from the Philippines. They will have a free government, and if they can exercise the functions of a free government the world will say amen. If we adopt a policy of cowardice, leaving them now, it will disgrace the American name and dishonor the American dead who have fought under the flag of their country. But that will not be done.

The suggestion has been made that we will exploit that country; that we will steal its timber; that we will steal its franchises, and rob it. Where did the United States ever exploit a country? Did it exploit California, New Mexico, Texas, or Florida? Where in any of its acquisitions has the United States by its land laws and by its legislation exploited and ruined a country?

Will anybody believe that there will not be men here, and that there are not men here now and men who will come after us, who will guard the rights of the Philippines with the same jealousy that the rights of other sections of our country are guarded? There may be wrongs, but the American people have done all they could, and, continuing, will do all they can to prevent those wrongs. They have been successful, as the prosperity of regions newly acquired abundantly show. They show no exploitation. They show no injury and no ruin. On the contrary, they show growth in population, prosperity, and progress; and those we will have in the Philippines in due time. The American people have undertaken this task. The task may be a difficult one, but it is not the first time that our Government has undertaken a difficult task.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. BACON obtained the floor.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator from Georgia to allow me to put into the RECORD a paper concerning this very question, which is a respectful statement by a gentleman who served with the volunteer forces in the Philippines. I ask to have it printed in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ALDRICH. What is the subject?

Mr. TELLER. It is a speech by Captain Hall at a dinner in Boston. He is an imperialist. It is on the question of taxation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

AS SEEN BY THE OTHER SIDE.

On the occasion of the ninety-third birthday of Abraham Lincoln, the Middlesex Club gave a dinner at the Hotel Brunswick, in Boston, in which about 400 persons participated. The guests of the club were Hon. John D. Long, Maj. Gen. Daniel E. Sickles, Capt. Bordman Hall, jr., and Roscoe Conkling Bruce, the young colored man who is the Harvard class orator this year, all of whom delivered addresses. One of the most interesting was that of Captain Hall, who served with the volunteer forces in the Philippines. He is an ardent imperialist and fully approves our policy in those islands. While we do not agree with Captain Hall's views altogether, we gladly quote from his speech:

"Having got the islands into this situation, America's duty toward them, our new wards, and how we are impressing them, is a momentous question. I am sorry to say I fear that so far their experience with our Government is, on the whole, a sad one; and it is just here, before it is too late for our Republican majorities in Congress to mend matters, that I hope we may extend them relief. In revolting against Spain one of their chief grievances was the unbearable taxation. We Americans have now actually reenacted the identical old Spanish internal-tax system, a thing of which all our people and I believe most of our members of Congress know nothing. I have in my hand a copy of the official Manila edition of the industrial tax under which I myself have paid tribute. It is identical with the old Spanish tax and has marked on its cover, 'Translation of Spanish decree of June 19, 1890.' Under its provisions absolutely no business can be done without paying heavy tribute to the American civil government in the islands. For instance, all directors, agents, or representatives of companies, corporations, or banks must pay 5 per cent of their salaries. All employees receiving over $300 yearly must pay 2½ per cent. All corporations must pay 5 per cent of their profits. Importers and consignees of ships must pay $500.

"No stores can be opened without paying a heavy annual tax; for instance, in Manila stores selling jewelry must pay for the privilege $250; drug stores, $200; those selling pig iron, $150; those selling wrapping and writing paper, $100; those selling locks and nails, $30. If any of these stores desire to add petroleum, flour, or other articles, another $100 must be paid. Auctioneers must pay $150 for an annual license. Venders of meat in the street even must pay $6 a year; of thread and needles, $4.

"All kinds of manufacturing are also taxed; each horse power of a steam plant, for example, $3. A house with more than two hand looms is rated a 'factory,' and each loom is taxed 50 cents a year; a steam crane must pay $50 a year; carriages, $10; wagons and carts, $4. All professions and trades, likewise lawyers and doctors, $75; tailors, $50; watch repairers, $15; barbers, $6; carpenters and horseshoers, $3; amusements, 10 per cent of one full house for each 10 performances; newspapers, $30 a year.

"Then every one must pay a dollar poll tax. If a building is rented, 5 per cent of the rental must go to the government. Every bank check and dispatch must have its 1-cent stamp. Every receipt for payments for less than $7.50, a 1-cent stamp; if for more, a 5-cent stamp. All business account books must be submitted every quarter and have 25-cent stamps attached to the pages. No petition may be addressed to government officials, no legal proceedings of any kind carried on, unless they are written on government stamped paper, varying from 2½ cents to $2.50 for each four pages, according to the value of the matter concerned.

"Beyond all these internal taxes, he must pay a heavy tariff on all his goods, food stuffs, and machinery he needs from abroad, even though they do come from America, his newly adopted country, and may be only farm machinery or absolute necessities. In sending his staple products—sugar, tobacco, hemp, indigo, and rice—out of the islands to find a market he is confronted with another burden, an export tax, to go to this same American government in Manila. Nor even then are his difficulties at an end. Formerly he had a free market for his products in Spain; he would now naturally expect to find a substitute in the United States. In the past he has seen, and it was one of the things he most counted on for himself in seeking peace, Hawaii and Porto Rico given free entry into the United States for their products; in the last few months he has heard strenuous efforts made to give Cuba, a foreign country, a 50 per cent reduction. He must carry his products ten times as far, and yet the most generous suggestion for him—a dweller in American territory—is a reduction of half as much—25 per cent.

"In a land emerging from three years of desolating war, with many of its sugar mills and buildings burned and its machinery destroyed, the cattle plague last spring swept off 80 per cent of the water buffaloes—the only available power for plowing the land and moving the crops.

"Weighed down by taxation, unable to find a profitable market for his products, without employment for himself or his children, can it be wondered at if the Filipino exhibits signs of unrest and if those still in the field continue the struggle?

"I am, and hope I always shall be, a stanch and true Republican and an ardent supporter of Republican principles. But in the matter of our present treatment of the Philippines it is not a question of principles, but of policy, which is at issue. From this point of view, then, what can the Republican party here at home do that will make for permanent peace in the Philippines?

"In the first place, they can stop now, once and for all all, talk and agitation within the party for independence, or ultimate independence, which only tends to continue factional disturbances among the people. Practically, unless we wish to shoulder the responsibility for years of resulting anarchy and disorder, it could not be granted for generations to come. From the legal point of view I believe our Constitution provides for expansion, but not contraction, of territory; and every American in or going to the islands trusts that the Republican party, Congress, the President, and the Supreme Court will never allow the hauling down of the Star-Spangled Banner. This, too, with fair consideration on our part, will never be desired by the people.

"Second, the Republican party can lighten the taxation, both direct and indirect. We all agree that large revenues are necessary to put into practice the reforms and improvements which are indispensable to the American mind. But let us remember that it is partly the Filipino mind with which we are now dealing. Let us remember that he knows when he is being taxed heavier or lighter than under the Spanish rule, and by this, and by this alone, for some time, his ignorant mind will judge the American system. A $3,500,000 harbor for Manila does not seem an individual benefit to him. He sees in our road building only a desire on our part to give our wagon trains more chance in case he ever again objects to our presence in the country. To the infinitesimal portion whose children are now being educated in English there may appear to be a desire on our part to wean the little ones from the influence of their parents. But, on the other hand, lighten the annual tax burdens he bears, give him a better price for his products, or let him get his much-desired American goods more cheaply, and he will evermore be an ardent supporter of American control.

"Third, grant restricted franchises where necessary to develop the country, and arrange suitable mining and land laws. With the enormous tracts of unoccupied lands, the Filipino welcomes the coming of the American settler, who can teach him improved methods in agriculture and the use of machinery. A sprinkling of steady, industrious American farmers through the country will have a wonderful steadying influence; will furnish an element, identified with the country, ready to give warning of intended disturbances; to furnish a reserve in case of trouble, and to supply in time the men to take the governing places where Americans are needed, and thus complete a government, partly Filipino and partly American-Filipino, which shall be purely local in interest, yet stable and well balanced in operation.

"Lastly, the Republican party here can pass laws promoting in every way the education of the people; and, above all, can give them a law permitting them to have representation in a central deliberate body where all the different races can receive due consideration from our Commission, and where the views, now dangerous, because smothered and discussed in secret, can be allowed to disintegrate in the publicity of open debate.

"If these things can be done, we may look with confidence to the future peace and prosperity of the Philippines. Owing to racial differences, we should probably expect to see, in the ultimate stage of evolution, a federation with three States—Luzon, the Visayas, and Mindanao. With gradual development and constant help, they will surely grow into a lusty child, an American Australia, which will desire a protectorate, and will ever look to this country for direction and advice; which will rely upon the free interchange of commodities for mutual advantage; which will hope and pray for a maternal consideration in all things, and which in return will give its filial love to America and will ever stand ready to shed the last drop of its blood in defense of liberty and the life and honor of its beloved mother country."—City and State, February 20, 1902.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I take the liberty of requesting that when only two minutes of my time shall remain, the Chair will notify me of the fact, in order that a paper, which is already in the clerk's hands, may be read during my time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will notify the Senator.

Mr. BACON Mr. President, I have presented to the Senate and have given notice that I would offer certain sections as an amendment to the pending bill. I will read the proposed amendment. It is as follows:

SEC. —. That when armed resistance to the authority of the United States shall have ceased within said islands, and peace and order shall have been restored therein, it is the purpose and intention of the United States, so soon thereafter as the same can be practically and safely accomplished, to provide the opportunity and prescribe the method for the formation of a government by and of the people of the Philippine Islands, to be thereafter independently exercised and controlled by themselves, it being the design of the United States to accord to the people of said islands the same measure of liberty and independence which have been pledged by the Congress of the United States to the people of Cuba.

SEC. —. That when a stable government shall, by the method aforesaid, have been duly formed and erected in said islands, competent and worthy, in the judgment of the United States, to exercise the powers of an independent government and to preserve peace and maintain order within its jurisdiction, it is the purpose and intention of the United States, reserving to themselves only such harbors and tracts of land as may be needed for coaling stations or other governmental purposes, to transfer to said government, upon terms which shall be reasonable and just, all rights and territory secured in said islands under the treaty with Spain, and to thereupon leave the dominion and control of the islands to their people.

SEC. —. That when said government has been thus formed and set up in the Philippine Islands and approved by the United States it is the design and intention of the United States, through such means and measures as may be deemed most efficient and appropriate, to secure the guaranty of the continued independence of the same.

Mr. President, it had been my intention on Saturday last to address the Senate in support of that amendment. Unforeseen circumstances prevented me from having the opportunity so to do, and in the limited time allowed me it is impracticable for me now so to do. I therefore will not offer, as I had intended, this amendment to this bill, but I shall offer it when the bill for the organization of a civil government in the Philippine Islands shall come before the Senate, which is really the more appropriate place for it.

I desire to say, however, Mr. President, as I can not now offer this amendment or discuss it in detail, that it is not new. I believe it to express the intention and wish of the Democratic party relative to the Philippine Islands. The amendment certainly expresses my individual view. It is the view which I have entertained from the beginning of this unfortunate complication. The amendment is in substance the same as the resolution which I introduced in the Senate in January, 1899, before the ratification of the treaty of peace. The amendment is in substance the same as the amendment which I offered to the McEnery resolution in February, 1899, and it is a verbatim copy of the resolution which I introduced in the Senate in January, 1900.

Before passing from this amendment, I desire further to say, and I challenge contradiction, not now, because it is impracticable, but hereafter, that there is not a single assertion or a single proposition of this amendment which is not approved and justified in the utterances of Senators on the other side of the Chamber who now condemn it. Time does not permit that I should refer to all the utterances of Senators on the other side of the Chamber, but I will, in brief, call attention to some of them—sufficient to indicate where they can be found—and I will, with the permission of the Senate, insert them somewhat more at length in the RECORD than I shall read now.

Of all the Senators who have given utterances which approve and justify this amendment, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] has made them oftener and more emphatically than any other Senator in this Chamber.

I desire to call attention to some things which the Senator from Wisconsin, as well as other Senators, has said upon this subject. In a speech made by the Senator from Wisconsin on the 2d day of February, 1899, he used the following language:

This Philippine proposition is one of the fruits of the war. To me it is one of the bitter fruits of the war. I wish with all my heart we were honorably quit of it.

On page 31 of the same speech he said:

c But, Mr. President, I shrink from the notion that the interests of this country will be subserved by making permanently a part of our land territory thousands of miles away, inhabited by peoples alien to us, not of our blood, not of our way of thinking, foreign to all our associations, living in a tropical climate, where the white man can not work, under labor conditions of necessity which we would not permit to exist in the United States.

Every argument which has been made in support of this doctrine of territorial expansion—and by "territorial expansion" I mean permanent territorial expansion—seems to me to be superficial, some of them sentimental, and some of them fantastic.

The jingle of words which we read every day about "hauling down the flag" does not in the least either thrill me or impress me. Our flag has been hauled down before, Mr. President. It will be hauled down again. Where we raise it we will permit no other power on earth to haul it down, but with us it may be as honorable to haul it down as it was to raise it. It was hauled down in Mexico when hostilities ended there. If we had sent our fleet across the sea to the peninsula of Spain and captured Barcelona, raising our flag above it, it would not have been there to stay; we would have hauled it down.

To-day it floats in Cuba; the Spanish flag has gone forever, but our flag is not there to stay. It floats there in sight of the poor, wrecked Maine at Habana, but there will come a day, Mr. President—and I hope it will not be long—when we will take down our flag, raised there in the cause of liberty, and leave behind it liberty and an independent government, won and established under its folds. I hope that, too, about the Philippines, and that is not at all inconsistent in my view with the ratification of the pending treaty.

It is insisted that we must have permanent territorial expansion in order to extend our trade. Mr. President, I do not think so. I have been strongly inclined to think that in the long run, with all the embarrassments and complications and dangers it will bring upon our people, it will retard rather than develop the foreign trade of the United States. We have been growing rapidly in our trade without territorial expansion. To acquire distant, non-assimilable peoples in order, through permanent dominion, to force our trade upon them seems to me to be the poorest imaginable national policy. How far will that be carried? We want the trade of the world, and we intend to have our share of it. Are we, therefore, to obtain it by carrying this doctrine of expansion to the uttermost parts of the earth? If territorial expansion means national trade, if it be necessary to national trade, where are we to stop?

I think, Mr. President, the trade of the world will go where its interest leads it in the long run, and the best avant-courier of civilization is a merchant ship carrying the products of civilization and teaching the wants of civilization.

Permanent dominion over the Philippines by the United States as a part of this country means to me an endless and vast burden upon the industries of our people. We would be as sacredly bound to protect that distant people living under our flag in a part of our territory as we would the people living on the coast of Maine or the people living around Boston Harbor.

In the event of war the most distant outpost where our flag could be found would be the point of first attack, and we would be obliged, in my judgment, to maintain a navy adequate to protect the millions of people in the Philippines, 7,000 miles away, Hawaii, and our Atlantic and Pacific coasts. If our Navy were not adequate to all that, our ships being sent far away, our home coasts would be unprotected. This would involve an awful increase of taxation.

Mr. BATE. When was that speech delivered?

Mr. BACON. February 2, 1899. In the same speech, on page 33—I am using the pamphlet which the Senator himself issued—he used this language:

I can not say, in view of the history of the country, that time may not change my views, but I must say that, as I now feel, if the ratification of this treaty involved permanent dominion by the United States over the archipelago and its people as a Territory of the United States, irrevocably committed us to the policy of territorial expansion, I could not give it my vote.

On page 38 the Senator used this language:

If I may be permitted to repeat, if we take this title we are there as a sovereign. We have the will and the power to enforce law. We will enforce order there. We will establish government there. We will not violate the Declaration of Independence. This treaty will be an emancipation proclamation to the Filipinos, securing in that island all of the great rights which we so prize, and which have been here so much discussed. That we will give them every possible opportunity for self-government I do not allow myself to doubt. I hope the day may soon come when they may have a government of their own.

On page 39 he said:

There is another thing about it, Mr. President. Under this treaty we can give them, when the time comes, the sovereignty and title of Spain. They will have then the possessory right and the title, because, this treaty being ratified, we will possess it; we will have it to cede. We may cede it upon conditions such as at the time shall seem to us best for them and best for us. We may cede it upon condition that their constitution shall contain irrevocable guaranties essential to freedom, to popular education, to religious liberty, to the right of habeas corpus, the protection of life and property; indeed, all the guaranties which American communities under the Declaration of Independence demand.

We can cede it upon condition of the grant to us of adequate naval stations, supply stations, and commercial advantages. And if we have doubt as to the permanent stability and power of their government to stand alone, if we then feel we can not safely sail away and leave them to their destiny, we can, in their interest as well as in ours, maintain a protectorate over them with comparative safety, because we can make it a condition of cession of this title and sovereignty to such government as they shall establish that they shall enter into no treaty obligation with other governments without our consent. Without this power we can with safety maintain no protectorate of a government 7,000 miles away, over whose treaty-making power and over whose international transactions we have no control.

Again, Mr. President, the whole matter will be within our own hands. If we find we can not get on with the Filipinos; if, after studying the conditions over there, our people find we can not without strife and intolerable burdens do them any good, we can then cede the sovereignty to them and sail away. We will not be then running away from a responsibility at first sight. We will not subject ourselves to possibly the just charge of cowardice by other nations. We will have left them, then, after having made every honest effort in our power, upon the solid foundation of Spain's sovereignty and title, to help them to benefits which they would not have. We will have attempted to shower upon them blessings which long-continued tyranny has deprived them of the power to appreciate.

Again, on May 22, 1900, the Senator used this language, which shows the view he entertained concerning the annexation of the Philippine Islands, which largely influenced the expressions by him which I have already quoted:

I suppose, Mr. President, it will be admitted that had there been no war with Spain and she had tendered to us "without money and without price" a cession of the Philippine Archipelago, and a treaty accepting that cession had been transmitted to the Senate for its action, it would have received hardly a vote in this body, and would have proved entirely unattractive to the great body of our people. The suggestion in advocacy of it, that we are "trustee" to lead the nations of the earth in the work of civilization, would not have been at all persuasive.

The quick and sufficient answer to that would have been that, while this is a missionary people, this is not and can not become a missionary Government, and that it is not our function, philanthropic as we may be and as this people is, that their Government shall police the world, seeking for people oppressed, living in the darkness of ignorance and half civilization, in order to uplift them.

It would have been said that we have problems of our own to solve, some of them complicated, all of them important, and that the first duty of this Government, trustee of our people, is to subserve the interests of our people, to develop the illimitable resources of this continent, to spread the blessings of education among the people, to give to the country equal laws, and to lift up as far as may be all here who are oppressed. If it had been said that the islands are full of mineral wealth, of untold richness in soil, and of unspeakable beauty, that would have produced no effect in this Chamber.

Our people would not have harbored the thought of going into distant seas and taking archipelagoes of alien people because of the richness of the islands. I can conceive of no argument in favor of the acceptance of such a proposition which would have found much, if any, favor here or in the country.

There would have been found no lust of empire among us; nor is there now, in my opinion, in the sense in which that term is now used in this body and in the country by certain distinguished gentlemen.

Mr. President, I can not pursue this line, but I wish to state that on the 1st day of March, 1900, my colleague [Mr. CLAY] made a speech to the Senate in which he collated and read to the Senate the extracts from speeches of Senators on the other side of the Chamber, in which they all asserted that they did not desire the permanent retention of the Philippine Islands and that they intended to give the Filipinos an opportunity to become an independent people, governing themselves, free from the domination of any other people. Those extracts which I read from his speech are some of them as follows:

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] said:

I do not understand anybody to be proposing to take the Philippine Islands with the idea and view of permanently holding them and denying to the people there the right to have a government of their own, if they are capable of it and want to establish it. I do not understand that anybody wants to do that. I have not heard of anybody who wants to do that. The President of the United States does not, I know, and no Senator in this Chamber has made any such statement.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] said:

Suppose we ratify the treaty. The islands pass from the possession of Spain into our possession without committing us to any policy. I believe we shall have the wisdom not to attempt to incorporate those islands with our body politic or make their inhabitants a part of our citizenship. I believe we shall have the wisdom, the self-restraint, and the ability to restore peace and order in those islands and give their people the opportunity for self-government and for freedom under the protecting shield of the United States until the time shall come when they shall stand alone.

He also said in the same speech:

I want no subject races and no vassal States. That we had by the fortunes of war assumed a great responsibility in the Philippines; that we ought to give to those people an opportunity for freedom, for peace, and for self-government.

I want to get this country out of war and back to peace. I want to get the disposition and control of the Philippines out of the hands of the war power and place them where they belong—in the hands of Congress and the President. I want to enter into a policy that shall enable us to give peace and self-government to the natives of those islands. The rejection of the treaty makes all of these things impossible.

The senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], while not of the Republican party, voted for the treaty. He said:

There are few people in the world incapable of self-government. I believe the people of Luzon are capable of self-government now. I believe the people of some of the islands are. I do not know but all are. Mr. President, I keep in view this truth which I have stated, which I believe to be a truth, that the people are entitled to a government of their own making, and that we have no right to say, "Your standard is so low you will create a government which we can not affirm; therefore you can not have a government of your own." They are entitled to only such a government as they themselves can maintain; it must be one producing order and protection to persons and property, for otherwise it is not a government at all.

He continued:

We shall make a mistake if we make up our minds that we are going to govern these people from here, that we are going to govern them with Anglo-Saxons whom we send out there from here to administer the affairs of that country. You will need 50,000 soldiers; in a little while you will need more, for they are a great people. They are a people who are willing to contend for their liberty, and I believe it also to be an axiom that a people who will fight for their liberty and who are willing to die for it are capable of maintaining it.

The senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] said:

I am not in favor of annexation, not because I would apprehend any particular trouble from it, but because it is not a wise policy to take in any people of foreign tongue and training and without strong guiding American elements.

The late Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Thurston] also said:

I am unalterably opposed to any departure from the declared policy of the fathers, which would start this Republic, for the first time, upon a career of conquest and dominion utterly at variance with the avowed purpose and manifest destiny of our republican Government.

The junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MCLAURIN] said:

It is idle to speak of Americanizing a tropical country 8,000 miles away. Our people will never consent for the people of that far-off land to ever have a voice in the affairs of our country. Therefore, to govern them we must inaugurate a military or colonial system utterly at variance with the principles of our Republic. But even if by a strained construction of the Constitution the power is vested in the United States to inaugurate a colonial system, I am utterly opposed, as a matter of policy, to the acquisition of any territory that can not be Americanized and brought into harmony with our institutions. I believe the time is not far off, and I gladly welcome its approach, when our flag will float over every foot of North American soil, but it must come naturally and peacefully—by the consent of the governed, not by the rude hand of war.

But when it comes to thrusting our rule upon 10,000,000 people on another continent by force of arms, I hold that such a policy is unwise as well as at variance with the principles upon which our Government is founded. Taxation without representation is as much tyranny as when King George's tea was dumped into Boston Harbor. To govern the people of the Philippines without their consent is as much government without the consent of the governed as it was when we were under the rule of Great Britain.

In a commercial point of view, I believe the importance of the Philippines per se is greatly exaggerated. They are chiefly valuable as the key to the Orient, but we need not colonize to obtain that advantage. The exports of the Philippines, according to the statistical abstract, in 1896 amounted to $30,806,250. If this entire trade was monopolized by us it would be insignificant. We will have to teach them to wear shirts and breeches before we can trade with them much.

The late Senator from Delaware [Mr. Gray], a Democrat who voted for the treaty, said:

Now we have them, it does not follow that we are committed to a colonial policy or to a violation of those great principles of liberty and self-government which must always remain American ideals if our own free institutions are to endure. No country, and this country least of all, can afford to trample on its ideals. I have no fear that it will do so.

He went further:

I assure you, with some knowledge of whereof I speak, that the President is committed to no policy calculated to discourage, much less strike down, the aspirations of liberty-loving people all over the world.

Most of the above extracts have been heretofore read in the Senate by different Senators. The object I have in repeating them is this: It is of course impracticable now to discuss in full the questions involved here, and my purpose is not to show that Senators have been inconsistent, but to show that they themselves have in their repeated utterances in the Senate given warrant and approval to the proposition which we now present to the Senate that when the proper time comes, even if that time should be the present, it is the purpose of the United States to give to those people a free and independent government.

Mr. SPOONER. This is not now the proper time.

Mr. BACON. The Senator I hope will take some other time to interrupt me. He knows very well I always yield to him, but I can not do so now.

Mr. SPOONER. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, it is not necessary for me to tell to the Senate the manner in which I regard the Senator from Wisconsin, because I believe it is known to all the Senate, and the Senator himself knows it better than anybody else; that while we differ upon a great many propositions, the regard which I have for him personally is not inferior to that which I have for any other Senator in this Chamber.

And yet, Mr. President, I am constrained to say that what he uttered here on Friday last was not merely a surprise to me, but a pain, possibly the more, coming from him, than from any other Senator on that side of the Chamber.

Mr. President, when I sat here with incredulous ears hearing what the Senator said, in his earnestness leaving his seat and walking to the center of the aisle, it called to my memory an incident in our early history. Silas Deane, the first diplomatic agent ever sent by the united colonies to Europe, when he came back to America, feeling that his services had not had proper recognition by the colonies, went to England and abjured the cause of the colonies, and from there issued an address to the people of the colonies in which he advised them to submit to the domination of England.

After the treaty of peace, Jay in England received from him a letter asking that he might have a personal interview in which, he could have an opportunity to explain his conduct. Jay replied to him that he had been sincerely attached to him; that he had a sincere esteem for him, but said he in his letter, "I understand that you had intimate relations with Arnold, and that you have been frequently in his company, and," he added "the American who gives to that man his hand, in my opinion, pollutes it."

Mr. President, when the Senator's language recalled that incident, the thought came into my mind that if there are any on this side who were worthy of what he said on that day they are not worthy hereafter to be taken by his hand. And I will say to the Senator that his utterances on that occasion were not in harmony with the fairness, the liberality, the generosity, and the consideration which have heretofore characterized his utterances in this Chamber.

Mr. President, heretofore it has been said by those on our side that the position occupied by Senators on the other side was one which would prolong the war, and that the effect of it, therefore, would be to cause additional bloodshed. The opposing thing has been said by the other side as to the position occupied by us on this side. But so far as I know and now recall, it was left for the Senator from Wisconsin to say, as he said, that it was the purpose of those who occupy the position which I occupy, as well as those with whom I am affiliated, to obstruct the operations of the Government in the Philippine Islands, and that they were therefore responsible for the blood which was shed in those islands.

A cause must be weak when recourse must be had to such charges, and it is strange that Senators who are so sensitive to reflections upon them should be so free to make much graver reflections upon others.

Mr. President, it is an unjustified thing to charge that those who differ from the Senator from Wisconsin are purposely endeavoring to assist in the overthrow of the American Army. As I have heretofore said in this Chamber there are in our Army in the Philippines those of my own blood. There are there many who are my personal friends, and the sons of those who stand nearest to me. What is true in this regard is equally true of other Senators on this side of the Chamber. We do not yield to the Senator from Wisconsin in our devotion to the welfare of the soldiers in that Army. We have there our full complement of soldiers, and their welfare is dear to us, and I resent and repudiate the charge made by the Senator from Wisconsin.

One can be in favor of giving freedom to the Filipinos and still be true to the United States and to the American Army. In 1899 I made a speech in this Chamber giving my reasons for supporting the bill providing the Army to be sent to the Philippines, in which I said:

> Now, Mr. President, I can not be accused by anybody, or be suspected by anybody, of favoring the annexation of the Philippine Islands. I can not be thought to favor anything growing out of this annexation or of anything made necessary by such annexation. I can not be considered as in any manner responsible for anything which has led to the annexation of the Philippine Islands. I can not be understood for a moment as favoring the retention of the Philippine Islands.
> If I had my way, before we adjourned this night I would pass a resolution saying to those people, be free! And I would do it immediately; not only because they are entitled to be free, but also mainly because of the influence which that would have upon our own people and upon the most cherished institutions and principles of our own country.
> Mr. President, no one is more extreme, I admit it, on that question than I am, and therefore it is from the standpoint of one occupying that extreme position that I propose to give the reasons why I conceive it to be my duty to vote for this bill.

There could be no stronger expression of a desire to give freedom to the Filipinos than I thus expressed, and yet in the same speech I took the position that it was my duty to support the Government so long as it was by legal authority prosecuting the war. And that speech, Mr. President, has been more than once applauded on this floor by the Senator from Wisconsin. Nor is that all. While I believe it to the interest of this country to withdraw from the Philippines and give freedom to the people, I have never failed to urge that under existing conditions that result could be accomplished only through the success of the American Army and the full recognition of American authority. I had the opportunity in September last to say that in a public speech in the Philippine Islands, a speech which was translated to the audience sentence by sentence as delivered, and which was reported at the time and published in the Philippines, and which, I ask, may now be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Excerpt from the Manila Times, Philippine Islands, September, 1901.]

SENATOR BACON'S SPEECH, NUEVA CACERES, DISTRICT OF THE CAMARINES, P. I.

Senator BACON expressed for himself and the representatives who were present a most cordial appreciation of the warm welcome and generous hospitality which had been extended to them by the people of Nueva Caceres. He said he trusted that he was not mistaken in the hope that in the near future there would be the most friendly relations between the American people and the Filipinos. What he had seen of the Filipinos had largely increased his interest in them and had intensified his desire to do all in his power to aid them in the effort to become a peaceful, a prosperous, and a happy and a contented people. After continuing for a little time upon this line of thought, he said:

"I regret that I can not speak Spanish and that I have been unable to understand what has been said here to-day by the distinguished Filipinos who have addressed us. In consequence, I can not make what I now say directly responsive to what they have said. There is, however, one thought that I wish to impress upon the Filipinos, not only here but to all of them throughout these islands. It is not only a thought, but a fact, that the happiness and the prosperity of this people can not be restored until there is perfect peace in these islands. So long as there is resistance to the authority of the United States it is impossible for the Americans most friendly to them to accomplish anything for them.

"The American people as a whole are a liberty-loving people. It is not in their hearts to desire to oppress any people anywhere in the world. In their hearts they desire all men to be free and to enjoy personal and political liberty. There are different ideas in America as to what is best to be done for the Filipinos; but while Americans differ among themselves as to what is best to be done and how it should be done, they all, speaking generally, want to do good for the Filipinos. As long, however, as war lasts in these islands, it is difficult for the Americans to do what they wish for them. War naturally and necessarily produces strong feeling not only here, but in America, and while the war lasts, even though there be only a little of it, the American people are thinking more about the war than they are about what shall be done in the future with the Filipinos and for the Filipinos.

"When it is proposed in Congress to determine what shall be done for the people of these islands, the answer is that nothing can be done and nothing can be finally determined for them as long as war continues in the Philippine Islands.

"Therefore," continued Senator BACON, with emphasis, "it is that I say that the best interest of the Filipinos requires that there should be perfect peace here, and that the authority of the United States should be undisputed in the Philippines. There is no more important thing that I can say to you and to the Philippine people, and I say it as one who has been and is their sincere friend and well-wisher."

Mr. BACON. I will simply say that I believe that to be the position of the Democratic party, and I not only said it in that speech but in every opportunity I had to speak to the Filipinos.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator will permit me to say that is the position of the Democratic party over in the Philippines, but not here.

Mr. BACON. Yes, it is here also. The Senator misrepresents the Democratic party and myself also.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, from the speech of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] it appears to be the belief of the Democratic party that while war is being waged on the American flag the American people think more of the conclusion of that war than of the details to follow. If this be true, why does not the Democratic party come over and help us first to put out this fire and end the war?

Mr. President, if this discussion had been limited to the question of a tariff in the Philippine Islands I would not have presumed with my short service here to have spoken upon the subject. But it has taken a broader range. It has ranged to the extent of attacks upon our Administration, of slurs upon American soldiers, of sneers at American manhood and womanhood engaged in the Philippines in the laudable purpose of educating the people of those islands; and on behalf of the loyal and patriotic constituency through whose confidence I occupy a seat in this Chamber I desire to enter a protest against the conduct of this debate.

If we were actuated solely by a desire to gain partisan advantage, we might well welcome a continuation of the debate, for, as the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] so well said, while war is waged upon the American flag the American will think more of that war and the methods of disposing of the war than of any other question which may grow out of its conclusion. But, sir, we have a higher duty than to sit here and to gain an advantage for partisan benefit by a controversy of this character.

Mr. President, this debate has taken a wide range, and yet the Democratic party stands concluded here by the very amendments which they have offered to the bill. Whether we refer to the substitute offered by the minority of the committee or whether we refer to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia, in either case it is a concession of every single thing that has been done or is being done to-day in the Philippine Islands. The only issue left is whether or not, at this time, we should give forth a promise as to what we will do when the war ceases. Both this substitute and this amendment provide that this war shall and must be waged until peace comes; and the only issue left in this debate is as to whether or not we are at this time prepared to make these promises.

I want to remind the Senate, while it may be a delicate subject, that to-day, as we look back into the inception of the Spanish war, the only mistakes that we have made which have embarrassed us have arisen from the fact of our making promises and presenting policies before we had reached a point where promises ought to be made or policies formulated.

They tell us to-day that we are drifting hither and yon without any guide, without any compass, and without any rudder. We are not drifting; we were not drifting when we lifted the hateful, palsied hand of Spain from Cuba; we were not drifting when we relieved the Philippine Islands of Spanish rule. When we went to the Philippines we went there for the establishment and inauguration of law.

Senators draw a comparison between our position and that of ancient nations. No such comparison can be drawn. This is the first instance in the history of this great world when a free government entered upon the discharge of duties of this character. We may turn to history in vain for a precedent and a guide. But we have one guide that is as unerring as that of the pillar of cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night which guided the Israelites in their journeyings through the desert. That guide is the wise, practical patriotism of the American people.

Mr. President, this policy is confronting us to-day, whether we shall turn every political agitator in the Philippine Islands loose to claim that they have reached the time when they can avail themselves of the benefit of that amendment, if it shall pass, or whether we shall, which is infinitely better, it seems to me, await the development of that policy initiated by the wise and cautious McKinley and administered through the sturdy patriotism of President Roosevelt.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Mr. President, I entered upon this debate reluctantly, and I assure the Senate that I would not again have transgressed upon their attention in the closing hours of this debate, but the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. McComas], my colleague in the Senate, has seen fit, in the fifteen minutes which were given to him to discuss the Philippine bill, to make a personal attack upon me and to endeavor to cast by imputation and by direct assertion doubts as to the truth and veracity of a statement that I have made not only upon one occasion, not only upon two occasions, but upon many occasions, and the Senator from Maryland has given an evidence to this Senate that his memory is not as good as mine. His recollection does not serve him well. Either he is so ignorant of what is in this controversy that he should not presume to speak upon it, or has by mistake, or willfully, said that which is untrue concerning this matter.

Sir, he says that the first time I made this charge was in my own home, at Cumberland, when I addressed a meeting of my fellow-citizens upon the occasion upon which I gave to William J. Bryan my adhesion during that campaign. He says that was the first time I uttered anything concerning this matter. If he had read that speech, he would have informed himself better, because, sir, in the Senate of the United States, six or seven months at least before I made the speech in Cumberland, I introduced a resolution embodying, as I reiterate to-day, the promises and conclusions which the President made upon the occasion of my interview. I presented that resolution to the Senate, and two days later I addressed the Senate of the United States upon that resolution. I then stated the matters and facts as I stated them in Cumberland and as I have given them since. It was not new; it was not something that had been conjured up by me between times.

The Senator said that I had received no message that the President desired to see me. That, again, is untrue. I did receive from the President of the United States, through a channel that I believed could represent him, a message that he would be glad to see me and talk over this matter with me.

I desire to say, Mr. President, that when I went to see the President of the United States my colleague was with me, but he did not hear the conversation. He was not then, as I recollect, a Senator of the United States, though he had been elected. When the interview came to a conclusion, the President and myself were at one end of the room and my colleague was standing by the window, where he could not hear, so he can not speak with knowledge upon this subject.

I reassert to-day that the President upon that occasion did make the promises of which I spoke in my speech during last week. I reiterate them here, and I desire to say now what I have said upon many occasions when I addressed the people of the United States outside of this Chamber. I have said to them that I believed that the President of the United States meant to carry out his promises when he made them, but by the sinister and malign influences which surrounded him he was gradually taken away, and that he did drift, drift, drift. But, sir, I do not stand alone in this matter. You dare not try to impugn my veracity without impugning that of another Senator of the United States. I will go further now, and I will say that the same promises were made to another Senator of the United States, and he is upon the floor now, or was. They were made to him as they were made to me.

Sir, I was not mistaken. There can be no mistake, and there must be no equivocation upon the part of the Senator from Maryland in this matter. He speaks of putting off declarations. Why did he not answer that charge during the last Presidential campaign? He did not do so. Why I know not, but he did not. He waited until he could hide behind the rules of the Senate, and then attempt by imputation to make such a charge.

Sir, in the resolution I introduced in January, 1901, I recited, in the language as best I could of the Chief Executive himself, his ideas and his determination.

The Senator talks about the Constitution and intimates that I ought to have known that the power of dealing with the Philippines rests with Congress. Sir, I have read the Constitution, and perhaps know as much about it as the junior Senator from Maryland, though I am a layman. I have read it, I have studied it, and I believe I know somewhat of its spirit and its intention; but, sir, the Constitution has not been taken into account in this matter. You know that war in the Philippines was declared outside of the war-making power by the President; you know that it has been continued since outside of any action of Congress, except that by which we were made to give an army. You may talk about the Constitution, but that does not alter the result. I was looking toward the man who stood at the head of the Administration; I was looking toward the man who alone stood responsible for our conduct in the Philippines during the interregnum of the sessions of Congress.

Then the Senator does me the honor to refer to another conversation that was had with the President of the United States, in which he says that somebody else said that I then and there promised adherence to the President's policy. He says that General Agnus, of Baltimore, and myself called upon the President, and that in his presence I made such a declaration. The Senator is giving what somebody else said.

What is the truth concerning that visit to the President of the United States? The truth is that General Agnus and myself visited the President of the United States to ask him to endeavor in his policy of dealing with the Navy Department to give justice to Admiral Schley. That was the reason of my visit, and the whole conversation hinged upon that matter. Upon that day the President expressed his admiration for Admiral Schley, but said he could not do what we asked him to do. That is the whole of that matter.

Now, Mr. President, it is not my intention to detain the Senate longer upon this matter, but I will say this in closing: I desire to be within the rules of the Senate; I desire to say nothing that shall go outside or beyond them; but, sir, I will say this: If my colleague will at any time outside of this Chamber say that what I have said is not correct, then I will tell him what I must not say now in this Chamber because of Senatorial dignity and because of parliamentary law, that he utters a cowardly and malicious falsehood.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I call the Senator from Maryland to order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland will take his seat and the Senator from Massachusetts will state his point of order.

Mr. HOAR. My point of order is that it is not in order, in a body where the courtesies of debate are the law, to say that an insulting expression would be made against another Senator outside if he should repeat something he said here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. Allison and Mr. Wellington addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I had not intended to mingle in this debate, and do not intend to do so now, except to state, in as brief words as I can, why it is that I give my support to the pending measure.

I had hoped when this measure came into the Senate that whatever debate there might be upon the general question of the Philippines would be postponed until the questions which have been discussed in this debate should come regularly before the Senate; but it seems that by means of the substitute introduced by the minority of the committee the whole subject of the Philippine Islands has been brought into the debate on the bill and the substitute.

Mr. President, I had supposed that there were several things which had already been settled by former debates and votes in this Chamber. I learned from the Senator from Washington [Mr. Turner] this morning and in his speech the other day that at the time we captured Manila, and later, the Filipinos had an established government in the Philippine Islands. Why, Mr. President, nothing is further from the truth than that statement. There never was up to the time of our capture of Manila any semblance of an independent government in the Philippine Islands, except a government on paper. There were pronunciamentos without number issued from the headquarters of Aguinaldo, but they had nothing of the form or semblance of an organized government.

Aguinaldo came into the islands on the 20th day of May. He began his proclamations, I believe, on the 6th of June, and continued issuing them on the 18th of June, on the 23d of June, on the 24th of June, and so on, day by day, without consultation, so far as the record discloses, with the people of those islands, or even with the people of the island of Luzon. Therefore it was that when we captured Manila he had no status in those islands worthy ot the name of the head of a government. He was not recognized as such by any public officer in those islands.

But the capture of the city of Manila put the United States in a singular position respecting that country. Not knowing at that time, as General Merritt did not know, of the protocol, which had been signed the day before, he captured the city of Manila, with practically the entire Spanish army; and although the protocol confined the possession of our Government to the city and bay of Manila until the final treaty should be signed, we captured at Manila as prisoners of war practically all the forces in the Philippine Islands. Then is it to be said that the roaming over those islands or provinces by little bands of Filipinos constituted a government or the possession of those islands? That has been thrashed out in this Senate over and over again, and by the judgment of the Senate it has over and over again been decided that Aguinaldo and his followers had no status in the form of any government whatever in the islands when we captured Manila. That is number one.

Now, as to the second proposition. It has been reiterated here to-day that we began war upon the Filipinos. It is as well known as any other fact in the history of this transaction that Aguinaldo and his followers began war upon the United States early in October of the year 1898. They began with the forces they had, and we could not impede those forces because by the protocol we were confined to the city of Manila. Therefore Aguinaldo, knowing of this protocol, and not being our ally, occupied a position with his forces and commenced fortifying and surrounding the city of Manila with his army, and when notified by General Otis that he was committing acts of hostility, he still went on. So that when it is pretended here—honestly and sincerely, I have no doubt—that Aguinaldo was our ally, the facts are that Aguinaldo was our enemy before the capture of Manila in August, 1898.

Therefore, although it is said that we made war outside of the Constitution, the fact is we were within the Constitution of the United States, certainly so after the ratification of the treaty, when we resisted the rebellion and authority of the Flipinos in their insurrection against the United States.

Mr. President, these are some of the facts, and they were not seriously controverted in the early debates. It is true they were alluded to, but the matter has been settled and disposed of, first, by the ratification of the treaty, and next by a unanimous vote of this Senate to give the President of the United States a hundred thousand men to put down this rebellion. Why was that done by our friends on the other side if they thought that we were making an unconstitutional and an unjust war against a free people? No, Mr. President, all these questions have been practically decided. They may be debated historically, as the Revolution can be, but they have been practically decided, and the discussion which has taken place has not been pertinent to the questions now under consideration.

The question with us now is whether or not we shall go on and establish there, as all agree there should be established there, a free government, a stable government, one in which the people of those islands shall have participation, so far as they are capable of participation, or whether we are now to make some promises which are to be vaguely fulfilled in the future.

We have heard here quotations from our treaty with Mexico to the effect that we promised the inhabitants of the territory taken from Mexico statehood, yet they have been fifty-four years without it. Fifty-four years have passed, and the great part of the territory taken from Mexico under that treaty of peace still remains outside of the promise which we made so long ago. Therefore what boots it that we should make a promise now that the Filipinos shall have statehood when another generation of men, or two generations of men, are to follow us here in the Senate before there will be any necessity, according to precedent, to fulfill that promise.

So, Mr. President, in my belief and judgment, it is wiser and better for us, as it is wiser and better for the Filipinos, that we should go on doing the best we can to secure a good, stable government for them; and, for one, I want to thank the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] for his manly, frank statement to those Filipino people, that nothing could be done here in the United States as respects their condition or their status until they laid down their arms and submitted to our authority. As is suggested to me by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], that statement was made in the English language, but it was in such form that they understood what he meant; and yet now, after a period of six months, we are told here that we are responsible for all that has been done or is being done in the Philippine Islands, when it turns out that the leader of the Democratic party on that side of the Chamber told those people the plain and honest truth, that nothing could be done until they laid down their arms and submitted to our rightful authority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The Senator has but two minutes more.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I desired to speak for a minute or two upon the subject of statehood for those islands, but I will use those two minutes in saying that, according to the testimony of Governor Taft, whom we all believe and all respect, the islands are now practically in a condition of peace, except a rebellion in four islands, and that rebellion in one of them is confined to 200 insurrectos in Samar, who live in the mountains and come down into the valleys at recurring intervals. Not only is that island peaceful, but it is so peaceful that the teachers whom we sent there to educate the children in those islands go unmolested in 34 of those provinces and without hindrance; the children attend the schools, and the teachers, men and women, are permitted to go through those islands without military escort and without interruption.

So that, according to the testimony of Governor Taft and all of the concurring surroundings, the war in the Philippines is practically ended, and we are establishing there not a despotism, but we are establishing there a free and just government, giving to the people of those islands all the participation therein of which they are capable as respects the character of that government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, we have had two speeches, one from the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] and one from the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], this morning. The junior Senator made a severe indictment against the Democratic party. He charged that the Democratic party was disloyal to the Army and that the Democratic party had spoken, during the debate, with irreverence toward our dead President.

I challenge the Senator to point to a single instance where any Senator on this side has been disloyal to our arms. I go to Georgia. She is a Democratic State. Her quota of soldiers in the late Spanish-American war was 830, and she furnished 1,027. Iowa's quota was 830 and she furnished about 400.

The Senator also said that the Senators on this side of the Chamber have spoken with irreverence in regard to our dead President. We have differed with President McKinley on political questions, but I dare say that no Senator on this side of the Chamber has spoken of him except with the highest respect, and while we in Georgia differed with him, we honor and revere his memory because he was a good man.

We are assaulted by the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] because, as he says, we were disloyal in supporting the Army, and the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] comes forward, and what does he say? He assaults Democrats on this side of the Chamber because, forsooth, we have voted for every single appropriation bill supporting the Army. The charges are inconsistent. The Democratic party has felt it to be its duty while we were in war to stand by our Army, and we have stood by them bravely and courageously from the beginning to the end.

Mr. President, I am not a bitter partisan. I am a Democrat, but I always respect the views and judgment even of those who differ with me. I never question their honor or their integrity. Three times to-day have I heard it charged on this floor that the Democratic party is in favor of pulling down the flag and taking our Army away from the Philippine Islands, and I have heard it charged against the minority that we are in favor of pulling down our flag and getting away from the Philippine Islands at once. The charge is false. When we had the treaty before us and were trying to ratify it, and before it was ratified, we endeavored to get a declaration of policy from both Houses of Congress in favor of a policy looking forward to the ultimate independence of those people, and that would have kept down war.

After the treaty was ratified there was a resolution introduced looking to their ultimate independence, but there was not one word said about pulling down the flag. The Democratic party has not been in favor of leaving the Philippine Islands until a stable government is established there, but we have been in favor of saying to those people, "Lay down your arms, submit to American authority and American sovereignty, and then we will treat you fairly and give you the right of self-government."

Take the report of the minority here—and I have read it; I have it before me. I see it constantly charged in the press that the Democratic minority were in favor of pulling down the flag and getting away from the Philippine Islands, leaving them in anarchy. The Democratic minority report does not provide for any such thing, and the charge is false from beginning to end.

Let us see what the Democratic minority do say. Let us do the Democratic minority justice. I do not say that we on this side of the Chamber have all the patriotism, but we love our country and we are as loyal to the flag as are you on the other side of the Chamber. I do not say you are dishonest. You see it in one way; we see it in another. We believe that the policy we have advocated from the beginning to the end would have saved the lives of more than 4,000 American soldiers and the expenditure of more than $350,000,000, and would have saved the lives of 40,000 Filipinos, and that peace would have reigned from the time the treaty was ratified to the present moment. What does the Democratic minority say?

That the United States shall continue to occupy—and govern said archipelago until the people thereof have established a stable government and until sufficient guaranties have been obtained for the performance of our treaty obligations with Spain for the safety of those inhabitants who have adhered to the United States and for the maintenance and protection of all rights which have accrued under their authority.

That as soon as these results have been accomplished, it is declared to be the purpose of the United States, which the President is directed to carry into effect, to withdraw from said islands and leave the government, control, and sovereignty thereof to the inhabitants.

That is the report of the minority. I was amused at my friend the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], for if there is any member of this body for whom I have high respect it is he. He is not only fair as a general thing, but he is a man of more than ordinary ability. He stood here the other day and arraigned Mr. Bryan and arraigned the Democratic Senators who voted in favor of the ratification of the treaty, and turned around and said we were absolutely inconsistent. I hold in my hand the speech he made in favor of the ratification of the treaty, and I also have the speech of my friend the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. The junior Senator said—if he does not recollect it I will read it, but I do not want to take up the time—"ratify the treaty; get rid of the sovereignty of Spain, and then we will take up the Philippine problem in Congress and solve it and gradually give them an independent government."

Now, when Senators who voted in favor of the ratification of the treaty turn around and say, "Let us do that," then the Senators charge that we are keeping up the war in the Philippines.

Not only that, but the Senator from Wisconsin, in one of the ablest speeches that has been delivered in the Senate and one in favor of the ratification of the treaty, stood here, Mr. President and Senators, and declared that we did not have time to deal with the question before we ratified the treaty. "Ratify the treaty," said he, "do away with the sovereignty of Spain, and then we will have the problem all to ourselves, and Congress will take it up and immediately solve it and grant to them self-government, and then will be the time to act." That is what Mr. Bryan said.

Mr. Bryan has been viciously assaulted and those of us on this side of the Chamber who voted in favor of the ratification of the treaty have been told that we are inconsistent. I deny that I have been inconsistent. I voted in favor of the ratification of the treaty, and my colleagues on this side of the Chamber, men with experience in the Senate, beseeched me not to do so, but as a brave man, believing that it was best to do so, I did what I thought to be my duty, announcing at the same time that I favored legislation looking forward to the independence and self-government of those people.

In voting in favor of the ratification of the treaty I never believed and I do not believe now that I am estopped from voting for every movement looking toward an equitable solution of our troubles in the Philippine Islands, gradually giving to those people independence and self-government.

I have read with a great deal of interest our history since we have been in the Philippine Islands. I am not prepared to say that every time our Army officers have been charged with improper conduct the charges are true, but I am prepared to say here to-day that I have read the history of those people, I have read the history of our relations with them, and I believe to-day that they love liberty and they love self-government; that they have a pride in building up a nationality of their own just like we have. Do you know, human nature is the same the world over. The Anglo-Saxon loves home, justice, liberty, and self-government. So do these people.

I believe there was a time in the Philippine Islands, before we ratified the treaty and even since we ratified, when we had 10,000,000 friends in those islands. I believe that by a conservative and a wise course we could have kept their friendship. We could have dealt with them as friends. We could have avoided this war, and we could have solved the Philippine problem in a better way in peace than in war. At the time when we took the city of Manila and a week before throughout the length and breadth of the Philippine Islands there was nothing but friendship for our people. It is a fact which can not be disputed that wherever an American soldier or an American citizen went in the Philippine Islands he received a hearty welcome at the hands of the Filipinos.

I know it will not do to talk about the past. I am ready to help solve the future in a patriotic and broad sense. I would reverse our position and say to them, "Lay down your arms, acknowledge the sovereignty of the great American Government, and then we will deal with you in the spirit of justice, and so soon as you can form laws and a constitution and put them in operation, submitting them to us in order to let us see whether they are just and wise, you shall have your country; all of your private land." I am not prepared to say that in the solution of this question we shall surrender all of our rights to the people of those islands. I am not only willing to do justice to the Philippines, but I want to do justice to the American people.

There are 63,000,000 acres of vacant land in the Philippine Islands that once belonged to the Kingdom of Spain. The question what we shall do with it and whether or not the Filipinos shall pay us a reasonable sum for it to cover the legitimate expenses to which we have been put must be dealt with by practical statesmen and in a business way. There are many questions that will arise in the future in the Philippine Islands which I can not now discuss, but I tell you the mistake we made was in not declaring the policy we intended to pursue. We ought to have shown to them that the American people are in favor of justice and in favor of liberty everywhere.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Georgia has expired.

Mr. HANNA. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to enter into this discussion either upon the tariff or the political phase of it; but I can not permit an incident which has just occurred to pass by without making a remark. With respect to the differences between the Senators from Maryland, and so far as personalities are concerned, I have nothing to do or say. But inasmuch as that difference, if settled at all, could only be settled by lips closed in death, I do propose to say that in that contention, without regard to what one or the other may have understood or believed, I resent, in the name of the American people, the statement made that a promise given by our dead President was unfulfilled. [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair admonishes the occupants of the galleries that it is in violation of the rules of the Senate to manifest either approbation or disapprobation, and if it is repeated the Chair will order the galleries to be cleared.

Mr. HANNA. I am willing to admit that a misunderstanding with respect to an interview or words used may have occurred, but it needs no further evidence than the character and career and policy of President McKinley to answer a charge brought here that either intentionally or otherwise he left unfulfilled a promise made. It is not possible. I desire to leave it there. It must have been a misunderstanding, or else, in the name of the American people, I leave on record my protest against the statement made.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose of making a speech. In behalf of the minority of the Committee on the Philippines I wish to invite the attention of the Senate to a proposed modification of the proposition submitted as the minority report of the committee. At the time the report was made we had not yet received information as to all the laws which had been passed by the Philippine Commission. At that time we were unaware of the enactment of what is known as the treason and sedition laws, which have since been the subject of considerable discussion in the Senate. The minority of the committee were of the opinion that it would be a proper thing to do to continue in force the laws in relation to the government of the islands as they exist at the present time, and we did not presume that the eminent men who have been sent to the Philippine Islands for the purpose of temporarily exercising the authority of the United States in those islands would enact measures other than such as would be reasonable and proper, tending to the peace and welfare of the islands.

So, Mr. President, this language was inserted in the minority report:

That until the people of the islands shall establish a government, as hereinbefore provided, all laws, rules, and regulations now in force for the government of the islands and the raising of revenue therefor shall be in force except as the same may be in conflict with this act.

In view of the developments which have been made since the presentation of the minority report it is proposed to modify the minority report by striking out the language which I have just read. Speaking in behalf of the minority of the Committee on the Philippines which made this report, I ask that the amendment I have offered, constituting the report of the minority, be modified by striking out lines 18, 19, 20, 21, and 22.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asks that the amendment submitted by the minority of the committee be modified as will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed on page 2 to strike out all of lines 18, 19, 20, 21, and 22.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has a right to make the modification.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the words may be read, because the paging is different in some prints of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words stricken out will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

That until the people of the islands shall establish a government, as hereinbefore provided, all laws, rules, and regulations now in force for the government of the islands and the raising of revenue therefor shall be in force except as the same may be in conflict with this act.

Mr. HOAR. How will that leave the amendment?

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to have the substitute read as it now stands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Utah allow the amendment to be read in his time?

Mr. RAWLINS. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment as modified will be read.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have it read as it will stand after modification.

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, subject to the provisions hereinafter set forth, the United States of America hereby relinquish all claim of sovereignty over and title to the archipelago known as the Philippine Islands.

That from and after the passage of this act said archipelago shall be foreign territory, and all goods entering the United States therefrom shall be subject to the same duties, customs, and imposts as are now, or may hereafter be, prescribed by law for goods entered from other foreign countries: Provided, That during the temporary occupation of said islands, as hereinafter provided, all trade between the same and the United States shall be free.

That the United States shall continue to occupy and govern said archipelago until the people thereof have established a stable government and until sufficient guaranties have been obtained for the performance of our treaty obligations with Spain for the safety of those inhabitants who have adhered to the United States and for the maintenance and protection of all rights which have accrued under their authority.

That as soon as these results have been accomplished it is declared to be the purpose of the United States, which the President is directed to carry into effect, to withdraw from said islands and leave the government, control, and sovereignty thereof to the inhabitants of the same, retaining only such military, naval, and coaling stations as may be designated by the Government of the United States.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, the purpose of the amendment of the minority report is manifest from its reading. The design is to carry into effect the purpose which has been expressed by many Senators upon both sides of the Chamber at various times in the history of our relations with the islands. When the people there have established a stable government, a government suited to them, a government which they are capable of administering, and upon securing the guaranties which are provided for in the amendment, the proposition is upon the part of the United States to withdraw from the islands and leave the government to the inhabitants thereof. Mr. President, a distinguished educator, the chairman of the first Philippine Commission, has declared that any decent sort of government of Filipinos by Filipinos is better than the best possible government of Filipinos by Americans.

It has been claimed that if we leave the islands the government there will be an oligarchy. For myself—and I think in that regard I speak for the minority upon this proposition—if there is to be an oligarchy in the islands, ruling it, we prefer that it be not the creation of the American Republic. To-day we have there an absolute form of government, with all power vested in the hands of a single individual, the President of the United States, and such persons as he may select; and those who are prescribing the policy of this government—you of the majority—are not prepared to make any declaration as to the future of the islands, but you leave the question to be determined some time in the future, not proposing to deal with it at present.

Mr. President, there is nothing unpatriotic in the proposition presented by the minority. It recognizes the authority of the United States so far as that authority lawfully extends. It concedes to Congress the power of making such disposition of the islands as it may deem proper in exact accordance with the decision of the highest judicial tribunal in the land. It does not propose any assault upon the American Army, but it proposes to say to the Filipinos, "Your aspirations for free government shall be accorded upon the conditions which are prescribed in this proposition."

Mr. President, with respect to those on the other side who, in their frenzy to-day, impute improper motives to Senators on this side, I will say that I believe their hearts are better than their tongues, and that they have no faith in the proposition which they present for political effect. Senators upon the other side, as well as upon this side, know that this is a legitimate proposition, one that may be patriotically espoused by the people of the United States; and many of you, I have no doubt, although your votes may not be recorded in accordance with your belief, believe that if the proposition of the minority were adopted, it would be best for the people of the United States as well as best for the people of the Philippine Islands.

Mr. President, we have had war and bloodshed there. What have we done in the past three years, asks the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART]? What have we accomplished there? General MacArthur says we have exterminated one-sixth of the natives of Luzon; the Philippine Commission say we have destroyed hundreds of public buildings and thousands of private residences. We have over there a picture of desolation, if your eyes could reach that far and view it.

Mr. President, we have accomplished nothing for the benefit of the islands there. The condition there is so intolerable that language is inadequate to describe it, and what has taken place, if you continue the same policy, is likely to be augmented and multiplied in its distress and disaster in the future.

We stand for the flag and for the Constitution. We say bring back our sovereignty where it can be under the protection and guardianship of our Constitution. You propose to send it away where it shall be unrestrained despotism. You can not answer our facts, you can not respond to our arguments by attempting to feed on the cadavers of dead heroes and bringing forth the remains of Lawton or any other soldier. They are our generals and they are our soldiers, and we will respect their memory and will uphold their honor as well as you. Speak not with impudence to a large class of the American people who are as much filled with patriotism, who are as true to the interests and the welfare of the institutions of this country as you can possibly be.

Mr. President, you upon that side will not deter any true American citizen from expressing his opinion in reference to any political question that may arise, and which shall be legitimately before the people or the Congress of the United States for their solution. To question our attitude is an evidence of cowardice on your part, because if our facts are not true and our arguments are unsound, meet our facts and respond to our arguments and do not assault our motives. When the Senator from Wisconsin undertakes to impugn the motives on this side he does injustice to himself. He does not rise to the stature of an American Senator and he does not typify the spirit of American institutions.

Mr. President, this proposition we present to you in all fairness. You have a right to vote against it, as you will. We have a right to support it, and our votes will be cast in accordance with our best judgment and our honest convictions. Then we have a right to go to the tribunal of the great American people and ask them to decide whether you are right or whether we are right.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, after having spoken at length upon this subject on Saturday evening, I did not intend again to claim the attention of the Senate, but some things have been said during the course of the debate to-day that have moved me to trespass a few moments further upon the time of the body.

The question before us is a simple one. It is a plain one. It is one about which there should be aroused no personal feeling, no personal resentment. Here in this august assembly of the American people is no place for other than deliberate words—words of counsel, words of reason, words of patriotism in the highest and the fullest sense.

We face great responsibilities that have come upon us unexpectedly, and it is for us to rise equal to the occasion and meet the demands as American patriots should meet them. We face conditions which are the legitimate and natural outgrowth of a war; not a partisan war, but a war of all parties, a war of the American people; not war for conquest, not war for the extension of the domain of the United States, not war to gratify the commercial spirit, but war waged in humanity's name by one of the greatest and wisest and best patriots this country has ever produced.

Sir, those who are here remember how anxiously President McKinley sought to avert war. They know full well how day in and day out, week in and week out, he devoted all of his great powers, his genius, and his lofty statesmanship to settle the difficulties in Cuba by an appeal to the reason and justice of Spain. All of his efforts proved unavailing, and war came. When it came, it was his duty as the Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy to strike down Spanish power wherever it was established.

One of his first acts after he received the high commission of the American Congress to make war was to send a message across the Pacific to a brave commander of our Navy then stationed at Hongkong. It was a brief message, yet it changed the destiny of an empire. It was a brief message, yet it changed the destiny of a republic.

Fortunately the message fell into the hands of a naval officer of the United States intelligent enough to interpret it according to the will of the American people, and brave and courageous enough to execute it according to its intendment. That message was, "Find the Spanish fleet; capture or destroy it," and in one brief hour, in the bay of Manila, there was born among the great naval heroes of the world George Dewey.

Mr. President, then came Santiago and the treaty of peace at Paris, and that treaty of peace was sent to the United States Senate for its ratification. We ratified it, and it thereupon became the supreme law of the land. Under it Spain ceded to the United States, among other property, the Philippine Archipelago, and under that cession it became the duty of the United States to establish peace and good order in the Philippines. Spain's power had forever been destroyed and overthrown in those islands in the distant sea.

Some of our friends upon the opposing side said that Dewey should have left Manila after he had broken down and destroyed the Spanish fleet. No, Mr. President, he could not have left Manila. Why? Because it was his duty, as it was the imperative duty of the United States, to hold anarchy in check in the Philippine Islands, and to preserve life and property, which were placed in serious peril by the destruction of Spanish authority and power.

Mr. President, our course in the Philippines has not been imperialistic; it has not been harsh; it has not been tyrannical; it has been the exact contrary of all this. President McKinley undertook through commissions of eminent and patriotic citizens of the United States to substitute for the war power the ways of peace, and to accomplish through the commissions a peaceful settlement of the insurrection in the Philippine Archipelago.

Mr. President, it has been from the beginning of our occupancy, and is now, the duty of the United States Government to compel recognition of American sovereignty and American authority in the Philippines. This has been our imperative duty, a duty which we could not avoid or evade without absolute national dishonor. We must hold to the doctrine, without varying or turning aside, that the rightful sovereignty of the United States, whenever it is challenged, must be upheld against all comers. Who is there with a sensitive regard for the prestige and good name of his country that would consent that his Government should do less than this?

Have we done nothing in the Philippines of which we may be proud? The catalogue of our achievements there is vast. We have accomplished much toward the advancement of an ignorant people in the ways of a higher civilization. No other government than ours has in its beneficence accomplished so much in lifting up an unfortunate people to a higher plane. We have counted no effort too great to win those people to the ways of tranquillity and to educate them in the principles of republican government.

Shall we leave half done an undertaking self-imposed? Shall we turn over the Philippines to disorder and to become the prey of rapacity of other powers? Shall we withdraw our sovereignty and perhaps thereby disturb the international peace? Have we done nothing in the Philippines except that which deserves censure? Is there nothing done in the islands of which we may be proud? What we have done signalizes our Government as one of the most just and humane governments of which there is record; and every American should be filled with pride because of what we have accomplished in the name of justice and for humanity.

Sir, the moral forces of the United States have been back of the Republican party in carrying forward our exalted and self-appointed task, and they will sanction no base abandonment of it, or any wretched and cowardly surrender of our authority at the dictation of those insurrectionists who wish to place under contribution the Philippine Islands.

Our friends in opposition are continually inquiring, "What of the future?" Let them be patient. Let them restrain their impetuosity. Let them indulge in no intemperate speech and criticism. Let them have faith in the wisdom of the American people.

How long it will require us to educate the people in the Philippines, how much time will be required to establish municipal governments and provincial governments and an insular government a power higher than us knows, and He only knows. It is not given to our finite wisdom to see far into the future, but I have no doubt, Mr. President, as to our future in the Philippines.

I believe that the American people, actuated always by those great fundamental principles of free government, actuated by the principles which have governed us from the beginning until now, will carry into the Philippines no trace or suggestion of tyranny or harsh rule. We are ruling in the Philippines under the provision of the Constitution which distinctly and clearly enables the Congress of the United States to make such laws and regulations with respect to the territory belonging to the United States as the Congress in its superior wisdom shall deem just and proper.

Mr. President, it is not necessary that we should now declare our purpose with respect to the future of the Philippines. We must persevere in carrying into those islands as rapidly as possible all of the principles of free government, as we have been doing thus far. We have established, as I said before, in a large portion of the islands, peace, and if we are correctly advised, Mr. President, the majority of the inhabitants are to-day either affirmatively or passively in favor of American rule there.

It would indeed be an inglorious step for us to take, after we have gone thus far, to pull down the flag of the United States, and, in the language of President McKinley, adopt a policy of scuttle there. The problem, as I said in the beginning, is a plain one. We have but to do as we have done in the past, meet the duties of the hour in a brave, courageous, honest, straightforward manner, and the future will take care of itself.

There is no necessity for any heat; there is no necessity for any excitement, for I believe that no matter how grave and sharp the differences may be between us, after all we each desire to promote not only the welfare of the people of the Philippine Islands, but also the welfare and honor and the good name of the United States.

We owe a duty not only to the Filipinos, but we owe a corresponding duty and obligation to the United States. The substitute of the minority, it seems to me, is unwise, and if we are to believe the Philippine Commission and others whose opinions are of weight, its adoption would result not in promoting peace, but in ushering in there an era of turbulence and disorder, the farthermost limits of which we can not now measure.

Let us not be uncharitable; let us go forward, meeting the duties of the present in an intelligent, enlightened, patriotic way. By our past achievements we have added greatly to the renown of our country, and if we shall continue to persevere and hold fast to the great principles which have thus far guided us, we shall best serve the Filipinos and we shall increase the prestige and renown of our Government, which is dearer to us than all else.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts will state his inquiry.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to inquire if, as the votes on the amendments go along, it will be in order to move new amendments?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will please read the rule which was adopted.

Mr. HOAR. I so understand it, but I wished to have the Chair state the fact.

The Secretary read as follows:

FEBRUARY 24, 1902.

By unanimous consent it is agreed that on Monday, February 24, after the routine morning business, the unfinished business (H. R. 5833) will be taken up for consideration, and each Senator shall be limited in debate to fifteen minutes, the time to be equally divided between the friends and opponents of the bill until 4 o'clock p. m., when debate shall cease and a vote be taken on all amendments submitted and to be presented and then on the bill, it being further agreed that said bill shall be taken up for consideration each morning after the routine business is concluded. (February 18, 1902.)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment pending is that offered by the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON].

Mr. LODGE. I ask if the Senator will allow me to offer a committee amendment before the question is put on that, to which I think there will be no objection?

Mr. PATTERSON. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Massachusetts, in behalf of the committee, offers an amendment, which will be read.

Mr. LODGE. It is to stand as a new section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. Insert as a new section the following:

SEC. —. That an appeal as respects all articles coming into the Philippine Archipelago from the United States and all articles coming into the United States from the Philippine Archipelago shall be allowed as provided in an act entitled "An act to simplify the laws in relation to the collection of revenues, approved on the 10th day of June, 1890 (26 Stats., 131), as amended by an act entitled "An act to provide for the Government, and to encourage the industries of the United States," approved July 24, 1897 (30 Stats., 151).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the amendment?

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Now I move a further amendment. In section 3, page 3, line 13, in the print that I hold in my hand, I move to strike out the words "otherwise provided by law" and to insert the words "July 1, 1904."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. Line 13, page 3, section 3, strike out the words "otherwise provided by law" and insert in lieu thereof "July 1, 1904."

Mr. PATTERSON. Let the clause be read as proposed to be amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, however, That until July 1, 1904, the provisions of law restricting to vessels of the United States the transportation of passengers and merchandise directly or indirectly from one port of the United States to another port of the United States shall not be applicable to foreign vessels engaging in trade between the Philippine Archipelago and the United States, etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON].

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the end of the bill as a new section the following:

SEC. 8. That an act adopted by the United States Philippine Commission on November 4, 1901, entitled "An act defining the crimes of treason, insurrection, sedition, conspiracies to commit such crimes, seditious utterances, whether written or spoken, the formation of secret political societies, the administering or taking of oaths to commit crimes or to prevent the discovering of the same, and the violation of oaths of allegiance, and prescribing punishment therefor," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. PATTERSON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BERRY (when Mr. BLACKBURN'S name was called). The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN]. If the Senator from Kentucky were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS]. In his absence, with the consent of the pair of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], I will transfer my pair to the Senator from Pennsylvania, and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. I am informed that he would vote "yea," if present.

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. I suggest to the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. CLARK] that we transfer our pairs, so that he and I may vote.

Mr. CLARK of Montana. That is agreeable to me.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I vote "nay."

Mr. MCENERY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW], who is absent. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). In accordance with the announcement made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY], I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], and I will not vote.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Was the name of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MCLAURIN] passed by direction of the President pro tempore?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was passed by the instruction of the Chair.

Mr. PATTERSON. I want to raise the question——

Mr. ALDRICH, Mr. HALE, and others. Regular order!

Mr. PATTERSON. I want to raise——

Mr. BURROWS. The Senator can not interrupt the roll call.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll call will proceed.

Mr. PATTERSON. The point can not be raised before the vote is announced.

Several SENATORS. Regular order!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll call will proceed.

The Secretary resumed the call of the roll.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. That pair is transferred to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS], and I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I was out of the Chamber when my name was called. I desire to state that I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. I do not know what my duty is under the circumstances; I should like to be advised; but, under the circumstances, I think I will decline to vote.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, I call the attention of the President to the fact that the name of neither Senator from the State of South Carolina has been called. I am authorized to state that the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] is in his seat and desires to vote upon this question. I ask a ruling of the Chair as to whether these Senators are entitled to vote on this question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, they are not.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, I desire to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, and upon that appeal I desire to be heard.

Mr. President, we have here the gravest proposition of constitutional law, I imagine, that has ever been presented in this body upon a mere question of order. We have presented the question whether a sovereign State in this Union——

Mr. LODGE. I rise to a question of order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. LODGE. Is it in order to debate any subject during a roll call?

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. The roll call is still in progress.

Mr. TURNER. My question of order and the appeal thereon, pertaining to the roll call, is germane and certainly can be presented——

Mr. LODGE. It can not be discussed during a roll call.

Mr. TURNER. A question involving the high privilege of a State to representation in this body may be discussed at any time.

Mr. LODGE. After the roll call.

Mr. TURNER. The matter will then have passed into precedent, and that is what I desire to avoid, and what I think other Senators who are anxious to have proper and orderly procedure here ought to wish to endeavor to avoid.

Mr. LODGE. I make the point of order, Mr. President——

Mr. TURNER. I wish to say upon that point of order that I have heard these matters discussed pending a roll call for hours at a time since my limited service in this Chamber began.

Several SENATORS. No, no!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order raised by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. Until the roll call is completed, certainly nothing can intervene.

Mr. TURNER. When is the roll call completed, Mr. President?

Mr. HOAR and others. Regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. TURNER. I ask when the roll call is completed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The names will be read.

Mr. TURNER. At what time will it be in order, Mr. President, to make this point of order?

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order, Mr. President, that nothing can be done, either in the way of inquiry or otherwise, until the Chair has had the roll call completed. The Senate is executing its order, and nothing else can be heard. Afterwards the rights of everybody will be taken care of in some proper way.

Mr. TURNER. I will ask the Senator from Massachusetts when it will be in order?

Mr. HOAR. I should be out of order if I should respond to that question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will recapitulate the vote.

The Secretary recapitulated the vote.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington.

Mr. TURNER. I now make the point of order that the names of the Senators from the State of South Carolina have not been called, and that they are entitled under the Constitution to vote upon this question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. TURNER. I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, and upon that appeal I desire to be heard.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move to lay the appeal of the Senator from Washington on the table.

Mr. TURNER. I believe I have the floor, and the Senator can not take me off the floor.

Mr. BERRY (to Mr. ALDRICH). How can you take the Senator off the floor? You can not do that.

Mr. TURNER. As I said, Mr. President, this presents a grave question——

Mr. ALDRICH. I renew the point of order that debate of any kind is not in order pending a roll call, and, moreover, until the result is announced the roll call is not completed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is clearly of opinion that the point of order is well taken, and that the rule provides for nothing except excusing a Senator from voting.

Mr. TURNER. Does the Chair mean to hold that the Chair can decide that a Senator is not entitled to vote here, and that there is no method of obtaining redress against that ruling until after the effect of that ruling has had its force?

Mr. ALDRICH. I make the point of order——

Mr. TURNER. A minority might be permitted to enact laws here——

Several SENATORS. Regular order!

Mr. LODGE. I insist on my point of order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has sustained the point of order.

Several SENATORS. Regular order!

Mr. TURNER. I make the point of order, then, that the roll has not been called upon this vote.

Several SENATORS. Regular order!

Mr. TURNER. I ask for the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair rules that the roll has been called.

Mr. TURNER. I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, and upon that I desire to be heard.

Mr. President, the Constitution of the United States——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I make the point of order that, according to the unanimous consent agreement of the Senate, no other business can be transacted until the amendments to the pending bill and the bill itself have been voted on.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, I desire to be heard upon that point of order.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has held that no debate on any question touching the roll call is in order, certainly not until after the announcement of the result of the roll call.

Mr. TURNER. I have now made the point of order that the roll has not been called, and that the Chair is about to proceed to announce the result without calling the roll. The Chair has ruled upon that, and I have taken an appeal from the decision of the Chair, which I desire to discuss.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] makes the point of order that I can not discuss the proposition. I desire now, if the Chair will permit me, to discuss that point of order made by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order, Mr. President, that there can be no point of order taken or stated, and no discussion pending a roll call, and that the order must be executed by the Chair absolutely, without the intervention of any other question whatever.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

Several SENATORS. Regular order!

Mr. PATTERSON. Gentlemen, we listen to you. Is it in the power of the President of this body——

Mr. LODGE. The Senator is out of order.

Mr. PATTERSON. To disfranchise the State of South Carolina or any other State?

Several SENATORS. Order! Order!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado will take his seat and the Secretary will——

Mr. TURNER. I have taken an appeal from the decision of the Chair, which I wish to have submitted to the Senate.

Several SENATORS. Regular order!

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The result of the vote will be announced.

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 47; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Bacon,	Cockrell,	McLaurin, Miss.	Rawlins,
Bailey,	Culberson,	Mallory,	Simmons,

So the amendment of Mr. PATTERSON was rejected.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, do I understand that the President of the Senate declines to entertain an appeal from his decision? I had taken an appeal before the President announced the vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustained the point of order made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. TURNER. That an appeal could not be taken?

Mr. ALDRICH. That point of order can not be raised.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Let the Senator read Rule XX.

Mr. TURNER. Rule XX says nothing of the kind.

Mr. BURROWS. I call attention to Rule XX.

Mr. TURNER. I do not desire to obstruct the proceedings of the Senate, but I feel earnestly about this, because I believe wrong has been done, and I ask for information whether the Chair has declined to permit an appeal from the ruling of the Chair?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair certainly during the pendency of the roll call could not permit of any discussion of an appeal entered.

Mr. TURNER. I took an appeal and asked the Chair to submit it to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; the Senator, if he will pardon the Chair, desired to discuss it.

Mr. TURNER. I took an appeal and desired to discuss it. Then the Chair ruled that I had no right to do that, but I did not understand the Chair to rule that the appeal was not pending and was not properly taken. I asked the Chair to withhold the announcement of the vote and to submit the appeal from the decision of the Chair to the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, if the Senator from Washington will read the first clause of Rule XX, I think his mind will be perfectly clear on the subject.

Mr. TURNER. I have read the rule.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is explicit in terms, that a question of order may be raised at any stage of proceedings except when the Senate is dividing.

Mr. TURNER. I have seen that rule, and I assume that that rule does not relate to questions concerning the very division which has been going on.

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly; it relates to all questions.

Mr. TURNER. Otherwise the Chair would be invested with the authority to say what Senators should vote upon any particular question; and if he were disposed to be arbitrary he could absolutely disfranchise enough Senators in this body to pass any measure he desired to.

Mr. President, if it is now in order I will present some considerations to the Senate on this question, and it is a question of high privilege. I present to the Senate and to the President of the Senate the fact that the State of South Carolina is here with two Senators——

Mr. ALDRICH. I rise to a question of order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state his question of order.

Mr. ALDRICH. My point of order is that according to the order of the Senate under which we are proceeding no debate is in order upon this question or any collateral question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can not rule upon a question arising from a unanimous-consent agreement, it is for Senators themselves to determine what it means.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then I ask that the Chair may submit that question to the Senate.

Mr. TURNER. I rise to a question of privilege. I am addressing the Chair upon a question of privilege. I do not recognize the authority of the Senator from Rhode Island to take me off my feet, nor do I recognize the fact that the unanimous-consent agreement to which he refers has any application whatever to the question which I am now going to present to the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, if the Senator——

Mr. TURNER. I decline to be interrupted.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator is proceeding to a question of privilege, he is bound, in the first instance, to state what his question of privilege is. That is the ordinary parliamentary law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair feels bound to recognize any Senator who states that he rises to a question of privilege.

Mr. TURNER. The question of privilege which I present is that the State of South Carolina, by the ruling of the Chair, has been prevented from exercising its constitutional right of participating in the proceedings of this body and of having its will registered through the votes of its Senators upon this measure.

Section 3 of Article I of the Constitution declares:

> The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the legislature thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote.

Article V of the Constitution provides:

> The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which in either case shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of this Constitution, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress; provided that no amendment which may be made prior to the year 1808 shall in any manner affect the first and fourth clauses in the ninth section of the first article; and that "no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate."

Mr. President, I do not question the right of the Senate to punish members for disorders committed in the Senate, for any breach of the rights, powers, and privileges of the Senate, but I do question the right of the Senate or of the President of the Senate, so long as a member remains a member of this body, to deprive him of his equal voice with every other Senator in the proceedings of this body and in the votes taken by this body.

It is true that we had a scene of disorder in this body on last Saturday, participated in by the two Senators from South Carolina, which everybody regrets, and which they regret; that they were at that time called to order; that, as a part of that proceeding, the Senate passed a resolution declaring them to be in contempt; and that it has postponed further proceedings under that contempt order until after the Committee on Privileges and Elections shall have reported to the Senate what, in its judgment, ought to be the action taken by the Senate thereon. Does the fact that the Senate has declared a member in contempt take him off the floor and deprive him and his State of the right to participate in the proceedings of this body?

Why, Mr. President, that would be a monstrous proposition. I am surprised that anybody could contemplate such a result as that from the vote of this body on last Saturday. If that rule be established, it is within the power of the majority to force cloture here at any time they please to do so by simply declaring the minority members to be in contempt and not entitled to the privileges of the floor.

Moreover, sir, under that rule a minority might be transformed into a majority if the minority, finding a number of members of the majority absent from the Chamber, chose to take advantage of the temporary majority vote which they then had to declare enough members of the majority in contempt to reduce the majority to a minority. We would have the minority transformed into a majority in this body through the legerdemain of an accidental vote declaring certain members of the majority in contempt.

This rule of order, upon which the Chair has proceeded, and upon which I understand he has predicated his ruling, was not intended to bring about or to permit any such result. No such construction as that has ever been given to it. I submit that these results, which Senators can see are so extraordinary, and so much beyond anything which it can be possibly presumed the framers of that rule had in mind in drafting it, that it would be a most dangerous precedent if we went on and undertook to enforce a construction which could bring about such results.

Now, Mr. President, I understand the ruling of the Chair to be predicated upon subdivision 2 of Rule XIX, which reads:

2. If any Senator, in speaking or otherwise, transgress the rules of the Senate, the Presiding Officer shall, or any Senator may, call him to order; and when a Senator shall be called to order he shall sit down, and not proceed without leave of the Senate.

Mr. President, that rule is simply designed to secure orderly conduct, and its effect is limited, if disorder has occurred, to the particular debate then proceeding before the Senate. After that debate shall have passed on if a Senator who has been in disorder be then in his seat and desires to proceed to debate in order and according to the rules of the Senate, there is no power in the world to prevent him except the power of this body to expel him, and until that order has been made there is no power in the world to prevent him having his votes registered here as fully and to the same extent as the vote of any other Senator.

In the name of all the States of the Union, not because it has any effect upon this particular measure here, because we know it has not, but in the name and in the interest of the States of the Union, whose right to representation in this body is being jeopparded by the action of the President, I most solemnly protest against that action and insist that it be reversed.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, it seems to me it is easy indeed to answer all that has been said or suggested by the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER]. He has read only a part of the Constitution that is applicable. It is true that the Constitution does provide that each State shall be represented by two Senators, and that they shall have the right to vote; but the Constitution also provides:

Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member.

The Senators from South Carolina were guilty of misbehavior in the Senate Chamber in open session on last Saturday, as the Senator concedes. It is true there is no rule of the Senate adopted under this authority of the Constitution directly applicable to that case, but the failure to have provided a rule exactly applicable does not deprive this body of its constitutional power to punish its members for misbehavior as it may see fit to punish.

Therefore it was competent for the Senate, as was suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts, to commit the Senators from South Carolina to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms. Suppose that proposition had carried and the Senators from South Carolina were at this moment in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate. Could it be claimed that it would be necessary for the Senate, they demanding the right to vote, to send for the Sergeant-at-Arms and have him escort the Senators from the place where he had seen fit to confine them into the Senate Chamber in order that their names might be called and they be allowed to respond with votes? A mere statement of the proposition is enough to show its utter absurdity.

Mr. President, it is a right inherent in every parliamentary body to protect itself as against its own membership, and when members see fit to violate the dignity of the body, when members see fit to violate the rules of the body, it is competent, under our constitutional power expressly given us, to punish as in our judgment we may see fit to punish. We have seen fit not to commit these Senators to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms; but in lieu thereof we have adjudged them guilty of contempt of the Senate.

It is a contempt of a high character, gross and grievous in its nature. An outrage was perpetrated, if that is not too harsh a word for me to use, of which the Senate was bound to take notice. We meant something when we adjudged those Senators to be guilty of contempt. Is it possible that members of the Senate who are in contempt, solemnly so adjudged, are to have the privileges of the floor, to address the Senate, to advise us how we shall vote, and then to vote themselves upon a proposition submitted to us? Of course they represent a State; of course they should be entitled to vote here; but that presupposes that they will first have conformed to the rules and regulations constitutionally prescribed, for the Constitution says they shall be prescribed by this body for the government of this body; and when they see fit to violate those rules they forfeit those rights, at least at the option of the Senate. We have exercised our option. When they were adjudged in contempt they lost their right to further participate in our proceedings.

Mr. TURNER. Upon what ground?

Mr. FORAKER. And they must of necessity stand in that position until the contempt is removed by the judgment of the Senate, the only body that can remove it. On the ground, answering the question of the Senator from Washington, that the Constitution has put it in our power to punish as we see fit. We have seen fit to punish by adjudging them in contempt. It is contrary to common decency for a member of a body who is in contempt of the body to address the body and exercise all of the rights of membership in the body.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I regard this as a very grave question and one which ought to be determined after a very careful consideration of its merits. The question which presents itself is whether a sovereign State of the Union can be deprived, not merely by the act of the President of the Senate, but by the act of the Senate itself, of a right conferred upon it by the Constitution.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] has read two provisions of the Constitution which indicate very plainly and clearly that it was the intention of the framers of that instrument that every State of the Union should have the right to have its will expressed through its representatives here on all questions coming before the Senate. When it is declared in the Constitution that "Each Senator shall have one vote," that, without qualification, would seem to my mind to be conclusive of the fact that under no circumstances shall a member of this body, so long as he is a Senator, be deprived of the right to vote.

In answer to that the Senator who has just taken his seat cites the provision of the Constitution which vests in the Senate or the House of Representatives, or both, the power to determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member, and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] has assumed the fact that by the adoption of a resolution which has declared those two Senators to be in contempt the Senate has punished those two Senators. There is no precedent in the annals of Congress for us to go to in order to determine what is meant by a member being placed in contempt. The Senator from Ohio construes it to mean that it is the punishment itself, and he construes it further to mean that by being placed in that position and being punished the constitutional right of the Senator to cast his vote upon any question before the Senate is taken from him.

Mr. President, that is a very long step from a premise to a conclusion, and the very fact that these Senators have been placed by resolution of the Senate in contempt is a declaration of the fact that we have not yet punished them and that they are awaiting the punishment which hereafter may be inflicted. I do not for an instant deny that it is within the power of the Senate to punish members of this body who are guilty of any grave infraction of the rules of the Senate, but the fact that they are in contempt is not a punishment. They are in a condition of reprobation, if I may use the expression, to await the final determination of the Senate with regard to the act with which they are charged. That final determination may be a vote of censure. It may be a vote of expulsion. We have it in our power, if two-thirds of the Senate choose to exert that power, to expel the two Senators. But we have not done it. We have taken no action. We have, in fact, referred the matter to a committee to determine what action shall be taken; and so far as their status as members of this body is concerned, with the exception of the fact that the Senate has declared that they are in contempt, they are in exactly the same position that is every other Senator on this floor.

I can not understand why it is contended that the mere fact of our placing our ban upon them to the extent that they are in contempt and shall be in that condition until we shall decide further what shall be done deprives them of the right which the Constitution confers upon them, to vote on every question that comes up here. We may at any time exert this power which is given us in the clause quoted by the Senator from Ohio. We may say, or undertake to say, that the Senators shall not be allowed to vote, shall not be allowed to participate in the proceedings of the Senate, until they do something to purge themselves of this contempt. But we have not as yet done that. The committee is to take this matter into consideration and make its report, and we are then to determine whether or not the recommendation of the committee shall be adopted.

Therefore it strikes me that it is as clear as the noonday sun that while under the rule of order which prevails those Senators can be called to order, can be required to take their seats, and need not be recognized by the Chair until the Senate by a vote authorizes them to be recognized; nevertheless we can not strike their names from the list of members of this body. They are still Senators of the United States from the State of South Carolina. It is not in the province of the Secretary of the Senate to strike off their names from the list, and it is not in the province of the President of the Senate to cause it to be done. Until it can be shown that the resolution of the Senate declaring each of the Senators in contempt amounts to a punishment and that punishment amounts to an exclusion from the rights to vote, the Senators have the right to vote, and I solemnly enter my protest against any conclusion to the contrary.

Mr. BAILEY obtained the floor.

Mr. FORAKER. I wish to ask the Senator from Florida if he perceives——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas has been recognized.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The Senator from Massachusetts will state his point of order.

Mr. HOAR. The point of order is that the Senate has not merely made a unanimous-consent agreement, but has ordered that certain votes shall be taken at this time, and it is impossible to interrupt the execution of that order by raising questions of order or by debate.

Mr. BAILEY. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that we are not now raising a question of order, properly speaking, but a question of the highest privilege.

Mr. HOAR. You can not interrupt the order with a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts insist upon his point of order?

Mr. HOAR. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore resumed the chair.

Mr. HOAR. The present occupant of the chair was absent when the point of order was raised. I will restate it. The Senate not merely gave unanimous consent, but made an order that at this time certain votes should be taken, and the point of order is that nothing can be admitted to interrupt the taking of those votes.

Mr. BAILEY. The very question is——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is obliged to overrule the point of order. The RECORD shows that it was by unanimous consent, and the Chair can not exercise——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It was agreed to.

[At this point the President pro tempore rapped with his gavel, the Senators rose, and Prince Henry of Prussia entered the Chamber, accompanied by his suite and the reception committee, and he was escorted to a seat provided for him on the left of the President pro tempore.]

Mr. HOAR. Let the agreement be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

FEBRUARY 24, 1902.

By unanimous consent it is agreed that on Monday, February 24, after the routine morning business, the unfinished business (H. R. 5833) will be taken up for consideration, and each Senator shall be limited in debate to fifteen minutes, the time to be equally divided between the friends and opponents of the bill until 4 o'clock p. m., when debate shall cease and a vote be taken on all amendments submitted and to be presented and then on the bill; it being further agreed that said bill shall be taken up for consideration each morning after the routine business is concluded. (February 18, 1902.)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The responsibility of violating the agreement must rest with the Senators themselves. The Chair has no power to enforce it.

Mr. SPOONER. That is right.

Mr. CULLOM. Let us proceed to vote.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I cheerfully take my part of that responsibility. If this were a mere effort to delay a vote to serve either selfish or partisan ends, I should shrink from it; but it being a question of the utmost importance, not only to us who are here now, but to those who must come after us, no mere question of propriety, even if it were a doubtful one, would restrain my action.

No Senator here more sincerely deprecates the unfortunate occurrence of Saturday afternoon than I do, nor will any Senator go further in all proper ways to vindicate the dignity of this body; but when the Senate undertakes to punish a Senator it must be careful not to punish a State.

The Constitution gives to each House of Congress the power to punish its members for disorderly behavior. That such a power could be properly exercised in an instance like this I have no kind of question; but, sir, it is not within the power of the Senate—and much less is it within the power of its presiding officer—to strike from the rolls of this body the Senators from a sovereign State.

South Carolina, like her sister States, is entitled to her representation here, and if those whom she now honors with her commission are not worthy to serve among us, our recourse is an easy one. Whenever two-thirds of the membership of this body shall so adjudge, they can expel the present Senators and leave the State of South Carolina to give other men her commissions.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Texas allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator admits, as he must, that the Senate has power to punish its members for disorderly conduct. Does the Senator mean to say that the only punishment must be expulsion?

Mr. BAILEY. I do not; for there would be no sense in the constitutional provision which authorizes the Senate to punish for disorderly behavior and then that follows with authority to expel upon the concurrence of two-thirds.

Mr. SPOONER. Could the Senate imprison?

Mr. BAILEY. In a proper case it might.

Mr. SPOONER. Then would not the members from the sovereign State be incapacitated from voting?

Mr. BAILEY. No, sir.

Mr. ALDRICH. Can not the Senate suspend a Senator?

Mr. BAILEY. I think clearly not.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to read——

Mr. BAILEY. I know what you have in your mind and I will come to that.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am very glad to know that.

Mr. BAILEY. But if it will serve the purpose better now, I will yield to have it read.

Mr. ALDRICH. Paragraphs 626 and 627 of Cushing's Manual say:

The power to expel also includes in it a power to discharge a member, for good cause, without inflicting upon him the censure and disgrace implied in the term "expulsion;" and this has accordingly been done, in some instances, by the House of Commons.

Mr. BAILEY. In the House of Commons, where they have no written constitution and no limitations such as those under which we live.

Mr. ALDRICH. They have rules, and the rules are subject to parliamentary practice and law, and this is one of them:

Analogous to the right of expulsion is that of suspending a member from the exercise of his functions as such, for a longer or shorter period; which is a sentence of a milder character than the former, though attended with somewhat different effects; for during the suspension the electors are deprived of the services of their representative, without power to supply his place; but the rights of the electors are no more infringed by this proceeding than by an exercise of the power to imprison.

Mr. BAILEY. There is nothing in that which I feel called upon to controvert. Undoubtedly the Parliament of Great Britain is, as the law books say, omnipotent. It not only can do what it pleases with its own members, but it can do what it pleases with the people for whom it legislates. I believe Lord Coke did say that the Parliament could not make a man a judge in his own case, but I think my Lord Coke would have hesitated before declaring a law of Parliament invalid even upon that ground.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. BAILEY. I do.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator must be aware that the authority from which I read is not an English authority.

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is the recognized American authority upon parliamentary law and practice.

Mr. BAILEY. But in the paragraph which the Senator read the author is speaking about the practice in Great Britain.

Mr. ALDRICH. No; I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. BAILEY. Indeed he does.

Mr. ALDRICH. It merely cites in that one section what has been done in the Parliament of Great Britain.

Mr. BAILEY. Let me read to the Senator from Rhode Island from an American authority about American matters, contrasting this with the rule in Great Britain.

Mr. ALDRICH. From what does the Senator propose to read?

Mr. BAILEY. From the American and English Encyclopedia of law:

The same inherent power of punishing for contempt belongs to Parliament in England. The House of Commons has it, not because it is a representative body with legislative functions, but because it is a part of the high court of Parliament, the highest court in the realm.

A legislative assembly of an English colony, not being a judicial body, has no inherent right to punish for contempt, and, except in those cases where Parliament has invested them with it, they can not exercise it.

In the United States the judicial power is vested by the various constitutions in the courts created by the constitutions and such others as may be created. Neither Congress nor the State legislatures succeeded to those inherent and unlimited powers of punishing for contempt possessed by the English Parliament.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I will.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator contend that there is any limitation whatever upon the power of the Senate to punish its own members for offenses against it?

Mr. BAILEY. I am contending that this very moment. I am contending that the Senate can inflict any punishment upon its members who are guilty of disorderly behavior short of depriving a sovereign State of its representation in this body. The Senate can stand the two offending Senators from South Carolina up in its presence——

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BAILEY. I will.

Mr. FORAKER. I understood the Senator to concede a moment ago, in answer to a question by the Senator from Wisconsin, that it is within the power of the Senate to imprison as a punishment. What, I ask the Senator, would be the course of procedure in case of imprisonment and the demand of a Senator from a State to vote who was so imprisoned?

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator so in charge of an officer of this body would have a right to demand that he should come to this Chamber and answer to his name whenever the roll was called.

Mr. FORAKER. Would he not also have the right to come here in order that he might participate in the discussion and become informed as to what he was to vote upon?

Mr. BAILEY. Although it would be going to the extreme length that the Senate might control in the matter of debate, because the Constitution does not declare that every Senator shall have the right to speak, but it does provide that each Senator shall have one vote, and that no State shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate.

In all other portions of the Constitution the framers talk of representation, but in this particular clause they speak of suffrage, and they deny not only to both Houses of Congress, but deny to the American people in their sovereign capacity the power to deprive any State of the Union of its equal vote in the Senate. That is the one and the only provision of the Constitution not now subject to amendment; and yet, sir, by a mere resolution declaring two Senators in contempt it is now proposed not only to deprive a State of its equal suffrage in the Senate, but to deprive it of all suffrage here.

I was about to say, when the Senator from Ohio interrupted me with his question, that I believe the Senate can stand these offending Senators up in its own presence and in the presence of the country, and can require them to apologize for what the Senate may deem their misbehavior.

Mr. CULLOM. Suppose they refuse?

Mr. BAILEY. The Senate can then expel them; but whenever the Senate decides that these two Senators are not fit to cast the vote of South Carolina, it must expel them and thus enable that State to send representatives here who can and will cast the vote of that State.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator let me conclude the sentence?

Reflect a moment, Mr. President. It requires two-thirds to expel under the direct limitation of the Constitution, and yet you may accomplish a greater wrong against a State by simply adopting a resolution by a bare majority of one. If you expel her Senators a State can send others to represent it; but by this procedure you can silence the present Senators through all their terms and the State will have no power to choose their successors because no vacancy exists. On the other hand, declare their expulsion, and on the next day the legislature of the State may elect two Senators, or, if it be not in session, the Constitution deems it so important that the State shall be represented that the governor himself may commission her most worthy sons to come and speak for her.

An example of this kind once consented to by the Senate and become a precedent will breed more mischief than a hundred broils could do. That the Senate is no place for personal encounters, I grant you. But, Mr. President, we sit here, all of us, holding our places under a solemn oath to support the Constitution, and it binds everyone of us to see to it that no State shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in this body.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. BAILEY. I will.

Mr. FORAKER. I will not interrupt him unless it is agreeable to him.

Mr. BAILEY. It is entirely agreeable.

Mr. FORAKER. I should like to have the Senator speak—because he is making a very interesting and a very able speech—as to the effect upon the status of a Senator of adjudging him in contempt. Does it affect his status at all? I understood the Senator to say that if we saw fit we could punish by imprisonment in a proper case, and that when we punish by imprisonment we could exclude the Senator from debate probably.

He did not seem to be certain about that, but that seemed to be his better judgment. However, he said that even then we could not deprive him of his right to vote. Now, I ask him, is not adjudging a Senator in contempt in the nature of punishment? Does it not have some effect upon his status here? And if a Senator be adjudged in contempt because he has been guilty of misbehavior, pending final action does it not affect his right to participate in the proceedings, both in debate and in voting?

Mr. BAILEY. Now, if the Senator——

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Will the Senator from Texas allow me just one suggestion right here?

Mr. BAILEY. Let me say before the Senator from Mississippi interrupts me, that I only agree that the Senate might imprison in what I described as a proper case, and I made that answer at the moment. I am not sure, upon reflection, that I would not go further and say that the power of the Senate to imprison is certainly limited to the extent that its imprisonment could not interfere with a State's equal suffrage in the Senate. Now I will yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Now, with the permission of the Senator from Texas——

Mr. FORAKER. I wish the Senator from Texas might be allowed to conclude his answer to the question I asked him as to the effect of adjudging a Senator in contempt.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I wish to make just one suggestion.

Mr. BAILEY. I am going to answer the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. In this section of the Constitution I read the following clause:

> The Senators and Representatives * * * shall in all cases, except treason, felony, and a breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest during their attendance at the session of their respective Houses, and in going to and returning from the same; and for any speech, etc.

One of these Senators is certainly not guilty of treason, felony, or a breach of the peace. Neither of them is guilty of treason or felony. Is it possible that this could have meant that they should not be arrested by anybody else, but that they might be arrested by the Senate?

Mr. BAILEY. I think that was intended to abridge the power of the ordinary courts of the country over them.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I do not think that this was intended to be limited anywhere. I think it was the intention of the framers of the Constitution to provide that they should not be arrested for anything except felony, treason, or a breach of the peace, because it was the intention of the framers of the Constitution that for everything else they should be allowed to be here and to vote.

Mr. BAILEY. The truth about this case would be that it would be a breach of the peace, and they might have been arrested for that.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. It would have been a breach of the peace on the part of one; it would not have been a breach of the peace on the part of the other.

Mr. BAILEY. That might require me to go into a question that I would not want to discuss at this stage of the proceedings. A little further on I think that will become a proper question.

Mr. FORAKER. I insist, if I may be allowed, upon an answer to my question.

Mr. BAILEY. I will give it. If the Senator from Ohio would permit me to change his word "status" to "standing"——

[At this point Prince Henry of Prussia retired from the Chamber amid applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will please be in order. The occupants of the galleries will be as quiet as possible.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, I should like to interrupt the Senator from Texas for the purpose of asking him a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ELKINS. The Senate has by a resolution, after some deliberation, adjudged the two Senators in contempt. It is an order entered upon the records of the Senate. Now, if those Senators can have all the privileges of other Senators and can vote, what good is the order? It is about as idle as a painted ship on a painted sea—the order of the Senate amounts to nothing.

Mr. BAILEY. Replying to the Senator from West Virginia, and interrupting my reply to the Senator from Ohio, I will state that the resolution that they are in contempt has no more effect than a resolution that they ought to be held in general contempt or any other resolution of censure.

Now, as I was proceeding to say to the Senator from Ohio, the action of the Senate has a very serious effect upon the standing of these two Senators, unless the country shall decide, and their constituents shall decide, that this unfortunate occurrence took place in the heat of blood, and therefore it is one of the regrettable circumstances that shall be passed in silence, or shall determine that, in spite of this single unfortunate transaction, the services of either Senator or of both to the State heretofore has been such and to the State hereafter is to be such that this might be overlooked.

I say unless the State believed that, neither of the Senators would ever be commissioned again to sit in this body; the effect of their own conduct and the effect of the Senate's action would be a very serious one. I do not mean to say that the unfortunate affair of Saturday ought to retire the offending Senators from the public service. Men, because they are Senators do not cease to be men; the best of us can be stung by epithets into hasty and ill-considered action. While that is no excuse perhaps, or at least no sufficient excuse for misconduct in the Senate, yet that offense, grave as any Senator may choose to consider it, can not afford the shadow of a justification for depriving a sovereign State of its equal suffrage in the Senate.

Senators affect to be greatly shocked—I withdraw the expression "Senators affect" because it is an offensive suggestion that Senators do not regard this breach of our rules with great aversion. I know they do. I know how much I regret it myself. I know the Senate feels that its dignity was outraged; but nearly any Senator on this floor who is worthy to represent a State would in the last stage of the controversy have done what both of the Senators from South Carolina did.

Mr. President, the Senate has expressed its disapproval, and if not satisfied with that it can still, under its power of expulsion, turn these Senators from the Chamber with a disgrace upon their names that would outlive their generation; but, sir, the Senate has no power to deprive any State in this Union of its equal suffrage here.

Mr. HAWLEY. For any offense.

Mr. BAILEY. For any offense committed by her Senators. It does not deprive the State of its equal suffrage by expulsion, because if a Senator is expelled one day, as fast as steam and iron can bring a successor here he will be named.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. ELKINS. I do not wish to offend the Senator, but Mr. President——

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from West Virginia could not offend me. He is too good-natured.

Mr. ELKINS. I thank the Senator very much. Then I demand the regular order. This speech, which is admirable, is suited when the Senators from South Carolina are on trial, but not now. I demand the regular order, that the Senate proceed, under the unanimous-consent agreement, to vote on the bill and amendments.

Mr. BAILEY. I will say to the Senator from West Virginia I am not speaking for the Senators from South Carolina now; I am speaking for the State of South Carolina. It is entitled to vote on this question and entitled——

Mr. ELKINS. I demand the regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. BAILEY. The State of South Carolina is entitled to vote on every question.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. ELKINS. Regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. HALE. I was waiting for the Senator. I thought from what the Senator said that he had just finished. I do not want to interrupt him, but I ask for the floor when the Senator has concluded his remarks. I do not want to interfere with the Senator from Texas.

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly. I had not, Mr. President, dwelt on another view of the question, which I had intended to discuss.

Mr. ELKINS. Regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. BAILEY. But I recognize the desire of the Senate to dispose of the matter now under consideration, and I certainly have no desire myself to postpone that action.

If it could be defeated, even at the expense of fretting my excellent and good-natured friend from West Virginia, I would speak on; but knowing that that action is already determined on, I certainly could have no pleasure in making the hour of consummation 7 o'clock to-night instead of 5. I assure him, as I assure the Senate, that I would much have preferred that the necessity of saying anything had not arisen. I would much have preferred that the roll of the Senate had not been altered under the direction of the Presiding Officer, or by the Clerk, or by the Senate itself.

My own judgment is that the Senate has no power, except by resolution of expulsion supported by two-thirds of the Senate, to take the name of a single Senator from the roll either for a day or for a year. Let me illustrate the danger of the rule. If the Presiding Officer is correct in his ruling, it requires the action of the Senate to restore the right of these two Senators to vote.

Suppose that such action is never taken, for nearly six years South Carolina would not be permitted to cast the vote represented by her senior Senator, and for nearly two years she could not cast the vote held by her junior Senator; and thus that State, without any offense on her part, and against the constitutional guaranty, would be deprived not only of her equal, but of all suffrage in the Senate. By a mere resolution adopted by a majority of one (because in legal contemplation it makes no difference whether it were adopted unanimously or adopted by a single majority) you thus invent, under the pretense of punishing a disorderly Senator, a way to deprive a State of its equal suffrage in the Senate. I appeal to Senators on that side.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Texas will allow me to interrupt him, if it will be in order, he can continue his speech to-morrow, and I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator will not——

Mr. ELKINS. We can not get through here to-night.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator will not make that motion.

Mr. BAILEY. I am not sufficiently practiced in the ways of this body to speak four or five hours at a time. I probably will learn that after I have served here longer. [Laughter.]

Mr. ELKINS. As I understand the situation, we must vote to-night, according to the unanimous-consent agreement. Now, if we are to take up the case of the two Senators from South Carolina we can not reach a vote. I want to make some progress with the question before the Senate. As I understand, this question is not before the Senate. If the Chair will enforce the rule, I will withdraw either the demand for the regular order or the motion for an adjournment.

Mr. BAILEY. We are having the regular order.

Mr. ELKINS. Not at all, Mr. President. I ask for the ruling of the Chair on that subject.

Mr. BAILEY. Each Senator has the floor on his own responsibility. I cheerfully took mine in the beginning of what I had to say. The Senator from West Virginia did not happen to be here at that time to claim the floor. He was otherwise and, perhaps, better occupied.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, is a motion to adjourn in order?

Mr. BAILEY. Not until the Senator from West Virginia has the floor, and for that purpose I decline to yield.

Mr. ELKINS. I understand that a motion to adjourn is in order at any time.

Mr. BAILEY. It is when a Senator has the floor to make the motion.

Mr. President, I doubt, as was well said by the distinguished Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER], if either this or any other legislative body ever confronted so grave a question upon a matter of order, and I appeal to Senators on the other side of the Chamber not to make such a precedent as this will become. I assure them that Senators on this side of the Chamber at a proper time and in a proper way will join them or ask them to join us in an orderly and proper proceeding to vindicate the dignity of this body. But let us not in haste or passionate resentment do that which through all the years to come we must sincerely regret.

I saw such an exhibition of bad temper here this afternoon as I never expected to witness in the Senate, and such as I trust I never shall witness again. I heard great Senators, when a colleague rose to address the body upon a matter affecting its constitutional privileges, drown his voice with a demand for the regular order—conduct as discreditable to the Senate as that which we witnessed on Saturday afternoon. Then we had two infuriated men, each stinging under what he believed to be a personal insult. This afternoon we have almost one entire side of the Senate Chamber ready to deny a colleague a hearing upon a question affecting the rights of a sovereign State.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator permit me just a single observation?

Mr. BAILEY. I am compelled, of course, to yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. HAWLEY. I understand that what we have done is that we have already referred this question to the highest committee of the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senate will agree to defer further action until that committee has ascertained what the punishment ought to be, we will end this controversy and take a vote upon the main question at once. But what I protested against is that after having referred a question to a committee you not only seek to inflict a punishment upon Senators, but you seek to inflict a greater and an unwarranted punishment upon the State which they represent.

I should be glad to join the gentlemen on that side in a unanimous-consent agreement that the Chair should reserve the question of order until that committee has decided. If the committee recommend a punishment like that, we can then discuss it when the Senate is better prepared to hear the discussion and when Senators have had the time and the opportunity to prepare themselves for its discussion.

What I further protest against now is that the Presiding Officer of the body, under his sense of duty—because I have respect enough for him to believe that neither out of personal resentment nor for party advantage would he transgress the rules of this body which has honored him by making him its Presiding Officer—but under the rules as he understands them he has not only ordered these names stricken from the roll of the Senate, but he has denied the Senators from the State of South Carolina the right even to be heard in their own defense.

Without a motion supported by a majority of this Senate neither Senator from South Carolina can ever rise in his place even to protest in the name of his State against this grave injustice. The Senate ought not, in taking care of its own dignity, to outrage a State of the Union and violate the plain provision of the Constitution. We ought not, in exercising our power to punish a disorderly Senator, to attempt to punish a State.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, may I ask the honorable Senator if any justice of the peace in the entire country could not do the same thing by committing the Senators for a breach of the peace?

Mr. BAILEY. Of course, whenever the Senator from Massachusetts asks a question about the law the question answers itself. The venerable Senator from Massachusetts is so distinguished a lawyer that, even if I thought him wrong, I should hesitate to say so. [Laughter.] In this case I thoroughly agree with him. If these two Senators were practicing law in a justice's court, had forgotten the dignity of that place—and it has its dignity as well as this body——

Mr. HOAR. I do not think the Senator understands my question.

Mr. BAILEY. And had engaged in an encounter——

Mr. HOAR. My question was not whether any justice of the peace would keep them from practicing in his court, but whether any justice of the peace could not deprive the State of South Carolina of representation in this body by committing the two Senators from that State for contempt if there had happened in that justice's court what happened here?

Mr. BAILEY. It was deemed so important that a State should not be deprived of its representation——

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me to supplement that question with another?

Mr. BAILEY. Let me finish my sentence first.

It was deemed so important that a State should not be deprived of representation that the Constitution deprives the law officers of a court of the power to arrest a Senator, except in case of treason, felony, or breach of the peace. I might in turn become the questioner, and ask the venerable Senator from Massachusetts why that provision was placed in the Constitution? Was it not because the Constitution makers deemed it so important that a State should not be deprived of its representation?

Mr. HOAR. My question was this: If any justice of the peace in Texas or Massachusetts—I will not say Texas—if a justice of the peace in Massachusetts should commit two Senators from Massachusetts for a breach of the peace in his presence, and thereby deprive the sovereign State of Massachusetts of their votes in the Senate until they had served out the contempt for doing exactly what happened here, is it such a dreadful thing when it is done by the Senate of the United States?

Mr. BAILEY. That could not deprive a Senator of his right here, for the reason that he could either pay his fine or give a bond, and then come here and vote.

Mr. HOAR. But can not the Senator see for himself——

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me to supplement the question he has just answered by another question, and that is whether or not, in his opinion, there is any justice of the peace in the State of Texas or the State of Massachusetts or any other State——

Mr. BAILEY. Suppose we take Ohio.

Mr. FORAKER. We will take Ohio, then. Does the Senator imagine that a justice of the peace anywhere could be found, who, after he had adjudged parties guilty of contempt, would allow them to address him again and proceed in the trial of a cause before him as attorneys until they had to his satisfaction purged themselves of contempt?

Mr. BAILEY. Aye; he might not allow them to do that.

Mr. FORAKER. Would any court in Christendom allow them to do it?

Mr. BAILEY. The moment they offered to purge themselves of that contempt he would be compelled to allow them to do so, and they could then try the cause of their client in his court.

Mr. FORAKER. That may be law in Texas, but it is not in any other State I have ever heard of.

Mr. BAILEY. There is a great deal of law the Senator from Ohio has not heard of. [Laughter.]

Mr. FORAKER. Undoubtedly; and especially in Texas, from what the Senator has said. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAILEY. I had the misfortune once to try a case in Ohio, and I learned some new and remarkable law there.

Mr. FORAKER. I have no doubt you learned something before you got through with it. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAILEY. Without intending to be offensive, if there is much to be learned there——

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BAILEY. I will yield when I finish this sentence. If there is much to be learned there, I commend the Senator from Ohio to stay there as much as his Senatorial duties will allow. [Laughter.] The distinction between the cases suggested by both the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] and the one now under consideration is broad and, as I think, plain. In those cases a Senator might be deprived of his physical ability to be present in the Senate and exercise his right to vote, while in this case it is proposed to deny him the right when he is here and anxious to exercise it.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I did not rise to ask permission to interrupt the Senator, but I rose to a question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state his question of order.

Mr. PETTUS. Senators talk to each other backward and forward here without paying any attention to the rules of the Senate, and without the permission of the Chair. I insist, sir, that the order of the Senate shall be preserved in that respect.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] had been in the chair I should never have made that mistake. I have seen him very properly enforce that rule on more than one occasion; and if I have transgressed it in what I have had to say this afternoon, I regret it; but the chances are that I could not have offended against the rule because other Senators have interrupted me. I had the floor.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. ALDRICH. I did not rise to ask the Senator to yield. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. BAILEY. Then I decline to yield the floor until after the Senator has stated what he rises for.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

Mr. BAILEY. I hope the Senator will wait a moment.

Mr. ALDRICH. I rise to a question of order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island will state his point of order.

Mr. BAILEY. I make the point of order that one point of order is already pending.

Mr. ALDRICH. My question of order is this: The Senate is acting, by a unanimous-consent agreement, under an order of a particular kind—an order made by unanimous consent, that debate upon the pending bill and all amendments should close at 4 o'clock—and that under that order no other business whatever and no discussion is in order. The Senator from Texas and other Senators are talking about the rights of a State and of two Senators, and the Senator by his action is depriving 44 other States of their rights upon this floor and preventing any action whatever.

Mr. BAILEY. I make the point of order that it is not in order for the Senator from Rhode Island to discuss the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is, if the Chair permits it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask the Chair to submit the question to the Senate for its decision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island makes the point of order that under the unanimous-consent agreement the Senate must proceed with the votes upon the pending bill and the amendments thereto, and the Senator requests the Chair to submit that question to the Senate. The Chair submits the question to the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. I demand the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. ALDRICH. I understand a vote in the affirmative means to sustain the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators sustaining the point of order will, as their names are called, vote "yea" and those opposed will vote "nay."

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAILEY (when his name was called). Mr. President, in view of the fact that I have been taken from the floor on this question, I decline to vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], but I think, under the circumstances, I shall decline to vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. ELKINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], who will not vote; and I should like to know whether I can vote.

Mr. BAILEY. I freely agree that the Senator from West Virginia may vote, if he votes right.

Mr. ELKINS. I will vote right. I vote "yea."

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. If he were present, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MCENERY (after having voted in the affirmative). I inadvertently voted "yea." The junior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW], with whom I am paired, is absent, and I therefore withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 46, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—46.

Aldrich,	Dryden,	Kean,	Pritchard,
Allison,	Elkins,	Kearns,	Proctor,
Bard,	Fairbanks,	Kittredge,	Quarles,
Burnham,	Foraker,	Lodge,	Scott,
Burrows,	Foster, Wash.	McComas,	Simon,
Burton,	Frye,	Millard,	Spooner,
Clapp,	Gallinger,	Mitchell,	Stewart,
Clark, Wyo.	Gamble,	Nelson,	Warren,
Cullom,	Hanna,	Penrose,	Wellington,
Deboe,	Hansbrough,	Perkins,	Wetmore.
Dietrich,	Hawley,	Platt, Conn.
Dolliver,	Hoar,	Platt, N. Y.

NAYS—25.

Bacon,	Dubois,	Martin,	Taliaferro.
Bate,	Foster, La.	Mason,	Teller,
Berry,	Gibson,	Money,	Turner,
Carmack,	Heitfeld,	Patterson,	Vest.
Clark, Mont.	Jones, Nev.	Pettus,
Clay,	McLaurin, Miss.	Rawlins,
Culberson,	Mallory,	Simmons,

NOT VOTING—17.

Bailey,	Depew,	McCumber,	Quay,
Beveridge,	Dillingham,	McEnery,	Tillman.
Blackburn,	Hale,	McLaurin, S. C.
Cockrell,	Harris,	McMillan,
Daniel,	Jones, Ark.	Morgan,

So the Senate sustained the point of order.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of the order of business. I ask that the pending amendment be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment will be stated.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose of debate——

Mr. HALE. I do not yield the floor.

Mr. TURNER. I do not rise for the purpose of debate. I rise for the purpose of presenting to the Senate, on behalf of the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], a protest against this action; which I ask may be spread upon the Journal of the Senate and printed in the RECORD.

Mr. ALDRICH, Mr. HOAR, and others. That is not in order now.

Mr. TURNER. Whenever it is in order, I ask that it be spread upon the Journal of the Senate and printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no amendment pending except the one offered by the minority of the committee.

Mr. HALE. Let that be stated.

Mr. TELLER. I gave notice of an amendment that I intended to offer, and I offer it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not wish to be misunderstood. There are quite a number of amendments printed and on the table.

Mr. TELLER. I send to the Chair the amendment of which I gave notice some time ago.

Mr. HALE. I did not yield the floor, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not understand that the Senator from Maine had yielded the floor.

Mr. HOAR. How can the Senator have the floor?

Mr. HALE. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert the following as a new section:

SEC. 8. That the Constitution and all laws of the United States which are not locally inapplicable shall have the same force and effect within the said Philippine Archipelago as elsewhere within the United States.

Mr. TELLER. I ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

Mr. MALLORY. I ask that the amendment be again read. Owing to the confusion it was not heard in the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will please come to order, and guests in the rear of the Chamber will take seats. The amendment will be again read.

The Secretary again read the amendment proposed by Mr. TELLER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] demands the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BERRY (when Mr. BLACKBURN'S name was called). The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] is paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN]. If the Senator from Kentucky were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). Under the transfer of pairs heretofore announced, I am at liberty to vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Caroline [Mr. TILLMAN], and therefore withhold my vote on this question. I should vote "nay" if at liberty to vote.

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. If he were present he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay." I make this announcement of our general pair upon this bill and amendments that I may not be obliged to take the time of the Senate by continually iterating and reiterating it.

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I inquire if my name is recorded as having voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). The Senator's name is not recorded.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 47; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Bacon,	Cockrell,	Mallory,	Simmons,
Bailey,	Culberson,	Martin,	Taliaferro,
Bate,	Dubois,	Money,	Teller,
Berry,	Foster, La.	Morgan,	Vest,
Carmack,	Gibson,	Patterson,	Wellington.
Clark, Mont.	Heitfeld,	Pettus,
Clay,	McLaurin, Miss.	Rawlins,

NAYS—47.

Aldrich,	Dryden,	Jones, Nev.	Platt, Conn.
Allison,	Elkins,	Kean,	Platt, N. Y.
Bard,	Fairbanks,	Kearns,	Pritchard,
Burnham,	Foraker,	Kittredge,	Proctor,
Burrows,	Foster, Wash.	Lodge,	Quarles,
Burton,	Frye,	McComas,	Scott,
Clapp,	Gallinger,	McCumber,	Simon,
Clark, Wyo.	Gamble,	Millard,	Spooner,
Cullom,	Hanna,	Mitchell,	Stewart,
Deboe,	Hansbrough,	Nelson,	Turner,
Dietrich,	Hawley,	Penrose,	Wetmore.
Dolliver,	Hoar,	Perkins,

NOT VOTING—15.

Beveridge,	Dillingham,	McEnery,	Quay,
Blackburn,	Hale,	McLaurin, S. C.	Tillman,
Daniel,	Harris,	McMillan,	Warren.
Depew,	Jones, Ark.	Mason,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOAR. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts offers an amendment which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following:

No person in the Philippine Islands shall, under the authority of the United States, be convicted of treason by any tribunal, civil or military, unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court.

Mr. HOAR. I ask for the yeas and nays on the question of agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I stated in the Senate in behalf of the committee that I would accept the amendment, but of course I have no objection to the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. I am advised that if he were at liberty to vote, he would vote "yea." As I would vote the same way, I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. TALIAFERRO (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that he has not.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I ask leave to recall my vote, being paired with that Senator.

The result was announced—yeas 69, nays 0; as follows:

YEAS—69.

Allison,	Dillingham,	Hoar,	Pettus,
Bacon,	Dolliver,	Jones, Nev.	Platt, Conn.
Bailey,	Dryden,	Kean,	Platt, N. Y.
Bard,	Dubois,	Kearns,	Pritchard,
Bate,	Elkins,	Kittredge,	Proctor,

So Mr. HOAR's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I also move to insert what I send to the desk. I hope it will be accepted in the same way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add after the amendment just adopted the following:

Provided, That there shall be no conviction or punishment under the authority of the United States by any tribunal, civil or military, of any mother or father for failing to give information against his or her child, or of any son or daughter for failing to give information against his or her mother or father, or of any husband for failing to give information against his wife, or of any wife for failing to give information against her husband.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. PATTERSON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). Under the transfer of pairs heretofore announced I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] and therefore withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote I should vote "nay."

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 38, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—38.

Bacon,	Cockrell,	Hoar,	Pettus,
Bailey,	Culberson,	Jones, Nev.	Rawlins,
Bard,	Dolliver,	McCumber,	Simmons,
Bate,	Dryden,	McLaurin, Miss.	Taliaferro,
Berry,	Dubois,	Mallory,	Teller,

Burton,	Harris,	McMillan,	Simon,
Daniel,	Jones, Ark.	Mason,	Tillman.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I offer an amendment, and shall ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out "seventy-five," in line 12, page 2, and insert in lieu thereof "fifty;" so as to read:

Provided, That upon all articles the growth and product of the Philippine Archipelago coming into the United States from the Philippine Archipelago there shall be levied, collected, and paid only 50 per cent of the rates of duty aforesaid.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER].

Mr. FORAKER and Mr. LODGE called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. CULBERSON. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 12, strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty;" so that if amended the proviso will read:

Provided, That upon all articles the growth or product of the Philippine Archipelago coming into the United States from the Philippine Archipelago there shall be levied, collected, and paid only 50 per cent of the rates of duty aforesaid.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BERRY (when Mr. BLACKBURN'S name was called). The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] is paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN]. If the Senator from Kentucky were present, he would vote "yea," and he told me to so announce to the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). Under the transfer of pairs heretofore announced, I vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Owing to my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], I will withhold my vote. Were I at liberty to vote, I should vote in favor of the amendment.

Mr. MCENERY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW]. I do not know how he would vote if he were present. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PENROSE (when Mr. QUAY'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. QUAY] is absent. He desired me to announce that if he were present he would vote in favor of the amendment.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MCMILLAN. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. HALE (after having voted in the negative). I withdraw my vote and announce my pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 43; as follows:

YEAS—29.

Bacon,	Cullom,	Hansbrough,	Platt, N. Y.
Berry,	Dryden,	Kearns,	Quarles,
Burnham,	Fairbanks,	Mason,	Scott,
Burton,	Foraker,	Millard,	Stewart,

Blackburn,	Dillingham,	McComas,	Morgan,
Carmack,	Hale,	McEnery,	Quay,
Daniel,	Harris,	McLaurin, S. C.	Tillman.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to offer the amendment of which I gave notice some days ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as additional sections the following:

SEC. —. That it is not intended by the Government of the United States to permanently annex the Philippine Islands as an integral part of the United States, but it is the determination of the United States to establish, with the consent and assistance of the inhabitants thereof, a government or governments suitable to their wants and condition, and that shall give to the inhabitants the control and administration of their local affairs, such as the raising of revenue and the disposition thereof; the maintenance of peace and order in the several communities of said islands that have been or that may be organized by the people thereof, and eventually to give them their independence.

SEC. —. That there is no intention on the part of the Government of the United States to deprive the people of said islands of their liberties or to subjugate or oppress them, but on the contrary to secure to them the blessings of a free government of their own choice that shall recognize and protect the rights and interests of all the people of said islands.

SEC. —. That it is necessary to the establishment of such government that peace and order shall prevail on said islands in order that the people thereof may be enabled to exercise the rights of freemen and to have free expression of their wishes in the form and character of the government under which they desire to live.

SEC. —. That to this end the Government of the United States will at all times cooperate with the peaceably disposed inhabitants in the formation of such governments, and will defend and protect such government or governments so organized from any foreign interference or attempted control by foreign powers until such government or governments shall be able to defend themselves.

Mr. TELLER. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). Under the transfer of my pair with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS], heretofore announced, I vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Owing to my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], I do not feel at liberty to vote on this or any of the other questions that may come up on the bill. For that reason I shall withhold my vote.

Mr. HEITFELD (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 20, nays, 44; as follows:

YEAS—20.

Bacon,	Cockrell,	Mallory,	Simmons,
Bate,	Foster, La.	Mason,	Taliaferro,
Berry,	Gibson,	Patterson,	Teller,
Clark, Mont.	Hoar,	Pettus,	Vest,
Clay,	McLaurin, Miss.	Rawlins,	Wellington.

NAYS—44.

Carmack,	Hale,	McMillan,	Tillman,
Culberson,	Harris,	Martin,	Turner,
Daniel,	Heitfeld,	Money,	Warren.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAWLINS. Is the minority amendment pending, or is it necessary to offer it now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is necessary to offer it.

Mr. RAWLINS. I now offer it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah offers an amendment in behalf of the minority of the committee, which will be read.

Mr. LODGE. This is the substitute, is it not, for the entire bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the substitute for the entire bill. It will be read.

Mr. ALLISON. It has been read.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, it has been read.

Mr. CULLOM. It has been already read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been read.

The amendment proposed by Mr. RAWLINS, in behalf of the minority members of the Committee on the Philippines, was to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

That, subject to the provisions hereinafter set forth, the United States of America hereby relinquish all claim of sovereignty over and title to the archipelago known as the Philippine Islands.

That from and after the passage of this act said archipelago shall be foreign territory, and all goods entering the United States therefrom shall be subject to the same duties, customs, and imposts as are now, or may hereafter be, prescribed by law for goods entered from other foreign countries: Provided, That during the temporary occupation of said islands, as hereinafter provided, all trade between the same and the United States shall be free.

That the United States shall continue to occupy and govern said archipelago until the people thereof have established a stable government, and until sufficient guaranties have been obtained for the performance of our treaty obligations with Spain, for the safety of those inhabitants who have adhered to the United States, and for the maintenance and protection of all rights which have accrued under their authority.

That as soon as these results have been accomplished it is declared to be the purpose of the United States, which the President is directed to carry into effect, to withdraw from said islands and leave the government, control, and sovereignty thereof to the inhabitants of the same, retaining only such military, naval, and coaling stations as may be designated by the Government of the United States.

Mr. RAWLINS. On that I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HEITFELD (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], and withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BERRY. My colleague [Mr. JONES] is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea." The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] is paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN]. The Senator from Kentucky would also vote "yea," if present.

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 46; as follows:

YEAS—25.

Bacon,	Cockrell,	Martin,	Teller,
Bailey,	Culberson,	Money,	Turner,
Bate,	Dubois,	Patterson,	Vest,
Berry,	Foster, La.	Pettus,	Wellington.

Daniel,	Heitfeld,	McMillan,
Depew,	Hoar,	Morgan,
Dillingham,	Jones, Ark.	Platt, N. Y.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MALLORY. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida offers an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all of section 3 and to insert:

SEC. 3. That until July 1, 1903, the same tonnage taxes shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all foreign vessels coming into the United States from the Philippine Archipelago, and in addition to any tonnage dues or taxes now imposed by the government of the Philippine Islands upon all foreign vessels, except vessels of Spain owned by Spanish subjects engaged in traffic between the ports of the Philippine Archipelago, which are required by law to be levied and collected and paid upon vessels coming into the United States from foreign countries: Provided, however, That until July 1, 1903, the provisions of law restricting to vessels of the United States the transportation of passengers and merchandise directly or indirectly from one port of the United States to another port of the United States shall not be applicable to foreign vessels engaging in trade between the Philippine Archipelago and the United States or between ports in the Philippine Archipelago; and thereafter such provisions shall not apply to vessels of Spain owned by Spanish subjects entering the ports of the Philippine Islands until the expiration of the ten years mentioned in Article IV of the treaty of Paris of December 10, 1898: And provided further, That the Philippine Commission shall be authorized and empowered to issue licenses to vessels or other craft now engaged in lighterage or other exclusively harbor business, but after the passage of this act such licenses, except as herein provided, shall be issued only to vessels or other craft built in the Philippine Islands or in the United States and owned by citizens of the United States or by inhabitants of the Philippine Islands.

And it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, as soon after the approval of this act as practicable, to make and promulgate such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the nationalization of all vessels built in the United States or in the Philippine Islands and owned at the date of the approval of this act and thereafter by inhabitants of said islands not subjects or citizens of any foreign nation; and no inhabitant of said Philippine Islands, not the subject or citizen of any foreign nation, possessed of other qualifications required by existing law to act as an officer of a merchant vessel of the United States, shall be disqualified as an officer of any vessel nationalized in accordance with the provisions of this act by reason of his not being a citizen of the United States. The coasting trade between the Philippine Islands and the United States shall be regulated in accordance with the provisions of law applicable to such trade between any two great coasting districts of the United States, and the coasting trade between the islands of the Philippine Archipelago and between said islands and the other insular possessions of the United States in the Pacific Ocean shall be regulated in accordance with the provisions of law applicable to such trade within one great coasting district of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY].

Mr. MALLORY. I ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HEITFELD (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 23, nays 42; as follows:

YEAS—23.

Bacon,	Cockrell,	Mallory,	Simmons,
Bailey,	Culberson,	Money,	Taliaferro,
Bate,	Dubois,	Patterson,	Teller,
Carmack,	Foster, La.	Perkins,	Vest,

Daniel,	Hoar,	Mason,	Wetmore.
Depew,	Jones, Ark.	Morgan,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I now ask for a vote on the amendment I offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed at the end of the bill to add the following as a new section:

SEC. 8. Nothing herein contained shall be held to mean that the United States intends to incorporate the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands into citizenship of the United States, nor is it intended to retain permanently said islands as an integral part of the United States, but it is the intention of the United States to establish on said islands a government suitable to the wants and conditions of the inhabitants of said islands to prepare them for local self-government, and in due time to make such disposition of said islands as will best promote the interests of the citizens of said States and the inhabitants of said islands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). Under the transfer of pairs heretofore announced, I vote "nay."

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] that, as I understood, he exchanged his pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], both their pairs being absent. Is that correct?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I transferred my pair to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. If he is paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], I withdraw my vote.

Mr. PETTUS. My colleague [Mr. MORGAN] is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], and is absent.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Then I withdraw my vote.

Mr. HEITFELD. I suggest to the Senator from Wyoming that we transfer our pairs, I being paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT], and that will leave the Senator from Wyoming and myself at liberty to vote.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is perfectly satisfactory, and I will let my vote stand.

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MCENERY. I am paired with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 43; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Bcoan,	Clay,	Heitfeld,	Rawlins,
Bailey,	Cockrell,	McLaurin, Miss.	Simmons,
Bate,	Culberson,	Mallory,	Taliaferro,
Berry,	Dubois,	Money,	Teller,

Dietrich,	Hawley,	Nelson,

NOT VOTING—21.

Beveridge,	Hale,	Martin,	Tillman,
Blackburn,	Harris,	Mason,	Turner,
Daniel,	Jones, Ark.	Morgan,	Warren.
Depew,	McEnery,	Penrose,
Dillingham,	McLaurin, S. C.	Platt, N. Y.
Elkins,	McMillan,	Quay,

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. HOAR. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the vote in the Senate on the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole will be taken in gross. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is, Shall the bill pass? On this question the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BERRY (when Mr. BLACKBURN'S name was called). The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] is paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN]. The Senator from Kentucky, if present, would vote "nay."

While on my feet, I will announce that my colleague [Mr. JONES of Arkansas] is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay," and the Senator from Maine would vote "yea."

Mr. HEITFELD (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT], but by arrangement with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], we have transferred our pairs, which leaves the Senator from Wyoming and myself at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. MCENERY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 45, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—45.

Aldrich,	Dryden,	Kean,	Pritchard,
Allison,	Fairbanks,	Kearns,	Proctor,
Bard,	Foraker,	Kittredge,	Quarles,
Burnham,	Foster, Wash.	Lodge,	Scott,

Dietrich,	Hoar,	Perkins,
Dolliver,	Jones, Nev.	Platt, Conn.

NAYS—26.

Bacon,	Cockrell,	Mallory,	Taliaferro,
Bailey,	Culberson,	Martin,	Teller,
Bate,	Dubois,	Money,	Turner,
Berry,	Foster, La.	Patterson,	Vest,
Carmack,	Gibson,	Pettus,	Wellington.
Clark, Mont.	Heitfeld,	Rawlins,
Clay,	McLaurin, Miss.	Simmons,

NOT VOTING—17.

Beveridge,	Elkins,	McLaurin, S. C.	Quay,
Blackburn,	Hale,	McMillan,	Tillman.
Daniel,	Harris,	Morgan,
Depew,	Jones, Ark.	Penrose,
Dillingham,	McEnery,	Platt, N. Y.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before putting that motion, the Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business——

Mr. HOAR. I wish there might be a brief executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will first lay before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 3057) appropriating the receipts from the sale and disposal of public lands in certain States and Territories to the construction of irrigation works for the reclamation of arid lands.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] has asked unanimous consent that a protest against the decision of the Chair, as the Chair understands it, might be filed and printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HOAR. Let that go over until to-morrow.

Mr. TURNER. The Chair does not state that accurately. I do not ask unanimous consent. I present the protest as a right under the Constitution of the United States in behalf of the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], and ask that it be spread upon the Journal of this body and printed in the RECORD.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts has moved——

Mr. HOAR. If my colleague will allow me, I wish to move a brief executive session.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 25, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 24, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

The Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, Almighty God, our heavenly Father, that republics are not always ungrateful; that the people of the United States remember with gratitude the distinguished services of their illustrious sons as witnessed by the demonstrations in honor of our beloved Washington and in the encomiums pronounced upon his life and character. We honor him for what he was and what he did, and shall ever hold him up to the world as the Father of his Country.

We thank Thee, too, that we can lay aside whatever prejudices we may have against other forms of government and extend cordially a friendly greeting to a visiting representative of a sister nation and welcome him to our hospitable shores; and we pray that the friendly relations which have always existed between this Government and Germany may continue forever; that the distinguished visitor may return in safety to his people with pleasant recollections of his visit, our people, and their sacred institutions; and Thine shall be the praise, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, February 21, 1902, was read and approved.

LIGHT-HOUSE, KEWAUNEE, WIS.

Mr. MINOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 6300, to provide for the erection of a dwelling for the keeper of the light-house at Kewaunee, Wis.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $7,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the construction of a dwelling for the keeper of the light-house at Kewaunee, in the State of Wisconsin, in accordance with the recommendations of the Light-House Board.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman what committee has reported this bill?

Mr. MINOR. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. That committee reports it unanimously.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Is it recommended by any of the various departments?

Mr. MINOR. The Light-House Board have earnestly recommended this legislation. Some fifteen years ago a light-house was constructed on the end of the harbor at Kewaunee, Wis., about 600 feet out in Lake Michigan, and a keeper was employed at a salary of $560 a year. Some six years ago a steam fog whistle was added to the light-keeper's outfit, and an additional keeper employed at a salary of $450 per year. A keeper's dwelling has never been provided for those people, and the result is that they have been compelled to rent dwellings far removed from the light-house on account of the peculiar formation of the shore, and it is very inconvenient for those people to comply with the rules of the Light-House Board, and the Light-House Board has recommended this numerous times, but it has never as yet received any consideration at the hands of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, and agreed to, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and substitute in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to erect a dwelling for the keeper of the light-house at Kewaunee, Wis., at a cost not to exceed the sum of $5,000."

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MINOR, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS, TEXAS.

Mr. BALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11611) to divide the State of Texas into four judicial districts.

SEC. 2. That the district judge of the northern judicial district as heretofore constituted and in office when this act takes effect shall be the district judge of the northern judicial district as hereby constituted; the district judge of the eastern judicial district as heretofore constituted and in office when this act takes effect shall be the district judge of the eastern judicial district as hereby constituted, and the district judge of the western judicial district as heretofore constituted and in office when this act takes effect shall be the district judge of the western judicial district as hereby constituted.

The President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint a district judge for the southern judicial district of Texas as hereby constituted, who shall possess and exercise all the powers conferred by existing law upon the judges of the district courts of the United States, and who shall, as to all business and proceedings arising in said southern judicial district as hereby constituted or transferred thereto, succeed to and possess the same powers and perform the same duties within said southern judicial district as are now possessed and performed by the district judges of the judicial districts in said State of Texas.

SEC. 3. That the clerk of the circuit court and the clerk of the district court in the northern judicial district as heretofore constituted and in office when this act takes effect shall continue to be the clerks of the circuit and district courts, respectively, of the northern judicial district as hereby constituted, until their successors respectively shall be appointed and qualified.

The clerk of the circuit court and the clerk of the district court of the eastern judicial district as heretofore constituted and in office when this act takes effect shall be the clerks of the said courts, respectively, in the southern judicial district as hereby constituted until their successors respectively shall be appointed and qualified. The district judge of the said eastern judicial district as hereby constituted is hereby authorized and empowered to appoint a clerk of the district court in said district, and the judge of the circuit court is authorized and empowered to appoint a clerk of said circuit court in said district in the manner provided by law and said clerks respectively shall possess the powers and perform the duties within said judicial district conferred by law on the clerks of circuit and district courts.

The clerk of the circuit court and the clerk of the district court of the western judicial district as heretofore constituted shall continue to be the clerks of the circuit and district courts, respectively, of the western judicial district as hereby constituted until their successors respectively shall be appointed and qualified.

SEC. 4. That the marshals of the northern, eastern, and western judicial districts as heretofore constituted and in office when this act takes effect shall continue to be the marshals of said northern, eastern, and western judicial districts as hereby constituted, respectively, and until their successors, respectively, shall be appointed and qualified.

The President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint a marshal for the southern judicial district of Texas as hereby constituted, who shall within his jurisdiction possess and exercise all the powers conferred by existing law upon the marshals of the United States.

SEC. 5. That the district attorneys for the northern and western judicial districts as heretofore constituted shall continue to be the district attorneys of the northern and western judicial districts as hereby constituted, respectively, and until their successors, respectively, are appointed and qualified.

The district attorney for the eastern judicial district as heretofore constituted shall continue to be the district attorney for the southern judicial district as hereby constituted and until his successor is appointed and qualified, with the same salary he is now receiving.

The President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint a district attorney for said eastern judicial district of Texas as hereby constituted, who within his jurisdiction shall possess and exercise all the power conferred by existing law upon the district attorneys of the United States.

SEC. 6. That the office of judge, marshal, and district attorney in each of said judicial districts, deputy marshals and assistant district attorneys, and all other officers authorized by law and made necessary by the division of the State of Texas into four judicial districts and by the provisions of this act, and all vacancies created by said division, in either of said districts, as constituted by this act or hereafter occurring, shall be filled in the manner provided by existing law. The salaries, pay, fees, and allowances of the judges, district attorneys, marshals, clerks, and other officers in said districts, until changed under the provisions of existing law, shall be the same, respectively, as now fixed by law for such officers in the said judicial districts of Texas as heretofore constituted, except as herein provided.

SEC. 7. That all causes and proceedings of every name and nature, civil and criminal, now pending in the courts of the judicial districts of the State of Texas as heretofore constituted, whereof the courts of the southern judicial district of the State of Texas as hereby constituted would have had jurisdiction if said district and the courts thereof had been constituted when said causes or proceedings were instituted, shall be, and the same are hereby, transferred to and the same shall be proceeded with in the southern judicial district of the State of Texas as hereby constituted, and jurisdiction thereof is hereby transferred to and vested in the courts of said southern judicial district, and the records and proceedings therein and relating to said proceedings and causes shall be certified and transferred thereto; and all causes and proceedings of every name and nature, civil and criminal, now pending in the courts of the several judicial districts of Texas as heretofore constituted, whereof the courts of the several judicial districts of the State of Texas as hereby constituted would have had jurisdiction if said districts and the courts thereof had been constituted as under the provisions of this act when said causes or proceedings were instituted, shall be, and the same are hereby, transferred to, and the same shall be proceeded with, in the said several judicial districts of the State of Texas as hereby constituted the same as if said judicial districts had been constituted and created as by the provisions of this act when such causes or proceedings were instituted, and jurisdiction thereof is hereby transferred to and vested in the courts of said judicial districts, respectively, as hereby constituted, and the records and proceedings therein and relating to said proceedings and causes shall be certified and transferred thereto: Provided, That all motions and causes submitted and all causes and proceedings, both civil and criminal, including proceedings in bankruptcy, now pending in the judicial districts of Texas as heretofore constituted in which the evidence has been taken in whole or in part before the present district judges of the judicial districts of Texas as heretofore constituted, or taken in whole or in part and submitted and passed upon by the said district judges, respectively, shall be proceeded with and disposed of in the said judicial districts, respectively, as heretofore constituted, where said motions and causes were submitted or where such evidence was taken in whole or in part and submitted and passed upon as hereinbefore mentioned.

SEC. 8. That all prosecutions for crimes or offenses hereafter committed in either of said judicial districts as hereby constituted shall be cognizable within the district in which committed, and all prosecutions for crimes or offenses committed before the passage of this act in which indictments have not yet been found or proceedings instituted shall be cognizable within the judicial district as hereby constituted in which such crimes or offenses were committed.

At El Paso, in the county of El Paso, on the second Monday of May and the first Monday of November.

SEC. 15. That the marshal and district attorney for the southern judicial district of the State of Texas created and appointed under the provisions of this act shall each receive a compensation or salary of $3,500 per annum, payable as the marshals and district attorneys in the other districts are paid under the provisions of existing law, and the marshals and their deputies shall give the bond required of marshals and deputy marshals under the provisions of existing law.

SEC. 16. That the clerk of the district court appointed in the southern judicial district as created by this act shall reside at one of the places designated therein for holding courts, and such clerk shall appoint at least three deputies, one of whom shall reside at each of the other places in said district designated for holding courts therein.

SEC. 17. That each of the referees in bankruptcy residing in the several judicial districts of the State of Texas as constituted by this act shall continue to act as such within their respective districts, and all proceedings commenced and pending before them, respectively, at the time this act goes into effect shall be continued and disposed of in the court and district to which jurisdiction thereof is given by the provisions of this act.

SEC. 18. That all laws and parts of laws, so far as inconsistent with the provisions of this act, are hereby repealed.

SEC. 19. No provision in this act contained shall be construed to continue in office any officer of said courts or judicial districts for a term longer than that for which he was appointed or to limit or restrict the power of removal in accordance with the provisions of existing law.

SEC. 20. That this act shall take effect on the 1st day of July, 1902.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PAYNE. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BALL] some questions. I understand that the object of all the language that we have been listening to in this bill is to create another district court in the State of Texas. I have been so informed.

Mr. BALL of Texas. The bill has two purposes, first to create a new judicial district in Texas, and second, to reorganize and rearrange the existing three districts, so as to equalize the work of the different judges and procure the proper dispatch of the business pending in the Federal courts.

Mr. PAYNE. So that it will give four districts, instead of three?

Mr. BALL of Texas. It gives an additional district; yes.

Mr. PAYNE. And I understand that the population of Texas has increased a million in the last decade?

Mr. BALL of Texas. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. I have also understood—I do not know how true it is—that since the recent discovery of oil in Texas, and the development of business resources there, that some of the stringent anti-trust laws have gone into innocuous desuetude, so to speak.

Mr. BALL of Texas. I do not think that is true so far as the laws are concerned.

Mr. LANHAM. That is a great mistake.

Mr. PAYNE. You draw a distinction between the laws and the enforcement of them?

Mr. BALL of Texas. There is sometimes a difference.

Mr. LANHAM. Those laws are being very vigorously enforced.

Mr. PAYNE. They are?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes; and they ought to be.

Mr. PAYNE. When has there been a case?

Mr. BALL of Texas. I will state to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and to the House that this bill has had a very exhaustive consideration at the hands of the Judiciary Committee; that it was considered first by the committee as a whole and then referred to a subcommittee, which reported upon it favorably, and that subsequently the chairman of the Judiciary Committee [Mr. RAY] has gone very carefully over it, and it is now reported unanimously from the committee, that the district which the bill creates is necessary for the proper conduct of the Federal court business of Texas.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BALL] that I think he presents a great deal better case for another district than any I have heard for some time.

Mr. BALL of Texas. I thank the gentleman from New York.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. BALL of Texas. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does the report of the committee state in detail the amount of business?

Mr. BALL of Texas. What is the question?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does the report of the committee state in detail the amount of pending business?

Mr. BALL of Texas. All that information was furnished to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Can the gentleman state about the extent of business there is now—the number of cases?

Mr. BALL of Texas. I have not the data before me, because it was filed with the Judiciary Committee, and I do not remember; but I do remember that a sufficient showing was made before the Judiciary Committee and the subcommittee to satisfy them that this court is necessary, that the three district judges of Texas, who are young, active, and vigorous men, devote their entire time to the business in their courts, and all say that this bill is absolutely necessary for the relief of the present districts and the proper dispatch of the business in the Federal courts.

Mr. JONES of Washington. You don't know whether the report in this case sets up the amount of business or not?

Mr. BALL. I do not.

Mr. LANHAM. I would state that it does not set out in detail the business of the various courts, but I will say that there are now pending in the courts, the three district courts as at present constituted, as well as I remember, about six hundred cases.

Mr. CLAYTON. Civil cases?

Mr. LANHAM. Cases of all kinds.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection. The Chair hears none.

The question being on the engrossment and third reading of the bill, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BALL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

NONRESIDENTS' PURCHASE OF LAND IN CUBA.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged report from the Committee on Insular Affairs.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish the House of Representatives such information concerning the number of acres of land in Cuba purchased by nonresidents of the island since the date of American occupation as is shown by the reports to and the records of his Department and by the records of the military government of the island of Cuba, giving the consideration, the names and places of residence of purchasers as shown by the recorded instrument of conveyance, and also the number of acres contained in each tract so conveyed; also the total acreage of cultivated sugar land in the island of Cuba now owned by citizens of the United States and by citizens of other countries foreign to Cuba.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Insular Affairs was read, as follows:

Amend by inserting the word "also" after the word "and" in line 12 of the resolution.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I am unable to understand upon what claim this is privileged. There has been none stated, no ground stated that makes it privileged.

Mr. TAWNEY. This is a resolution of inquiry addressed to a department of the Government.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. A resolution from the department?

Mr. TAWNEY. A resolution of inquiry.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Addressed to the department?

Mr. TAWNEY. Addressed to the department.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. And regularly introduced here?

Mr. TAWNEY. Regularly introduced and referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs and reported by me this morning.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. This is a resolution, then, reported by the Committee on Insular Affairs.

Mr. TAWNEY. This is a resolution reported by the committee and it is unanimously reported.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. TAWNEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid upon the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WOOTEN, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. BLACKBURN, for two days, on account of important business.

DISPOSAL OF CERTAIN REFUSE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up for passage the bill H. R. 11241.

The SPEAKER. This being District of Columbia day, the gentleman from Wisconsin, on behalf of that committee, calls up the following bill for the consideration of the House:

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11241) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate, in the District of Columbia, the disposal of certain refuse, and for other purposes," approved January 25, 1898.

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding anything contained in the act entitled "An act to regulate, in the District of Columbia, the disposal of certain refuse, and for other purposes," approved January 25, 1898, the health officer of said District may issue permits for the erection and maintenance of such temporary privies as may be necessary during the pendency of building operations, during encampments, and under similar circumstances, under such restrictions as may be essential in the judgment of said health officer to prevent nuisance or danger to public health; and no person shall erect or maintain a temporary privy in said District without a permit from said health officer so to do, or otherwise than in accordance with the terms of such permit.

SEC. 2. That any person who shall violate or aid or abet in violating any of the provisions of this act shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $100 or by imprisonment in the workhouse of said District for not more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court. All prosecutions under this act shall be in the police court of said District, on information signed by the city solicitor or one of his assistants.

SEC. 3. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The amendments recommended by the commtttee were read, as follows:

Page 1, lines 8, 9, and 10, strike out the words "as may be necessary during the pendency of building operations, during encampments, and under similar circumstances."

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, who reported the bill.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill was prepared by the health officer of the District of Columbia, and, as the text of the bill explains, it is to meet emergencies. When large bodies of men come to the capital and there are extensive buildings constructed it becomes necessary to take care temporarily of the refuse. This bill simply authorizes the District Commissioners to so arrange for the care temporarily of this refuse. The bill has met with the unanimous approval of the District Committee, and I think, with the amendments that the committee have made to it, it should be passed.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. Certainly.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Who pays the expense of the removal of this refuse?

Mr. NORTON. The District pays it.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. And not the builders of the building?

Mr. NORTON. The builders will pay for it, but it will have to be done under the regulations of the District Commissioners.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Will the effect of this bill be to assess on the builders the expense incurred by the District Commissioners in the removal of this refuse?

Mr. NORTON. It will. But when there are congregated here large bodies of men, such as the Grand Army Encampment and other organizations, I understand, then it will have to be paid by the committees who invited them. This simply regulates and controls the construction of those buildings.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Then it imposes no other burden upon the District than now imposed.

Mr. NORTON. None whatever; and it carries no appropriation.

Mr. JENKINS. I ask for a vote on the bill as reported.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JENKINS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, was laid on the table.

TAXES AND TAX SALES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I now call up for passage the bill H. R. 11400.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11400) to amend an act entitled "An act in relation to taxes and tax sales in the District of Columbia," approved February 28, 1898.

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act in relation to taxes and tax sales in the District of Columbia," approved February 28, 1898, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That the assessor of the District of Columbia shall prepare a list of all taxes on real property in said District subject to taxation on which said taxes are levied and in arrears on the 1st day of July of each year hereafter; and the Commissioners of said District shall fix date of sale and publish the said list, with notice of sale, in a pamphlet, of which not less than 2,000 copies shall be printed for distribution to taxpayers applying therefor. That the said Commissioners shall give notice, by advertising twice a week for three successive weeks, beginning on the third Monday in March of each year hereafter, in the regular issue of three daily newspapers published in said District, that the said pamphlet has been printed and that a copy thereof will be delivered to any taxpayer applying therefor at the office of the collector of taxes of said District; and if the taxes due, together with the penalties and costs that may have accrued thereon, shall not be paid prior to the day fixed for sale, the property will be sold, under the direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, at public auction at the office of the said collector of taxes, commencing at least three weeks after the first publication of said notice and continuing on each following day, Sundays and legal holidays excepted, until all said delinquent property is sold; a description sufficient to identify the property shall be considered a proper description.

"SEC. 2. That upon the day specified aforesaid the Commissioners shall proceed to sell or cause to be sold any and all property upon which such taxes remain unpaid, and continue to sell the same every secular day until all the real property as aforesaid shall have been brought to auction and sold. In case no other person bids the amount due, together with penalties and costs, on any lot, the said collector of taxes shall bid the amount due, together with penalties and costs, on the same and purchase it for the District.

"SEC. 3. That every purchaser other than the District at any sale of property sold as aforesaid shall pay the amount of his bid to the collector of taxes within five days after the last day of sale. If any such purchaser shall not have paid his bid or the same shall not have been collected from him within the time above mentioned, the Commissioners may set aside the sale for which the bid was made, and all the rights of the purchaser under such bid shall thereby be extinguished, and the said collector of taxes shall thereupon be held to have bid the amount due on the said lot and to have purchased it for the District. Immediately after the close of the sale, upon payment of the purchase money, the said collector of taxes shall issue to the purchaser a certificate of sale, and if the property shall not be redeemed by the owner or owners thereof within two years of the last day of sale, by payment to the collector of taxes of said District, for the use of the legal holder of the certificate, the amount for which it was sold at such sale and 12 per cent per annum thereon, a deed shall be given by the Commissioners of the District, or their successors in office, to the purchaser at such tax sale, his heirs or devisees, or to the assignee of such certificates, which deed shall be admitted and held to be prima facie evidence of a good and perfect title in fee simple to any property bought at said sale herein authorized: Provided, That no deed shall be issued until all taxes and assessments appearing upon the tax books against the property are paid, with penalties, interests, and costs, including taxes for the years for which the District purchased the property at tax sale: Provided, That no property advertised as aforesaid shall be sold upon any bid not sufficient to meet the amount of tax, penalty, and costs; but in case the highest bid upon any property is not sufficient to meet the taxes, penalties, and costs thereon said property shall thereupon be bid off by the said collector of taxes, in the name of the District of Columbia; but the property so bid off shall not be exempted from assessment and taxation, but shall be assessed and taxed as other property; and if within two years thereafter such property is not redeemed by the owner or owners thereof, or their legal representatives, by the payment of the taxes, penalties, and costs due at the time of the sale and that may have accrued after that date, and 8 per cent per annum thereon, or if any property two years after having been so bid off at any sale in the name of said District under this act or any other law in force is not or has not been so redeemed as aforesaid (unless it shall be shown that the sale for taxes was irregular and void), then the Commissioners of the District, or their successors, shall, in the name of and on behalf of the District of Columbia, sell said property at public or private sale and issue to any purchaser of such property a deed, which deed shall have the same force and effect as the deed hereinbefore provided for in this section for property sold at the regular annual sale: Provided, however, That no such deed shall be issued until all assessments, taxes, costs, and charges due the District, of whatever nature, shall have been paid in full: And provided also, That minors or other persons under legal disability be allowed one year after attaining full age or after the removal of such legal disability to redeem the property so sold, or bid off by the collector of taxes in the name of the District of Columbia as aforesaid, from the purchaser or purchasers, his, her, or their assigns, or from the District of Columbia, on payment of the amount of purchase money so paid therefor, with 8 per cent per annum interest thereon as aforesaid, together with all taxes and assessments that have been paid thereon by the purchaser or his assigns between the day of sale and the period of redemption, with 8 per cent per annum interest on the amount of such taxes and assessments. When such property is redeemed from a purchaser other than the District of Columbia, and when such property shall be redeemed from the District of Columbia, it shall, except as to the period of redemption, be upon the terms and conditions hereinbefore provided for in the case of redemption by persons not under legal disability: Provided, however, That failure on the part of the District, from any cause whatsoever, to enforce the liens acquired aforesaid shall not release the property from any tax whatsoever that may be due the District: Provided further, That at any time after any property shall have been bid off as aforesaid by the collector of taxes, and before the expiration of the time allowed for the redemption thereof, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, through the collector of taxes of said District, may issue to any person or persons, upon the payment of a sum not less than the aggregate amount of the taxes, penalties, and costs due at the time the property was bid off by the collector and that may have accrued after that date, a certificate of sale, reciting the time when same was bid off as aforesaid and the amount paid by the person or persons to whom such certificate may be issued; and if the property shall not be redeemed by the owner or owners thereof within two years from the date when bid off by the collector, by payment to the collector of taxes of said District, for the use of the legal holder of the certificate, the amount paid by the person or persons to whom such certificate was issued and 12 per cent per annum thereon, a deed shall be given by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, or their successors in office, to the legal holder of such certificate, which deed shall have the same force and effect as the deed hereinbefore provided for in this section for property sold at the regular annual sale; and that the foregoing provisions in this section in reference to the sale at public or private sale of property in the District of Columbia advertised for sale for taxes and bid off by the collector of taxes be, and the same are also hereby, made applicable to all property in the District of Columbia subject to taxation whereon taxes levied and in arrears on the 1st day of July, 1897, or at any time prior thereto, have not been paid, and which at any sale held previous to said date were bid off in the name of the District of Columbia; that when for any reason any tax sale of real property in the District of Columbia may be set aside or canceled, such property may be readvertised and sold at the next ensuing annual sale.

"SEC. 4. That the owner of any property sold as aforesaid, or any other person having an interest therein at the time of redemption, may redeem the same from such sale at any time within two years after the last day of sale by paying to the collector of taxes, for the use of the purchaser, his heirs and assigns, the sum mentioned in the certificate of sale therefor, with interest thereon at the rate of 12 per cent per annum after the date of such certificate of sale, together with any tax or assessment which the holder of said certificate shall have paid between the days of sale and redemption, with interest on the same at the rate of 8 per cent per annum.

"SEC. 5. That the collector of taxes shall, within twenty days, exclusive of Sundays and legal holidays, after the last day of the sale hereinbefore provided for as aforesaid, file with the recorder of deeds a written report, in which he shall give a statement of the property sold, other than that sold to the District of Columbia, to whom it was assessed, the taxes due, to whom sold, the amount paid, the date of sale, the cost thereof, and the surplus, if any. Any surplus remaining after the collection of taxes, penalties, and costs on any real estate shall be collected as provided in sections 161 and 162, chapter 6, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the District of Columbia, and shall be deposited by the collector of taxes to the credit of the surplus fund, to be paid to the owner or owners, or their legal representatives, in the same manner as other payments made by the District.

"SEC. 6. That the said Commissioners shall not convey any property sold for taxes if they shall discover, before the conveyance, that the sale was for any cause invalid and ineffectual to give title to the property sold; but they shall cancel the sale and cause the purchase money, together with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, to be refunded to the purchaser, his representatives, or assigns.

"SEC. 7. That the expenses of advertising and the printing of said pamphlet shall be paid by a charge of 50 cents for each lot or piece of property advertised.

"SEC. 8. That this act shall take effect from and after its passage; and that all acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith be, and the same are hereby, repealed."

Mr. JENKINS. I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JENKINS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SUPERVISION OF CERTAIN CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I now desire to call up the bill H. R. 10372.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10372) to transfer to the Secretary of the Interior such supervision of the Government Hospital for the Insane, Freedmen's Hospital and Asylum, and the Washington Hospital for Foundlings as may have been conferred upon the Board of Charities of the District of Columbia under the act approved June 6, 1900, creating such board.

Be it enacted, etc., That such supervision over the Government Hospital for the Insane, Freedmen's Hospital and Asylum, and the Washington Hospital for Foundlings as may have been conferred upon the Board of Charities of the District of Columbia under the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to establish a Board of Charities for the District of Columbia," approved June 6, 1900 (31 Statutes, p. 664), is hereby transferred to the Secretary of the Interior, who shall have exclusive supervision over said institutions and the disbursement of all appropriations therefor, subject to the laws of Congress.

SEC. 2. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to enter into contract with the Secretary of the Interior for the care, at a reasonable rate per capita, of all persons from the District of Columbia treated in the Freedmen's Hospital and Asylum.

SEC. 3. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. JENKINS. I ask for a vote on the bill, Mr. Speaker.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JENKINS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF DEEDS IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS AND PORTO RICO FOR REAL ESTATE IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the bill H. R. 11474.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11474) for the acknowledgment of deeds and other instruments in the Philippine Islands and Porto Rico affecting land situate in the District of Columbia or any Territory of the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That deeds and other instruments affecting land situate in the District of Columbia or any Territory of the United States may be acknowledged in the Philippine Islands and Porto Rico before any notary public appointed therein by proper authority or any officer therein who has ex officio the powers of a notary public: Provided, That the certificate by such notary in the Philippine Islands or in Porto Rico, as the case may be, shall be accompanied by the certificate of the attorney-general of Porto Rico or the governor or attorney-general of the Philippine Islands to the effect that the notary taking said acknowledgment was in fact the officer he purported to be.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JENKINS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, that concludes all the work from the Committee on the District of Columbia this morning.

DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the consideration of appropriation bills, intending to call up the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DALZELL). The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. CURTIS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the diplomatic appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11471) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I move to dispense with the first and formal reading of the bill, that we may proceed to general debate, and afterwards take up the bill and consider it by paragraphs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation bill is to provide for the needs of our foreign service for the coming fiscal year. It has nothing radical in the way of change; it has been carefully considered, every part of it, by the committee, and is reported with the concurrence of all the members of the committee.

The only fault that is found in the bill, and I believe that fault is agreed to as necessary by every member of the committee, is that it does not make many provisions that we would like to have in changing our service, which is defective, illy paid, and incomplete. But, remembering the experience of the past, and the spirit and temper of the House, we have not attempted any considerable change, leaving that for the consideration of the House when it comes to general legislation on the consular service.

I will briefly state the changes we have made, and they can be explained with more detail when we come to consider the bill by paragraphs as each particular item is read.

Last year we appropriated $1,848,728.76 for the service. We have here increased that in numerous items, raising the pay of officers, furnishing additional clerk hire for consulates where there was imperfect provision, and providing a considerable sum for the legation building in China, so that the appropriation bill is altogether for $1,931,678.76, or a total increase of $82,950.

In the appearance of the bill there is a greater change than in fact. The consulates in former bills or in the law heretofore were arranged in a system of schedules and classes and grades that have gradually fallen into incongruity and confusion; they were perplexing, and any member who attempted for the first time to disentangle them was confounded by this enumeration. It has caused numerous errors in the accounting department, and confusion and delay in the State Department. We have placed all the consulates of the United States—from the most important and highly paid consul-generals to the smallest of the posts—in alphabetical order, so that anyone may instantly turn to the post he wishes to examine, find its compensation, and, if he desires, can find also a designation by schedule and class as stated in the old law.

That subject was discussed when we had the bill last year before us, and our committee reported the same alphabetical arrangement and the House adopted it. At the other end of the Capitol the gentlemen were so wedded to the very conservative and ancient confusion of the law that they restored it. It is evidently as unsystematic as the method in which we print and entitle House documents, appending wholly unintelligible titles. A large part of the literature of this House is so published.

In the great item of contingent expenses for foreign missions, $150,000, we have increased it $25,000. That is a large sum, but we thought it better to recognize the fact that the country is growing; that its business, its wants, and its needs in its foreign relations require more service and more expenditure. It was thought better to meet it in this way than to evade the question and let it come, as heretofore, in deficiency bills; and this is about what was spent last year and what is required.

In the recent confusion and trouble in China we have had to do as the Governments of other countries have done—make new provision for our legation. Last year we appropriated $40,000 for the purchase of land on which to erect a legation, and it was thought that we could buy the property requisite and which was already selected for it, but the price demanded was so unreasonable that the Department would not accept it.

That lot is now taken by the Korean Government. It is the land upon which stands the building now occupied by our legation under a lease to the United States. That lease will expire very speedily, in a few months, and we have therefore provided an appropriation of $60,000 with which to purchase absolutely land that is believed to be more advantageous for the purpose. We have to have the money speedily, as the building we now occupy will soon be wanted. So this is made at once available.

The emergency fund is increased $12,000. The provision for the Mexican Boundary Commission, which has been engaged, with a similar body of Mexican officers, for a number of years on a work now approaching completion, requires less money, and so we have appropriated $2,600 less than last year for that purpose.

There is a sum of $3,000 that is new, set apart for our representation at the international conference of the Red Cross at St. Petersburg. This convention was made several years ago. Similar provision was then made to do our part, and this sum will be required for our contribution to the expenses of the coming conference.

About one-third of the consular officers of the United States, it is probable, on fair consideration, are not adequately paid. This conclusion is not dependent upon the statements of the consuls, each one of whom might perhaps say that he was not paid sufficiently; at least, that would be his natural tendency. But most of those who are conversant with the business carried on at these consulates—the department officers, business men who travel, all who have to do with the business of our people as carried on through these offices—agree that the consular officers are inadequately paid.

Knowing something of the temper of this House, the committee has gone very slowly in granting increases of pay. We have made such increase in a dozen or more cases, generally about $500 at each office, and in many places have allowed a little more for clerk hire, such allowance being absolutely essential for the conduct of the daily business of these larger offices, where often property to the amount of hundreds of thousands of dollars has to pass through the consulates to the United States.

At Amsterdam, where the trade is very large and where the invoice fees collected amounted to something more than $7,600 last year, we have raised the pay of the consul $500. The former salary has been $1,500, which we have increased to $2,000.

At Budapest, where there is a feed office, we have fixed the consul's salary at $1,500, whereas the fees taken there have amounted to $1,461.

It is desirable in every case to have these consuls controlled and regulated by fixed rules and receiving compensation determined as salary, rather than leave open the temptation to exaggerate fees.

At Dawson City, where the cost of living is so enormous, we have increased the salary $500. It was high before, but all the stories coming from there represent the cost of living as something unparalleled.

At Ensenada, in northern Mexico, where the business is rapidly increasing, where our people trade more and more every year, and where on account of the increase of business and the rise of prices no man could live on the salary heretofore allowed, $1,000, we have fixed the salary at $1,500.

At Freiburg, in Germany, where a very large business is done, the invoices alone showing receipts amounting to $3,336, we have made an addition of $500.

At Guatemala City, where there is a consul-general, we have also made an increase of $500. It is not a place where much business is done; but there is a great deal of business done in towns almost in sight. Guatemala City is the capital, and the offices at these other places are subordinate, under the control and direction of this central officer, who, as I have said, is a consul-general.

At Patras, in Greece, we have made an increase. This is the chief commercial port of that Kingdom, and the pay of the consul has been inadequate. We allow him $500 additional.

At Pernambuco, where there has been a considerable increase of business, we have raised the salary $500.

At Port Limon, a feed office doing a large business, the fees have amounted to between $2,000 and $3,000. We have fixed the salary at $1,500. That is a new office.

Pretoria, South Africa, is a place where there has been no consul for a long time, because the pay has not been sufficient to enable a man to live upon it there. There has been an acting officer there. We have made a slight amendment by allowing $1,000 additional.

At Puerto Cortez the case is similar to that just referred to—Port Limon—where the business is large, and the fees collected are the only pay of the consul. It is better that there should be a salary allowed, and we have fixed it, as in the other case, at $1,500.

At Santos, a coffee port in South America, which I believe is one of the most unhealthy posts in our consular service, we have increased the pay $500.

At Stanbridge, a small feed office in Canada, where the duties are really important, and where it is necessary there should be an efficient officer, we have allowed $1,000.

At Three Rivers, where the business has been increasing rapidly, we allow $500.

The whole body of increases in all these consular offices added together amounts to $11,000. There is also an increase, amounting to $2,142, in the amount allowed to consulates for clerk hire. I will not stop to recapitulate the details, only a small amount being allowed in each case.

We have allowed $10,000 for the cost of preparing and publishing the consular reports, which members are constantly asking for in additional numbers, and which are called for so largely by our commercial houses, so that it was thought the Department should be authorized to issue more copies than have been issued heretofore. The contingent expenses of the consular service are increased by $5,000. That was done in order to enable the Department, if it saw fit, to take advantage of the opportunity to provide a system cable cipher which would be convenient for merchants and tend to enlarge our commerce at the chief consular posts. It is an experiment, and it is put within the discretion of the Department. These are the essential items of change from the existing law.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. HITT. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I would like to say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] that I agree with him that the consular service of our country is defective and ought to be reformed, if not entirely remodeled. I would be willing to follow the guide of the gentleman from Illinois, by reason of his great experience in nearly all matters nonpolitical in our foreign affairs, but this is piecemeal legislation, largely.

Let me ask the gentleman whether this process of oiling of a cog or the repairing of a part of the gear is not somewhat unjust and unequal, when the whole machine, as it seems, ought to be overhauled? Now, does he give us any promise, has he any hope, that the proper committee will submit to this Congress—and I think Congress is in favor of remodeling it—a measure providing for a reorganization? Can we have any hope, can the gentleman give us any promise, that this Congress will pass on this American consular system that so long has been defective?

Mr. HITT. The Committee on Foreign Affairs has been considering several bills on the subject. We expect to report one, and will try to get consideration in this House for a bill reorganizing the whole consular service, making it a harmonious system, fairly well paid, so selected and disciplined and so administered that it will be an effective aid to commerce, to public interests, to the protection of American citizens—an efficient and satisfactory service.

Whether it will pass the House depends upon the gentleman himself and 300 other gentlemen like him. The attempt has been tried heretofore, and such a bill has not passed because of reasons that will come up again when the time comes for discussion. Now, this bill is a very poor way of mending the consular service, but it would be defeated right here in the House if we had reported 100 amendments. I have seen it tried too often. The confusion that comes from commencing too rapidly to adjust the whole service by piece meal is never successful in bringing out a good bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I would like to state further——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. HITT. In a moment. The cases that we have tried to adjust are such as are plain and manifest cases, and those only have we brought in, for this reason: By the rules of the House any member here can by a single objection throw out any one or all of these amendments that we have brought in. They are all subject to the point of order, and so we have to go very carefully. We have put in what we believe to be so perfectly defensible that everyone will agree to it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I do not mean to be understood as standing in the attitude of opposing this measure. In fact, I think the provisions are perhaps wholesome, but I would like to have an entire reorganization of the system. I think there is a demand for it throughout the country.

Mr. HITT. I am heartily in accord with the gentleman, and I think he will find out that the committee is doing its best to carry out the wishes he expresses.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will not take up further time of the committee at this moment.

[Mr. COCHRAN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COCHRAN. I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting certain historical allusions and certain tables that I have prepared and which if I had expected to speak this morning I would have had here.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. HITT. I suppose they all bear upon the subject of his remarks and on the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HITT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS] forty minutes.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, the items of this bill have been so fully set forth by the chairman and its general provisions have been presented to the House in such a way that I deem it unnecessary to make any further remarks in regard to those questions. But the question arises, in the passage of these annual appropriation bills appropriating the money therein contained for the various objects referred to, whether we have performed our whole duty in this regard when we have passed those bills. I propose to take advantage of the license of debate on appropriation bills to make some references to what is provided in this bill in regard to our consular service.

It is a curious fact that, notwithstanding the great importance of this subject in relation to our business affairs, the business men of our country up to a very recent time have shown but little interest in the improvement of this service.

The legislation that has taken place upon this subject has been most crude and very far apart in its passage.

Our consular service was founded principally under the acts of July 31, 1789, and July 1, 1790. From that period down to 1856 there was practically no legislation relating to this important branch of our service. The next legislation affecting this subject was enacted in 1883, which took away the excessive fees which then existed in regard to our shipping. But it had the disadvantage also that in taking away those fees that were for the benefit of shipping, it took away, to a large extent, the compensation of our consuls, and from that day to this they have had very little and unequal compensation.

I am glad to say, Mr. Chairman, that things have come about so that the people are beginning to take some interest in this subject. The boards of trade throughout our country and chambers of commerce and business men have taken up this question and are now pressing it upon the Congress for its reorganization.

In evidence of this fact I cite the following declarations of the various boards of trade and chambers of commerce of our country:

The National Board of Trade, at its thirty-second annual meeting, held in Washington in January, 1902, resolved—

That the National Board of Trade strongly urges Congress to pass, at an early day, such legislation as is necessary to reorganize our consular service on the lines of the bills now before it, which demand greater efficiency, permanency of tenure, with compensation sufficient to attract agents of such technical and commercial education as is absolutely essential to the maintenance and growth of our vast commercial interests.

ROOMS OF THE BOARD OF TRADE OF THE CITY OF BALTIMORE, RIALTO BUILDING,
Baltimore, January 9, 1899.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention and beg your consideration of the following report and resolution unanimously adopted by this board at meeting held this day.

Very respectfully,

HENRY C. LANDIS, Secretary.

A BILL TO INCREASE THE EFFICIENCY OF THE FOREIGN SERVICE OF THE UNITED STATES AND TO PROVIDE FOR THE REORGANIZATION OF THE CONSULAR SERVICE.

The committee on foreign commerce, to whom was referred a communication from the Merchants' Association of New York, dated December 27, 1898, calling attention to a bill now pending before Congress, entitled "A bill to increase the efficiency of the foreign service of the United States and to provide for the reorganization of the consular service," beg to submit the following report:

The subject of improving the consular service of the United States has in former years been under consideration by this board, and resolutions were adopted by it on March 4, 1895, in favor of a bill then pending in the Senate, introduced by Senator LODGE, having this object in view.

The large yearly increase in the foreign trade of the United States, and especially the great expansion that is now taking place, makes it more than ever important that our consular service should be placed on a footing of efficiency that will compare favorably with other countries, and notably with our chief competitors, Great Britain and Germany.

The bill now pending in Congress, known as House bill No. 2524, and which has been favorably reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, is designed to place the consular service on a better footing than that upon which it now stands: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Board of Trade of Baltimore is heartily in favor of such measures being adopted by Congress as will secure efficient and creditable service, and would urge the passage of House bill No. 2524 at the earliest practicable date.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to the members of the United States Senate and House of Representatives, and that the Senators and Representatives from Maryland be requested to do all in their power to secure passage of the bill.

THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF SAN FRANCISCO,
San Francisco, January 24, 1899.

Hon. DAVID B. HENDENSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Realizing with other commercial bodies the great need of a radical improvement in the system under which our consular service is operated, and also being firmly impressed by the great importance of having this department of our Government in as efficient condition as possible, particularly as we are now, as a nation, engaged more than ever in a great commercial struggle to place our products in the markets of the world, and as a means of accomplishing this end we consider the aid which can be rendered by a properly organized corps of consuls of immense benefit, we therefore respectfully urge that you will take such steps as will bring up for the earliest possible consideration in the House of Representatives the bill known as House bill No. 10524, as a means of effecting the desired improvement in that branch of the service.

Trusting that this will meet with your approval and hearty support, we have the honor to subscribe ourselves,

Your obedient servants,

THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF SAN FRANCISCO,
CHARLES NELSON, President.
E. SCOTT, Secretary.

THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF SAN FRANCISCO,
San Francisco, January 25, 1899.

MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK,
New York Life Building, New York City.

DEAR SIRS: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your favors of the 9th and 10th of January in regard to a bill introduced by Congressman ADAMS, namely, H. R. 10524, for the improvement of the consular service. This is a matter in which we are in full and hearty accord with you, and have the pleasure of inclosing you a copy of a letter sent to Hon. DAVID B. HENDERSON, one of the members of the House Committee on Rules. We have sent a similar letter to each of the members of that committee, also practically the same to Hon. John A. Barham, Hon. James G. Maguire, Hon. EUGENE F. LOUD, and Hon. Samuel G. Hilborn, of the California delegation in the House, with the slight addition of a request to urge upon the House committee the necessity and urgency of this matter.

Joining with you in the hope that the bill will meet with an early approval, I beg to remain, Yours, very respectfully, E. SCOTT, Secretary.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE AND MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE,
Cincinnati, January 9, 1899.

Mr. WILLIAM F. KING,
President the Merchants' Association of New York,
New York Life Building, New York City.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your communication under date December 27, in regard to consular service, I have the honor of inclosing copy of action upon the same by our board of directors.

Truly, yours, C. B. MURRAY, Superintendent.

CINCINNATI CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

The Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce, recognizing the importance of effective service in the consular offices representing our Government in its influence for the promotion of the industrial interests of our country, joins in commending the passage of the measure pending in Congress known as H. R. bill No. 2524, Report No. 1460, entitled "A bill to increase the efficiency of the foreign service of the United States and to provide for the reorganization of the consular service," it being believed that such measure would be promotive of improvement in results of each service.

LITTLE ROCK BOARD OF TRADE,
Little Rock, Ark., January 12, 1899.

MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION,
New York City, N. Y.

GENTLEMEN: Herewith please find copy of resolutions adopted by our board of directors.

Whenever we can be of service, please command us.

Respectfully, etc.,

LITTLE ROCK BOARD OF TRADE,
By GEO. R. BROWN, Secretary.

LITTLE ROCK BOARD OF TRADE, LITTLE ROCK, ARK.

Resolved by the Little Rock Board of Trade, That we heartily concur in the memorial of the Merchants' Association of New York City favoring the passage by Congress of the bill entitled "A bill to increase the efficiency of the foreign service of the United States and to provide for the reorganization of the consular service."

Resolved, That the consular service should be made as efficient as possible and placed on a par with the service of Germany and Great Britain, and under the civil-service rules.

MEMPHIS MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE,
Memphis, Tenn., February 21, 1899.

Mr. WILLIAM F. KING,
President Merchants' Association, New York, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor of transmitting to you herewith resolution adopted at a general meeting of this exchange, held this morning, upon the subject of the reorganization and improvement of the consular service of the United States.

Very truly, yours, N. S. GRAVES, Secretary.

MEMPHIS MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION, MEMPHIS, TENN.

[Resolutions adopted at a general meeting of the Memphis Merchants' Exchange, February 21, 1899.]

Whereas an effort is now being made to secure such legislation by the Congress of the United States as will insure a thorough reorganization of the consular service of the United States and increase its efficiency by establishing a classified service, with permanency of tenure and with appointments and promotions based on examinations as to experience and fitness for positions: Be it

Resolved, That the Memphis Merchants' Exchange, in the interest of American commerce and the life and property of American citizens in foreign countries, ask the earnest consideration of our Senators and Representatives to the organization and improvement of the consular service, and invoke their prompt and hearty cooperation in securing the early consideration of the bill recently introduced in the House of Representatives by the Hon. ROBERT J. ADAMS, of Pennsylvania, known as H. R. 10524, Report No. 1460; and further be it

Resolved, That we urge the adoption of said bill No. 10524 or such other measure as will substantially carry into effect its provisions.

Resolved also, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to each of the Senators from this State and to the Representatives in Congress from this particular district, as also the adjoining districts of the States of Mississippi and Arkansas, with the request that they interest themselves in securing the proposed legislation.

[OFFICIAL SEAL.] N. S. GRAVES, Secretary.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MANUFACTURERS OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Philadelphia, Pa., January 31, 1900.

Hon. ROBERT R. HITT,
Chairman Committee on Foreign Affairs,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: As it is not possible for me to appear in person before your committee and thus convey an expression of opinion from members of the National Association of Manufacturers relative to the pending bills for the reorganization of the consular service, I beg leave to submit herewith some suggestions on behalf of the 1,100 manufacturers embraced in the membership of this association.

Upon many occasions this association has placed itself on record as desiring most earnestly the reorganization of our consular service in such manner as will increase its efficiency and eradicate many of the evils which now exist as the result of the present system.

Perhaps the position of this association is most concisely and most clearly expressed in the following recommendations, which were transmitted to the President under date of April 5, 1897:

That the changes in the consular service shall be as few as possible.

That removals shall be made only because of demonstrated incapacity.

That vacancies shall be filled as far as possible by promotions or transfers.

That appointments shall be made solely upon the basis of proper qualification for the position, and without regard to political service.

That only American citizens shall be appointed to any consular offices.

I can only repeat the recommendations to express the present position of this association, and I believe that they will equally well express the opinion of every thoughtful business man who has any familiarity with the needs and requirements of our consular service, and with its present condition.

I am not one of those who pronounce sweeping condemnation of our consular service; for a somewhat intimate acquaintance with many of our consular officers, and a careful investigation of the records of a large number of them, have shown me that the service contains many men of marked ability, and also a large number of men who are both unqualified for and unworthy of the positions they hold: That we have any efficient men in the service is not due to the system under which the service is organized and maintained; the efficient men are there in spite of the system rather than because of it. It is in accord with the sound principles which have governed every business enterprise, and which as well should be applied to the conduct of the business functions of our Government that this branch of the governmental service should be organized and conducted upon such a basis as shall insure the appointment of competent men rather than make their presence in the service merely the result of accident. I take this to be the principle which has actuated those who have formulated the bills looking to the improvement of the consular service that have been introduced into Congress and are now pending.

With particular reference to H. R. 1026, which I have examined with much care, I beg to offer the suggestion that while this measure seems to provide a very efficient manner for placing the consular service upon a much better business basis, it is lacking in one or two points, the provision of which would make the meaning and purposes of the bill clearer and stronger. For example, while the wording of several paragraphs very clearly implies that vacancies in each grade shall be filled by promotions from the next lower grade, this fact is not stated in specific terms, and to place this method of procedure beyond question, I beg leave to suggest that the wording of the bill should be made more specific on this particular point.

Furthermore, there seems to be in this bill no provision touching the manner of making removals from the consular service, a matter of quite as much importance as the making of appointments or promotions.

I take the liberty of suggesting that the wording of the bill should be made very clear and specific on this point, to provide that removals shall not be made except for cause, and that the causes and the manner in which removals therefor should be made should also be very distinctly expressed.

With the general purposes of this bill I am in hearty accord, and I know that the ends it seeks to accomplish command the most earnest approval of the business men of the United States as a whole. The astonishing increase in our foreign trade during the past three or four years I regard as only the beginning of our conquest of the world's markets, and the consular service of the United States is a most essential and vital factor in the growth of this business. It is this that gives to the manufacturers of the United States such deep interest in everything that tends to improve the efficiency of our consular representation.

Respectfully yours, THEODORE C. SEARCH,
President National Association of Manufacturers.

RESOLUTIONS ON IMPROVEMENT OF CONSULAR SERVICE BY THE TRANS-MISSISSIPPI COMMERCIAL CONGRESS.

Whereas the functions of our consular service are almost exclusively confined to matters pertaining to our foreign commerce, which should therefore be regarded as a branch of a great business enterprise, and administered strictly on business principles; and

Whereas the rapid growth and increasing importance of our foreign commerce specially demand men of the best business qualifications and unsullied reputations, who will command alike the confidence and respect of all who have business with them: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Trans-Mississippi Commercial Congress earnestly urges such thorough organization of our consular service as to secure the most efficient service to our business interests, and it believes that this can be best accomplished by basing appointments on experience, ability, and character, unbiased by any political consideration, thus assuring that efficiency which is only attained by extended experience. With this end in view it urges upon its Representatives in Congress the passage of bill No. 1026 now pending in the House of Representatives.

The Executive of our country, with that great extent of view which he possesses, in sending in his message, which covers to an extraordinary extent all the vital topics which relate to the interests and welfare of our country, wrote as follows in regard to this subject:

The consular service is now organized under the provisions of a law passed in 1856, which is entirely inadequate to existing conditions. The interest shown by so many commercial bodies throughout the country in the reorganization of the service is heartily commended to your attention. Several bills providing for a new consular service have in recent years been submitted to Congress. They are based upon the just principle that appointments to the service should be made only after a practical test of the applicant's fitness, that promotions should be governed by trustworthiness, adaptability, and zeal in the performance of duty, and that the tenure of office should be unaffected by partisan considerations.

The guardianship and fostering of our rapidly expanding foreign commerce, the protection of American citizens resorting to foreign countries in lawful pursuit of their affairs, and the maintenance of the dignity of the nation abroad, combine to make it essential that our consuls should be men of character, knowledge, and enterprise. It is true that the service is now, in the main, efficient, but a standard of excellence can not be permanently maintained until the principles set forth in the bills heretofore submitted to the Congress on this subject are enacted into law.

Mr. Chairman, the President has in that terse sentence covered all the interests and requirements in the matter of our service. As to the matter of appointments, I wish to speak entirely in a nonpartisan way. The consular service relates to the business interests of our country. It is essentially the business branch of our Government.

They are sent abroad to represent the interests of the citizens, to protect their rights, and to furnish the citizens at home with reliable information, so that the avenues of trade may be opened up and the necessary information furnished to the merchants of our country in that respect. The tenure of office should be permanent, or for a long period of time. What incentive have consuls in our service to-day for great and adequate work, when it is known that their tenure of office is limited to four years, and that, even without a change in the political party, the consul probably is removed at the end of four years?

Just at the very time when he has probably learned the language of the country; just at the time that he has learned the trade requirements and the avenues for opening business to our people; just at the very time that he has learned how to report the important facts and valuable information, he is brought back to our country and a novice, unprepared in any way, unlearned in the methods of securing that information, is sent out to replace a competent man, and he, too, is brought home when he has reached a similar efficiency and is liable to the same change. Surely that is a wrong principle; surely it is not in the interests of our business development; surely there is great ground for correction.

It is proposed to have examinations, and to have men pass such an examination in order to enter this service. But we are met with this objection: "We want business men. We do not want classic students from universities; we do not want men who have passed technical examinations. Such examinations as are proposed may not, it is true, prove the entire fitness of the applicant for the post of consul, but they are surely better than the requirement that the consul should be skilled in manipulation of primaries and conventions in his own district. What we do need is to have business men of our country. Give us business men, who know what to report and how to start out and get the information and give it to the merchants."

Mr. Chairman, if it was the successful business man that sought this position there might be some force in that argument. Successful business men do not seek consulships. He is better off in his business at home. It is a poor business man who does not make $2,000 or $2,500 a year. It is the unsuccessful business man who seeks this position; it is the broken-down merchant, who has failed, who wants to be sent abroad and occupy this honorable position. Therefore the cry that these places should be entirely filled with business men fails, for you do not get a class of men who are competent who would be successful in maintaining the position. Permanent tenure is absolutely essential in order to secure energetic work on the part of our representatives. How could you expect a man to live in a tropical climate, where his northern nature is enervated by a warm atmosphere? How can you expect a man that is enervated in this way to work hard in order to furnish information when he knows that his endeavor will receive no response and no acknowledgment in the way of promotion, and that he simply will be returned home at the end of his four years?

Give that man a hope that he will be promoted; give that man an incentive to work—that he will be moved both to a better climate and an increased pay—and you give him an incentive to furnish our people with that information which is so essential to our development.

Then, Mr. Chairman, our consuls should be allowed to be moved from one place to another. There is no reason why a fixed tenure should not be introduced in this regard. The President further says in his recommendation relating to the expansion of our trade—which is now the most vital question before our country, the one to which all our economic tendencies are moving, the one to which the genius of the American people has brought our production to such a point that it is absolutely necessary that we should seek new markets—this service is one of the most essential vehicles in which to develop the trade by furnishing the necessary information to our people.

Now, as to the qualifications of the men who should enter the consular service. They should be men who have prepared themselves with a knowledge of international law, in the knowledge of treaties, in the knowledge of the laws relating to decedents, and in the laws relating to shipping. They should know how and what are the rights of the American citizen residing abroad, and be prepared to enforce them and to protect them. This takes specially trained men.

Next, there is a necessity for an examination before they enter the service; an assurance that when once in they should be continued for long periods. How can we expect the proper class of young men to enter the service, to take the necessary education, which represents invested capital; how can we expect such a class of young men to seek the service unless there is some assurance that the time and money that they have invested will be returned by a tenure of office existing, say, for life, or over some considerable period?

To illustrate, Mr. Chairman, this one item that came under my observation in visiting the Commercial Museum, in the city of Philadelphia, an institution designed for the expansion of our trade, furnishing information to our merchants at home. There is shown there a number of specimens of labels which it is insisted shall be put upon the goods for the Chinese, making them attractive. To display these goods in China without being labeled in that way would simply prohibit their sale. What consul, going to that country for the first time, could possibly be aware of such a custom, prejudice, or superstition, whichever you may call it, on the part of the inhabitants of that great Empire? Four hundred millions of people are at our disposal to cultivate commercial relations, and the want of information on a simple little item like that might hurt, if not injure permanently, our trade with that great Empire.

Hence, I insist that these men should remain in the country long enough to learn its peculiarities, commercial requirements, and opportunities for development which it gives to our merchants. Another point in which our consular service is at present in a most chaotic state. I did not wonder that the gentleman from Indiana arose and made some inquiries in regard to the salaries of our consuls. There is no set of men occupied in the same class of work that are paid so unequally as our consuls, from the great salaries and fees that are given to the men in the large cities of Europe down to the poor men who are serving in a tropical climate at $1,500 a year. You can run the gamut of the scale and see the inequality that exists in this business branch of our Government. It is essential that men doing the same service with equal energy shall be paid an equal compensation.

Justice demands it, and no government can get the best service out of these servants that is not sufficiently just in that requirement that those doing the same service should be paid equal compensation. The only way salaries can be changed now is by this method, which, as our chairman has explained, is really illegal, and which can be defeated by a point of order raised by any member on this floor. We want legislation that will remedy these difficulties. I am glad to say that there are bills now, which have the support of the business community, that will shortly be reported to the House, and my object in making these remarks is to call my colleagues' attention to these bills in such a manner that I hope it will enlist their sympathy for one of these bills, whichever may be reported out of the committee. These bills are founded on the doctrine of nonpartisanship. They open to all the citizens of our country the opportunity to apply for the service, and therefore we can appeal to gentlemen on both sides of the Chamber to rally and give their support to this nonpartisan bill, founded on equal justice to all American citizens.

I will quote another illustration of the necessity of trained men in this service. Before the breaking out of the Spanish war it was necessary that our Government should have the most reliable information of what was taking place in the Kingdom of Spain. I will ask any man in this House, How can a consul who does not understand the language of the country to which he is sent—who can not read the papers—in what position is he to furnish his home government with necessary information? What does he know of the temper of the press, if he can not read the editorials? What does he know of the doings of the people, if he can not speak their language and mingle among them. How can any man who is thus tied of tongue, living among a people whose language he does not know, gather information such as his home government may require? Why, Mr. Chairman, that one consideration alone is sufficient to show the necessity for a change in the organization of this service.

This need is more pressing now than at any previous time in our history. With the great development that is taking place in our manufacturing organizations, the proposed development of our merchant marine, the extension of our colonies into all quarters of the world, it becomes more than ever essential that we should have a trained corps of consuls.

The necessity for an examination as to the qualifications of an applicant for such a position must be evident when we consider what the necessary qualifications are. The candidate should be competent to pass an examination on such subjects as the laws regulating shipping, the commercial treaties existing between our own and other countries, our laws relating to intestates, the consular regulations of the United States, and such other subjects as relate to consular duties. The candidate should also be required to have a practical knowledge of French or of the language of the country to which he is to be sent.

It may be asked where will such a body of trained men be found? Mr. Chairman, only last winter, when this subject was pending before the House, I received letters from two universities asking with regard to the probabilities of the passage of a bill such as I am advocating and declaring their willingness to introduce a special course to prepare men for these positions.

The wisdom of a system of this kind has been demonstrated in Great Britain. When these positions there were thrown open to competitive examination the number of applicants the very first year increased from 5,000 to 15,000, showing that men were ready to enter the service—that they would gladly avail themselves of the advantages thus held out of permanent tenure, insuring them life service, if they desired it, in this peaceful pursuit, tending to build up the foreign commerce of their country. If such has been found to be the fact in Great Britain, then, in view of the similarity of our people and their well-known energy, a similar condition will be found to exist in our own country. The young men of our country are alive to the advantages such positions may offer them. Give them the opportunity, supported by the assurance that it means a livelihood for life, and you will have our consular service filled with the best ability and energy that the young men of our country can furnish.

Mr. Chairman, in the bills proposed to be brought before Congress the salaries are raised throughout the entire service. But, more than that, the compensation of the different consulates is equalized, so that if these bills should become laws the charge now brought as to the inequality of compensation in different branches of this service will be done away with. The service as a whole will be equalized.

It is only recently that the business interests of the country have been pressing this subject upon the attention of Congress. But that is not the case in other directions. Those who have been most familiar with the necessities of the case have for a long time been urging action by Congress upon this subject. All our Secretaries of State, all our Assistant Secretaries of State, who have had this matter under their immediate supervision, have been pressing this measure of reform upon Congress.

Nearly every man who has been prominent in the consular service, though he may have felt that his mouth should be closed while he was exercising active official duties under the Government, has, on retiring from office, testified to the necessity for this change, and has shown wherein the necessity lay. I am glad to say, also, that even those who occupy positions in this service have rallied to the support of this measure.

I cite the following expressions, showing that this statement is not unfounded:

Secretary of State Livingston, in 1833, and Secretary of State Buchanan, in 1846, called attention to the evils existing in the service, but it was not until 1884, when Secretary of State Frelinghuysen discussed the subject in his admirable and exhaustive report, transmitted to Congress by President Arthur March 20 of that year, that the strong necessity for action was made apparent. In it he said:

"Until recently the demands of Europe, which consumed the greater portion of our exports, and the condition of the producing countries were such as to give us control in the supply of certain products, such as breadstuffs, provisions, cotton, and petroleum, etc. The demands of Europe for all these products and of the other continents for petroleum especially were so positive and our producing conditions so favorable as to give us practically a monopoly for their supply.

"These conditions of international demand and supply are undergoing radical changes, which the near future will intensify.

"The efforts which have been made and which are being made by Europe to enlarge the field of supply in the above-mentioned products, aided by the ambition which prevails in all countries for the development of natural and artificial resources to meet their own wants and to supply the wants of others, have resulted in awakening competition for the supply even of those products which we have heretofore controlled. It is true that thus far this competition has not affected our trade to any appreciable extent, but the desire for development which is now abroad and the ambition which prevails to increase the production (outside of the United States) of the foregoing articles render consular supervision of absolute importance. The complex commercial relations and industrial interests which now prevail in Europe have originated hostility to American products in many countries and afford additional reasons for the enlargement and perfection of the consular service."

The same necessity has been pressed upon the Government at home by our representatives in the service abroad. In 1864 John Bigelow, consul at Paris, wrote:

"The practical results of our system, which in this respect has no parallel under any other government, are—

"(1) That we are obliged to select for consular posts men without the proper training and qualifications.

"(2) We are obliged to select men who have no intention of making a career in the consular service. Consequently they have no great inducement to qualify themselves properly for a post which they can hope to hold only for a brief term by the acquisition of knowledge of little or no use to them in any other profession.

"(3) The fact that our consuls are so transitory deprives them of their proper influence in the consular body, as well as in most political and social circles where it is the interest of the Government that they should circulate

"(4) Such frequent changes prevent anything like uniformity or regularity in the conduct of consular business, which results in a serious prejudice to commerce and a grave inconvenience to the Department.

"(5) With each change of Administration the Government is exposed to lose the benefit of whatever knowledge and influence its agents have acquired during their terms of service, and thus most of the time is served by raw and, therefore, to a considerable extent, by incompetent officers.

"There is no other country in the world where the tenure of the consular office is dependent upon the permanence of the home Administration. Nor can the practice be defended by any consideration whatever which looks to its usefulness and efficiency."

Surely no stronger evidence could be adduced, coming from one of experience in the consular service.

The Hon. Robert Adams, jr., when United States minister to Brazil, in 1889, wrote in the North American Review:

"The method by which the men are chosen for the positions necessarily brings forth poor candidates, while the short tenure of office, which is generally limited to the Presidential term, almost certainly so if a change of party takes place, and the meager salaries paid—in some posts hardly sufficient to support life in a respectable manner—deters competent men from entering the service. It should also be remembered that there is no promotion for efficient service; that a consul can not hope for a change of climate from a trying to a more healthful and genial one after a given period of service, and that there is always the prospect of returning to the United States broken down in health, unfitted to resume private business, and without prospect of further employment at the hands of the Government."

His excellency the Chinese minister, in a recent address before the University of Pennsylvania, said:

"Most European governments send young men to the East to learn the language and study the customs of the country. After a residence of two or three years, when they have proved themselves proficient, after passing a strict examination, they are then placed in responsible positions as student interpreters, consular assistants, etc. Merit is rewarded by promotion. Thus those governments have competent men specially fitted for service in the Orient. It might not be unwise for your Government to adopt a similar system."

Assistant Secretary Rockhill, in an article in the Forum for the month of February, 1897, sums up the evils of our consular system as follows:

"(1) Imperfect mode of selection of consular officers.

"(2) No permanency of tenure.

"(3) Inadequate compensation, resulting in (a) the exaction of excessive fees and (b) the creation of consular agencies to increase salaries.

"(4) Excessive number of fee consulates and commercial agencies.

"(5) Imperfect enforcement of regulations, especially as regards amounts of fees and their collection."

This judgment from the late Assistant Secretary of State, who had especial charge of the consular service, is certainly deserving of great weight upon this subject.

The demand is growing in every direction. For the first time in many years the President of the United States in his official communication to Congress has referred to this necessity. The boards of trade all over the country have sent in resolutions indorsing a measure of this kind. The National Board of Trade, which met here in Washington only a short time ago, embracing representatives from almost every chamber of commerce throughout our country, heartily indorsed this project. Business men individually have given the measure their support. And we find, although the spectacle is a new one, members of Congress rising and asking questions, showing their interest in this measure. Above all, as I have said, in view of the advancement and expansion of our trade into our new possessions, it is necessary that this question should come before us.

Now, my colleagues, in closing I appeal to you one and all to lay aside any partisanship on this question. I know there are some gentlemen who have a prejudice against the law now on our statute books known as the civil-service law. I wish to keep this matter apart from that question. Consuls are apart from the general officeholders of this country. They are a small class of men, about 300 in number, who do not live in this country. I also know the feeling on the part of some members against giving up patronage. But, sir, no man need have any doubt in his mind as to the relinquishment of patronage with respect to consulships. I speak from personal experience. There will hardly be a man who will not have two or three constituents pressing him for appointment in the consular service. He is a lucky Congressman, even if a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee, who gets one appointment in the consular service.

What is the practical result? You place one constituent who goes abroad and you make dissatisfied the two or three who remain at home. When you turn and ask their support, as you may, for renomination, you may find the disappointed probably against you, and the man whom you have appointed, if you ask him to come home and support you, will tell you that he feels the obligation and that he would like to do it, but that his salary is so small that he can not afford the expense. And so you are left without the support of the one man upon whom you have a right to rely and the opposition of those whom you were obliged to disappoint. Whatever view you take of this question, whether economic or political, you will find that it is to the interest of the country and to our individual interest that this service should be reorganized and changed.

More than one Secretary of State, in their succession in office, have told me that their time is so taken up by the importunities of Senators and Congressmen for these places that they can hardly attend to the affairs of state. It is essential that they should be relieved of this and be enabled to give their time to those greater questions which affect our country so much. It has been urged here, and with perfect truth, that our service has received compliments. We have able men in our consular service, and I am the last one not to give them full credit for leaving their country and serving it in this occupation, but it is the principle that I stand for. The appointment of these men is an accident; they may be good or they may be bad. It is impossible for the President to go into every case; he is called upon of necessity to rely upon the indorsements, the judgment, and opinions of others, and the result is that many disappoint his expectations, without any responsibility on his part. I ask that we inaugurate this system by which men may pass examinations, and thus relieve the Secretary of State and the President from these importunities, a system whereby the salaries may be equalized and whereby we can raise up the men in the service and give them a chance, so that if they do good work they will be retained and promoted, and if you do you will find that our service will be vastly improved and will give that efficiency which we have a right to expect.

Mr. Chairman, our country grows. The events of the last few years have placed us to the very foremost among the nations of the earth. Our commerce and trade are extending in a way that is almost phenomenal. The prospect of this country was never before so bright.

Let us go on in that development; let us give employment to every man, woman, and child in our country; let the hum of the factory and the smoke from the stacks whirl and curl together; let everyone have that prosperity and happiness under the institutions of our Government; but let us also remember that the Government can not proceed, that this prosperity can not continue unless, with that foresight which becomes a great and glorious people, we will put the machinery of government in such order, we will take advance steps to place our service on a par with that of any other country in the world, that America in this regard, like every other, will be to the front; that we will command the best talent of our country; that we will be assured that the best men will enter into it; and then, with that industry, ingenuity, and talent of our country we can press forth in the production of our mills and factories, knowing full well that the information that will come to us as to where to ship the products will be of that reliable character from energetic, pushing, educated Americans in our consular service that will bring renown and credit to the country and glory and prosperity to the inhabitants thereof. [Applause.]

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE] to fill the time now.

Mr. DINSMORE. I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I wish to-day to make a few "untutored remarks" about the cavities into which the tariff advocates in this country are daily depositing themselves—to expose a few of the inconsistencies in the present tariff condition, with side lights of the effect of tariff upon trusts.

Mr. Chairman, there is a curious tragedy-comedy now going on in this country; a comedy, in so far as those who are engaged in it are concerned and a tragedy in so far as the effect upon the American people is concerned. In the first scene of that tragedy-comedy, which is a tragedy-comedy of only one act, the advocates of tariff taxes appear as boasters and barons, and in the second scene of the one-act play they appear as beggars at the door of legislative halls. I want to show you how, when they are advertising their schemes and engaged in the business of developing trade, they unconsciously answer every argument which they make when they appear before the committees of the House and Senate as beggars for legislation. Now, Mr. Chairman, upon what ground are tariff taxes advocated? There have been from the beginning of the Government two schools. One is ours, and the other is yours. One has held that the Government had no right to tax any citizen except for the purpose of raising a revenue to support the Government.

The other has contended that, under the general-welfare clause of the Constitution, Congress has the right to levy taxes for purposes of "protection;" that a part of the "public welfare" is the encouragement of individual enterprise, or "business interests," as they call it. Now, suppose a tariff tax raises neither revenue nor furnishes any needed protection, then upon what ground can it possibly be advocated? If people engaged in a given industry sell their goods all over the world to foreigners, where, of course, they neither are, nor can be, protected as producers by our tariff tax, then one of three things must follow: They are either selling at cost, or below cost, or for a reasonable profit. Now, if they are selling either at or below cost, then they must expect one of two things, either to recoup at the expense of the American consumers in the home market, at more than a reasonable profit, or else to fail in their business, if they keep it up long.

We object to the theory that there is any right in the Federal Government, even within the lines of your long-cherished doctrine of protectionism, which you worship as a fetich, to levy a tax to enable the home producer to take possession of a foreign market at the expense of the home consumer. We deny that you have a right to fix your laws so that a man can sell at a loss abroad and "recoup" upon me and upon other citizens of this country for the purpose of enabling him to make a profit out of his entire business put together, foreign and domestic. Democrats and Republicans alike, under their respective theories, must and will resent the foreign market "recoupment theory."

Now, if, upon the other hand, one is selling at a reasonable profit to the foreign consumers, then a tariff tax can answer but one purpose, and that purpose is to enable its beneficiary, under its protection, to get from the home consumer an unreasonable profit by shutting out from the home market the foreign producer, whom he can beat in any market.

Mr. Chairman, we object, I say, to building up foreign trade at the expense of the American people. Let us see what some of these things we are daily and yearly selling abroad are. Not long ago a gentleman by the name of Vanderlip, who was recently Assistant Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, wrote an article for Scribner's which was pronounced by the Outlook to be "thoroughly judicial in tone and as setting forth in strong relief the facts which have created [in Europe] the American alarm." The article was headed "The American invasion of Europe."

I want to read from this for the purpose of establishing the fact that in a dozen or more branches of American industry, highly protected at home by Dingley tariff rates, we are selling the product all over the world, and are demonstrating the fact that we can hold our own with the foreign producer and with the so-called "pauper labor" of Europe, right in the market where the "pauper labor" produces and where the foreign capital is exploited.

I know it will be answered by some that a good deal of this selling has taken place for the purpose of "building up a market" and "opening" it. But that can not be said with truth, because it has been going on now for half a dozen years. A man can not habitually sell at a loss for the purpose of establishing a new market without ruining himself, unless, as I said a moment ago, he can recoup by some legislative favoritism in another market, which in this case is the home market.

What does Mr. Vanderlip say?

American locomotives, running on American rails, now whistle past the Pyramids and across the long Siberian steppes. They carry the Hindoo pilgrims from all parts of the Empire to the sacred water of the Ganges. Three years ago there was but one American locomotive in the United Kingdom. To-day there is not a representative line there on which trains are not being pulled by American engines.

In Egypt, in India, in England competing in the colonies and in the home country with the locomotive and rail makers of Great Britain! In Siberia, in the protected market of Russia! Competing with the entire world!

And yet, Mr. Chairman, with these facts staring you in the face, if it were proposed in this House to-day to reduce the tariff upon rails or upon locomotives there would be a cry going up from all the men engaged in those industries in this country. They would crawl upon their very bellies, as beggars before the American Congress, with uplifted whites of eyes and outstretched hands, pleading that a reduction of duty would make beggars of them and would throw out of employment American labor.

Mr. Vanderlip says further:

American bridges span the rivers on every continent. American cranes are swinging over many foreign moles. Wherever there are extensive harvests, there may be found American machinery to gather the grain. In every market of the world tools can have no better recommendation than the mark, "Made in America."

That is from a Republican Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. He is engaged now as a tariff boaster. Later on doubtless he, with others who agree with him, will be engaged in the second scene of the one-act tragedy-comedy as a tariff beggar.

This structural iron which our manufacturers are selling everywhere is mainly the product of the steel trust, and yet how you scored, as a blasphemer against sacred things, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] when he wished to alter the Dingley bill in this respect, and how greedily you adopted a special rule to prevent him from offering an amendment to that effect!

You are keeping up a tariff on agricultural implements and making Southern and Western farmers pay extortionate prices for them, and our agricultural implement makers are meeting the world in competition "wherever there are extensive harvests!"

Hear Vanderlip, your own witness, again:

We have long held supremacy as a producer of cotton. We are now gaining supremacy as makers of cloths. American cottons are finding their way into the markets of every country. They can be found in Manchester, on the shores of Africa, and in the native shops of the Orient.

Think of that, Mr. Chairman.

As well as on the shores of Africa and in the native shops of the Orient.

Think of the triumph of our cotton manufacturers selling cotton goods in Manchester.

Oh, what a veritable "another Daniel come to judgment" is this "wise young man," Vanderlip! "I have thee, Jew, upon the hip!" Begging protection in the home market and selling American cotton goods in Manchester, the home of cotton manufacturing!

Oh, that is what they are doing. Mr. Vanderlip says so, and he has told the truth. And yet the moment you raise your voice and ask to reduce the duty even a little bit, so that these same men can not make the home consumer pay as high a price as they are now making him pay, the cry goes out at once that you are threatening to "murder and destroy American industry;" that you are "striking American labor." Here is this great chief authority saying that we are not only meeting England and Germany all over the world in fair and equal competition in cottons, but also selling them in Manchester itself. Some member behind me says: "They sell cheaper there than here." Of course our manufacturers sell cheaper there than they do to us. But the point that I am dwelling upon now—whether they sell cheaper to us or not is outside of this question—the point is that they sell cheaper in England than the English can sell the same goods, or they would not sell them at all. Hear our Daniel further: "American windmills are working east of the Jordan."

Mr. GRAHAM. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. GRAHAM. I would ask the gentleman from Mississippi if he does not imagine that it is true that the system of protection has built up this trade to the extent that it has expanded now?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. No; "the gentleman from Mississippi" never was so simple as to have that sort of an "imagination." I am poetic in my temperament, but not that much so. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The gentleman from Mississippi can tell the gentleman from Pennsylvania what has built it up; the broadest and most expansive area of free trade that ever existed on the surface of the earth—[renewed applause on the Democratic side]—the free trade between the States and Territories of the American domain. [Renewed applause.]

I can tell my friend what was the second factor that built it up. A people of peculiar individuality, self-reliant in their every fiber, built it up—people who had protected themselves from wild nature and wilder men, who had had to resort to every nerve-spring and invention in a new country, and, later on, after the pioneer stage of life had passed, resorted to the same invention and the same self-reliance and the same individuality to meet new conditions in a new country with improved machinery, labor-saving devices, cheaper production, and better articles. I can tell the gentleman another reason for it. We have not been weighted down by the immense cost of maintaining militarism which has weighted Europe down. We have not imposed on every industrial enterprise an immense tax for army and navy and colonial purposes, robbing those engaged in them of a great part of their capital, nor have we condemned almost every full-grown man to a life of from three to five years out of the workshop, to become a part of the army, as an idle consumer, and that, too, at the most useful, productive, and receptive time of his life. Our progress in the march which has fitted us to conquer the markets of the world is not a thing of recent birth, and it has been, moreover, constant and ever forward.

Now and then a sporadic or spasmodic check has been given to our progress, but that has been under high tariffs, low tariffs, and moderate tariffs alike. An advancing people is like the advancing of the tide when on the rise. It goes forward at the first and then recedes for a time—goes back a little—and goes forward further the next time, until it reaches its height.

Mr. BURK of Pennsylvania. I want to ask the gentleman from Mississippi whether this condition obtained from the year 1892 to 1896, and if the same opportunities for development were present during that period as since 1896?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Not as fully developed, and the same opportunities were presented to the country.

Mr. BURK of Pennsylvania. But no protection to the American industries.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Oh, wait. We were during that period experiencing first, and later recovering from, a panic. We have had panics before. We have had not only the panic of 1893, but there were four great panics before, and if the gentleman were as zealous a student of history as he is a political partisan he would have discovered that these panics have come under all sorts of tariff legislation.

Moreover, the particular panic referred to did not have its birth in America. It began with the failure of the Baring Brothers, of London, and swept over the world, reaching us last.

How could a world-panic in England, Australia, Austria, Germany, beginning in England and Australia in 1890—for that was the date of the crash of the Baring Brothers—be attributed by any sane man as an effect of an American tax law passed in 1894? I know that the "omnipotence of Congress" is a latter-day Republican doctrine, but surely the doctrine is confined to our "insularities," and does not extend to foreign kingdoms nor to periods before Congress acted! Now, let me go on. Vanderlip again:

Bread is baked in Palestine from flour made in Minneapolis. American windmills are working east of the Jordan and in the land of Bashan.

Phonographs are making a conquest of all tongues. The chrysanthemum banner of Japan floats from the palace of the Mikado on a flagstaff cut from a Washington forest, as does the banner of St. George from Windsor Castle.

The first part of this is no news to us. Our American agriculture has always been in possession of the foreign market.

But "windmills in the land of Bashan." This is where the Scriptural bull came from. He must have been a tariff-baron bull, roaring with one lung: "We have captured the markets of the world," and with the other: "Protect us from European pauper labor."

The American typesetting machines are used by foreign newspapers, and our cash registers keep accounts for scores of nations. America makes sewing machines for the world. Our bicycles are standards of excellence everywhere. Our typewriters are winning their way wherever a written language is used.

Yet if you threatened to take off the tariff to-day from typewriters and typesetters and cash registers—if there is any tariff on cash registers—I expect you would hear the old familiar cry, "American industries are about to be murdered, assassinated, and throttled by the 'free-trade theorists,' and American labor is menaced with immediate starvation." Let me go on—

In all kinds of electrical appliances we have become the foremost producer. In many European cities American dynamos light streets and operate railways. Much of the machinery that is to electrify—

This gentleman is not quite so good in English as he is in some other things. I do not suppose he meant "electrify;" he meant to furnish with electric power—

Much of the machinery that is to electrify London tram lines is now being built in Pittsburg. The American shoe has captured the favor of all Europe, and the foreign makers are hastening to import our machinery that they may compete with our makers.

And yet the shoe men are flooding me and are flooding all the members of this House with prescribed, forewritten, stereotyped circulars, asking us for God's sake to take the duty off of leather and let it come in as free raw material in order that they may "build up their industries." If the proposition were made to-morrow to reduce the duty on shoes a little bit—if we took the duty off hides, and the proposition were made to reduce the duty on shoes in order to make up for it, they would howl, and we should find politicians playing the old tune and fools dancing to it, that every reduction of the sacred duty means American starvation and a going backward of American civilization.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Let me correct the gentleman on that. I think the manufacturers of shoes would be quite content to submit to a very substantial reduction of tariff on the manufactured shoes if they could get free hides.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I know of only one reason to the contrary. I will take the House into my confidence. I received from some shoe men a circular of the kind that I mentioned, and I wrote back and asked the question: "In case we do this and put hides on the free list—and I am perfectly willing to do it, provided there is a reduction of a like character elsewhere—would you people consent to make a like reduction—an equivalent reduction upon shoes?" I got another circular from manufacturers of harnesses and carriages upon the same subject, and I wrote exactly the same answer to them, and it has now been four or five or six weeks, and I never have received an answer from either.

Let me go on:

In the Far East, in the capital of Korea, the hermit nation, there was recently inaugurated, with noisy music and flying banners, an electric railway, built of American material by a San Francisco engineer, and now it is operated by American motormen.

One might go on without end telling in detail the story of American industrial growth and commercial expansion. In the list of our triumphs we would find that American exports have not been confined to specialties nor limited as to markets. We have been successfully meeting competition everywhere. America has sent coals to Newcastle, cotton to Manchester, cutlery to Sheffield, potatoes to Ireland, champagnes to France, watches to Switzerland, and Rhine wine to Germany.

Now, I recommend the Rhine wine and the champagne propositions as an instance of American progress in trade by use of the means of "fraudulent imitation," so much decried during the oleomargarine discussion. [Laughter.] Now, my friends, so much for Mr. Vanderlip. I will read a comment by the editor of the Outlook, because he expresses it so much better than I can:

When concrete facts like these are made still more vivid to the mind's eye by pictures of an American bridge in Burma, an American typewriter in Uganda, American-equipped electric cars in Cairo, and other like illustrations of American inroads into the Old World, the reader is prepared to understand the significance of the often-repeated figures about the growth of our exports during the past few years.

Now, speaking of the effect of all this in Europe, the editor goes on to say:

The landowners have long been crying out against American competition. The recent enormous purchases of American manufactures have aroused the same cry in the cities, and the cry in the cities has gained such volume as to make the American question foremost in all the capitals of Europe.

The danger that comes to us from this European alarm has already been noted in these columns. It is retaliatory legislation to exclude American products by tariffs as high as our own.

Gentlemen, if that retaliatory legislation comes at all, it will come because these people believe we are building up by a protective tariff wall an inside protected home-market that enables our manufacturers to sell at a profit to them by recouping in the United States. It makes no difference whether what they believe is true or not. They will resent it, just as we resent the effects of their sugar-bounty laws. Their retaliation will come against our agricultural products. Our farmers will, as usual, bear the brunt. Is it not wise to reduce your tariff within reasonable limits? And remember, on this occasion, when I say "reasonable limits" I am not speaking now as a Democrat, not as an advocate for "a tariff for revenue only," though I believe in that, but as a nonpartisan American citizen. I am speaking to people who believe in tariff for revenue on my left and to those who believe in a tariff for protection on my right. But when the tariff furnishes neither needed protection nor revenue why not cut it down within reasonable limits? You can stop this retaliatory commercial warfare by reducing your tariff to a reasonable basis.

Now, my friends, one more thing in this connection. Here is the most amusing thing in this tragedy-comedy. Here is one Oxnard, a little while ago "sugar-beet baron" and now sugar-beet tariff beggar, at the doors of the committees of this House.

Mr. Oxnard writes this note to people who had heard that he had "assented" to something—"assented," forsooth, to legislation! He says:

We have assented to nothing; we claim there is no necessity for action. We were asked if we would consent to this measure, and replied that we would rather accept it than anything else that had been proposed; but we did not say we would accept the proposition. And, as a matter of fact, we stand as we have stood from the beginning on the proposition, believing that there was no necessity for any concession to the Cubans.

Here is an assumption on the part of a private citizen, never elected by the people—the source of power—to a legislative or an executive office, trusted with no public power in molding legislation, that it is necessary to get his "assent" and the "assent" of people who are thriving upon the ill-gotten gains of a too high protective tariff, in order that a legislative proposition may be considered reasonable and right.

There are members of the House, and always have been, who are ready to recognize as necessary the assent of such men to our legislation. I do not blame them, because their standpoint is not mine. Their standpoint is that you have the right to use the taxing power of the Government to build up private industries. But from my standpoint the greatest humiliation that can happen to a nation is for the chosen representatives of the people—the legislators under their fundamental law—to be asking not these questions: "What are the Governmental necessities?" "What are the capacities of the consumer to withstand taxation?" but these questions: "What do the capitalists in private business think about it?" "Do they think it will put money in their pockets, or do they think it will take money out?"

Now, I have read the language of Mr. Oxnard when he was figuring in the second scene as a tariff beggar. Let me read now his language when he was speaking in the first scene as a tariff boaster—a real live "captain of industry" and "tariff baron."

I told you in the beginning that I wanted to show you how these men, when they were engaged in exploiting trade, make full and complete and satisfactory answer to their own arguments when they are engaged in begging legislation. Here is his answer. Here is what Mr. Oxnard says in an official capacity, in a paper issued by him and Mr. Bayard Cutting, as the president and director of the great "American Beet-Root Sugar Company." Here is what Mr. Oxnard said in 1899:

Of the tropical countries which it is proposed to annex to the United States Porto Rico is too small to cut any figure.

So Porto Rico is out. When he says this he is encouraging the people to invest in beet-sugar factory stock; he is telling them to come in and help him build up this industry; he is trying to show how absolutely necessary it is that it should be, and could only be, a money-making industry. And his proposition is that Porto Rico can not hurt.

And the Philippine Islands have not the necessary elements for the expansion of the sugar business sufficiently rapidly to give any concern to those interested in the production of sugar from beets in this country for the next twenty-five years to come.

So the Philippines are disposed of. Yet when we wanted to enact a measure here by which the Philippines, as long as they were a part of the United States, should be treated like the balance of the Union, and have free importations into the United States, these very same people gathered around the halls of legislation and sang the old song of alarm and intimidation. They said that if we gave free trade to Philippine sugar we would ruin the American beet-sugar industry and the American cane-sugar industry. But in this article he says that the Philippines can not hurt us. Let us go on, then, to Cuba. That is the question that is now being agitated; and it was in connection with the proposition for the reduction of the Dingley rates upon sugar from Cuba that Mr. Oxnard wrote the letter I read you a moment ago. Now what does he, when telling the truth as a business man, say about Cuba:

The island of Cuba is so situated that its sugar industry can rapidly recover the ground lost during the insurrection, provided that the labor question there can be satisfactorily settled.

I suppose he means, provided they can get Chinese labor.

There is, however, no fear that Cuban production, even under an annexation to the United States, can in our day expand to the point where the United States would become exporters of sugar instead of importers, and hence that protection would no longer protect.

Now, I call your attention particularly to the following language—it is Oxnard's:

Greater than all the above assurances of the permanence of the sugar industry in this country is the fact that sugar can be produced cheaper here than it can be in Europe. The sugar industry is, after all, merely an agricultural one. We can undersell Europe in the production of all other crops, and sugar is no exception. The sugar consumed in the civilized world consists of 3,000,000 tons of cane sugar grown in the Tropics, and 5,000,000 tons of beet sugar grown on the Continent of Europe. Therefore, in considering any given sugar enterprise, if it can meet and overcome the competition of sugar on the Continent of Europe, it is perfectly safe to say that it has a permanent future.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in that connection this may be said in reply to Oxnard and me, that while we can produce beet sugar here cheaper than they can in Germany or France, they enable their people by bounty to do what we enable some of our people, engaged in other industries, by tariff to do, namely, to sell their beet sugar cheaper to the foreigner than it is sold to the home consumer in Germany or in France; but the answer to that is; if we take off all duties on sugar, and if sugar were free so far as Cuba is concerned, it would not affect the proposition; and, further, that if sugar were free so far as the entire world is concerned it would not affect the proposition, provided only that we placed a tariff upon our sugar equal to the bounty given by these countries.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have a little more time.

Mr. DINSMORE. How much more time do you want?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Ten minutes.

Mr. DINSMORE. I yield for ten minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, a gentleman on the Republican side the other day made the first so-called Republican speech against trusts. Now, I freely admit that there has been a great deal of demagoguery and nonsense spouted on the stump and written in the newspapers about trusts, but that trusts are an evil whenever they reach a monopolistic stage, is a thing which I believe every liberty-loving, every individuality-loving, and every country-loving American will admit and must admit; and yet, when the gentleman made his so-called antitrust speech the other day, it was, in the language of a friend near me, "an apology for their existence and a plea for their continuance." That is the first utterance on trusts that I remember to have heard from that side. A great many impracticable propositions have been made regarding trusts, but I want to call your attention to two that are practicable in their character and that conservative men can advocate anywhere and without a word of direct legislation on the subject of trusts—that is, national legislation.

I believe there ought to be Federal legislation on the subject of trusts themselves, but these two propositions I intend now to expound are not in that line. Some gentleman the other day asked the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] if he could point to a single trust which was "chartered and doing business under a Federal law." Of course there is none. The question was one that ought to have been answered in that way; but I can point to a great many which were enabled to begin their existence and are enabled to continue it under the protecting agencies of Federal laws upon other subjects. [Applause.] I believe there are two pieces of Federal legislation that might be enacted which would have the effect of restricting and limiting, if not of putting out of existence, the great trusts—the trusts which are monopolistic in their character. The first one which I would suggest, and which is suggested to my mind by this tariff discussion, is in line with the proposition made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK], only going further.

I say that if you would put upon the free list all trust-produced articles, all articles made by those trusts and combinations which are now selling to the foreigner cheaper than they do to the American, you would clip their wings, if you did no more effective work. They would "roost lower" hereafter.

There is another proposition. It has nothing to do with the tariff. The great Industrial Commission which has been sitting for long months has made a laborious investigation of the industrial condition of the United States. They are, I believe, though my memory upon that subject may be inaccurate, unanimous in reporting—and, if not, then a majority of them report—that one of the first and most necessary things to be done in order to clip the wings of these trusts and to bring them down to where they will be upon a footing of equality with other American citizens engaged in competitive industrial enterprise, is to pass such legislation, strengthening the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission, as will enable it to put an end to unjust railroad discriminations between producers.

It is an admitted fact upon their part, it is a fact admitted by everybody who has examined into the question, that the main ground upon which these trusts find a stable footing is the discrimination which the great railway systems constantly make in their favor. It is but natural that they should make that discrimination, because those people are their most important customers; but it is equally natural, in the words of the present occupant of the White House—words so soon forgotten by him—that we, the American Congress, the American people, should find a means—constitutional, fundamentally right—of "shackling cunning as civilization in the past found a means of shackling force." Now, Mr. Chairman, I have taken more time in this discussion than I expected to take when I started in. I did not expect to speak this morning, but I could not resist the temptation of propounding to my Republican friends a Republican industrial conundrum—and when I say Republican friends I mean it, because I glory in the fact that I do not believe there is a man in the House that has more personal friends in it on that side—good men and square, fair and personally worthy of every man's commendation.

I want to put to you this Republican conundrum. It is this: If a tariff tax exists bringing in no revenue, and therefore with no raison d'être as a revenue measure, and furnishing no needed protection, because the producers of the goods have demonstrated their ability to sell abroad at a less rate than the foreigner can sell in his own home markets, then what reason for the continuance of that particular tariff tax can there be? Then, I want to propound this interrogatory also: If a great commission, a majority of whose members are of your own party, engaged in nonpartisan industrial investigation, say to you virtually that you can clip the wings of monopolistic corporations which are destroying individual enterprise through unfair competition, by disabling the railroads from giving them unjust freight-rate discriminations, then, why not—not as Republicans, but as American citizens loving the old American spirit of self-dependence and individuality about to be stamped out—why not enact such legislation?

Are you willing to see all—90 per cent of—the American people become employees? I do not know how the balance of you feel about it, but I would rather be my own master at $600 a year than to be the servant of any man or corporation at $5,000.

Why, they are gradually pressing out of existence every one of the small and individual enterprises in the country. The time has come when a man with from $3,000 to $10,000 capital can no more go into business and hold his own, than a cat can fly across the Atlantic Ocean.

A great many foolish, and some unconstitutional, propositions have been made on this subject. Whenever men feel that they are drowning they grasp at straws. But I believe that our sacred shield ought to be the preservation intact of our fundamental law. I do not believe that you have a right to violate the Constitution, even to accomplish a public good. I do not believe that the "public welfare" justifies me or you in violating our oath to that instrument, because it is the instrument which gave us birth and by virtue of which alone we can have a justifiable existence. The "public welfare" after all is only what each Congressman would choose to call the public welfare. It would be a measure of constitutional power as variant as "Old Coke" said chancery jurisdiction was: "It might as well be measured by the length of each chancellor's foot." But if, by any constitutional means in the world you can accomplish this curtailment of monopolistic power, and certainly your ingenuity is equal to it, because the Republican party, whatever else may be said of it—and some very hard things can be justly said of it—has never been a party of fools, you ought to do it. If any party in the world can find the means to throttle these trusts, to clip their wings at any rate—I do not mean to oppress them because they are rich or anything of that sort, but to put them upon an equal footing with every other citizen—can not you do it, and if so, are you going to let the opportunity pass?

If you do, you know, I know, the country knows that it will be a criminal omission of legislative duty and due, in your case, not to want of power or of intelligence, but to want of will.

You can do it, and without violating the Constitution, certainly not from your latitudinarian standpoint of constitutional construction.

Mr. GRAHAM. Is not your own State of Mississippi to-day violating that very Constitution which you uphold in the restriction of suffrage to the colored man?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi No; a thousand times, no! And the Supreme Court of the United States has said no, not by a majority of one, shifting from day to day, but by a unanimous vote. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GRAHAM. Wait until the question comes up properly, wait until that court reaches it properly, and then you will find——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. They have reached it properly, and they have passed upon it. The point went to the Supreme Court as to whether the constitution of the State of Mississippi, under which certain officers were chosen, was unconstitutional from the Federal standpoint.

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes; but did they pass upon it under the act of 1869, under which Mississippi came back from a state of rebellion?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I should like, as a Mississippian, to answer the gentleman's question, although it is absolutely irrelevant to the topics being discussed by me.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE] yield any more time to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. HITT. I will yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, gentlemen, a few words of coolness, because this is a question upon which we Southern men are apt to get excited, and it is a question upon which, of all questions, we ought not to get excited, but ought to keep cool heads.

The Supreme Court of the United States did pass upon that proposition. A case was carried to the Supreme Court, and among other things the very objection which the gentleman raises was urged, namely, that the State of Mississippi, notwithstanding the fact that, when she came back into the Union in the year 1869, she had put into her fundamental law at that time—into the constitution of the State of Mississippi—a provision that nobody should ever be disfranchised by an educational qualification, and notwithstanding that Congress had furthermore passed a law at the same time, readmitting Mississippi to the Union upon the express condition that she should not make a provision disqualifying anybody for educational reasons, had enacted in the new constitution an educational qualification. The Supreme Court held that Mississippi had a right to enact such a qualification.

In other words, in order to arrive at its decision the court had to hold, and virtually and impliedly, though not expressly, held, as every lawyer in this body would hold, that after Mississippi was once admitted into the Union, no matter under what Congressional conditions, she came in, and continued in it, as the equal of every State in the Union, with the right to do anything that Massachusetts had the right to do, or that Connecticut had the right to do; and there is not a clause in the constitution of the State of Mississippi that is not copied from some clause in some Northern State constitution, except one, and that is the so-called "understanding clause," which is not nearly so bad as a clause that was in the constitution of Vermont, I believe, and may be there now for all I know, namely, that the selectmen must say that a fellow was of a good moral character before he could vote. Remember, too, that more negroes than white men are admitted to the ballot in Mississippi under the "understanding clause," and that it is in extension and not in restriction of suffrage. The Supreme Court held that the Mississippi constitution of 1890 was not obnoxious to the charge of violating any part of either the fourteenth or fifteenth amendments to the Federal Constitution, or any other part of it.

Every point was raised that shrewd lawyers could raise—even the point that the constitution of Mississippi had not been submitted back to the people of the State for their affirmative ratification.

Of course, if the Supreme Court had thought that an act of Congress could make constitutional law and could make unequal States in a "Union of equal and indestructible States," they were imperatively called upon on the facts and under the law of that case to say so. They were not so foolish.

Mr. GRAHAM. Have you the grandfather clause——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. No.

Mr. GRAHAM. That so many object to?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Oh, my friend, all of the wisdom does not dwell in the East. All of culture and all of education is not in the North. There were wise men at the helm of the Mississippi ship of state, in those days—old James Z. George and men of his character, Wiley P. Harris, S. S. Calhoun—and what they meant to do they did, namely, accomplished the disfranchisement of corruption, ignorance, venality, and semi-veneered savages without violating the Constitution of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GRAHAM. What does the gentleman himself think about the grandfather clause?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. My dear friend, am I to defend the entire South on a tariff and trust debate? I have defended the State of Mississippi.

Mr. GRAHAM. You are such an able defender——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. There are men here who will defend their own States in their own way for anything that is in their constitutions. The task is theirs; they are able and willing, and the subject is not relevant to my remarks of to-day. If there is in any State constitution a provision violative of the Federal Constitution, the question will be decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, and if the Supreme Court decides that the "grandfather clause," which exists in one or two constitutions, is unconstitutional, that clause will go by the way; and when it goes by the way, if it shall, it will still leave us what our race has always possessed, and especially that superb part of the race to which I belong—the Southern white people, almost purely of English-speaking blood in their derivation—it will leave us with the intelligence, with the ingenuity, with the courage and the resolution to take care of the white man's code of ethics—his sacred family life, the capstone of it, and Caucasian civilization, the fruit of it all [loud applause]—without violating one word of the Constitution of the United States. [Applause.] If we do violate it, the Supreme Court will call us to halt, and we will then e'en do the work over again, and better, under their instructions. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HITT. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. IRWIN] five minutes.

Mr. IRWIN. Mr. Chairman, prompted by what I regard as good taste and a wise course for a new member to pursue, I have heretofore refrained from seeking the privilege of the floor, and I do not rise now to make a speech, but simply to state my position, and to protest, in behalf of that portion of Kentucky which I have the honor to represent, against the astounding attitude that my colleague [Mr. WHEELER] assumed toward our distinguished guest, Prince Henry; and also to protest against his remarkable attack upon Hon. John Hay, Secretary of State, whom I regard as having extraordinary qualifications for the position he holds. To my mind there is no humor, only insult, in the epithet of "Little Dutchman," in the connection in which it was used.

The native-born Americans gladly join the German-Americans among us, who constitute so large and valuable a part of our citizenship, in resenting the insult to their Fatherland implied in the question of my colleague, "What do we care about the good will of the German people?"

As a Representative from Kentucky I disavow any indorsement of the sentiments expressed by the honorable gentleman from the same State in his speech delivered in this House February 14, 1902, and I sincerely hope, especially on account of the incident in the House of Representatives, that the people of Louisville, Ky., will be able to signalize the brief visit there of Prince Henry in such a manner as not only to redeem Kentucky from the unhappy and unworthy position in which she has been placed, but also to express the warm hospitality for which my State has always been famous and of which she is so justly proud. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HITT. Will the Chair recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania as in charge of the bill?

Mr. DINSMORE. I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT].

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Chairman, so long as the Administration adheres to its announced policy of holding in subjection a distant people and alien races, I shall consider it is not too late to protest, with the hope that those in power may yet be able to see the crime and folly of the enterprise. I maintain that history teaches these three propositions:

First. That no permanent civilization is possible in tropical climates;

Second. That any government, however virtuous in itself, forcibly imposed by one race upon another, always retards rather than advances the growth of the people held in subjection; and Third. Freedom to work out their own destiny under laws of their own selection is the universal measure of national progress.

Then, first, no civilization worth the name has ever appeared within the Torrid Zone. This zone lies, as everybody knows, between the Tropic of Cancer on the north of the Equator and the Tropic of Capricorn south of the Equator; and in all the rise and fall of empires, in all the rise and wanderings of the races of men, no great cities have been built, no great literature has been written, and no great nations have been founded between these two lines. The Tropic of Cancer runs through Africa, but it is more than a thousand miles south of Gibraltar and 600 miles south of the mouth of the Nile.

So that the old civilizations of Egypt and Carthage were north of this line and within the Temperate Zone. Egypt was farther south than any other of the ancient civilizations, and so all of the great nations that existed around the shores of the Mediterranean were still farther north and farther away from the Tropics.

The Sphinx, the Temple of Luxnor, Baalbec, the Pyramids, and all the ancient landmarks of Egyptian civilization stand in the Temperate Zone. The Tropic of Cancer passes through Asia, but far south of Palestine and Persia. The civilizations on the banks of the Euphrates and the Tigris were hundreds of miles north of the northern line of the Torrid Zone. Babylon and Tyre; the ancient splendors of the Chaldean and Media-Persian Empires; Palmyra, Phœnicia, Asia Minor, the Greeks, the Romans, all flourished in the North Temperate Zone. Even Japan and China, and all the islands of the sea where human progress has been made, have been away from the heat and humidity of the Tropics. On the Western Continent this line passes north of the Sandwich Islands, through the center of Mexico, and just north of Cuba. The southern line of the Torrid Zone passes through Australia, but the great progress of that island, and, indeed, about the only progress made there has been south of the line and in the South Temperate Zone. The flourishing cities of Melbourne and Sidney, the great sheep-raising and mining industries of that island continent are all in the South Temperate Zone, while that portion within the Tropics is still covered with savages and forests.

Macaulay some years ago prophesied that a traveler from New Zealand might some day sit upon the broken columns of London Bridge and, with pencil in hand, take notes and moralize over the ruins of the ancient city. New Zealand and Tasmania have indeed made greater progress than any other countries in the South Sea Islands, but these are both in the Temperate Zone also and more than a thousand miles south of the Tropics. This line passes through nearly the center of South America, but the countries of that continent that are coming to the front are Chile, Argentina, Paraguay. The city of Rio de Janeiro and the great coffee and sugar plantations of Brazil are south of the line and in the Temperate Zone. This line passes through the southern portion of Africa; but the Transvaal, the Orange Free State, Cape Colony, and all the civilized portions of South Africa are in the Temperate Zone. Within the Torrid Zone some countries are found which are apparent exceptions to this rule. The high plateaus of southern Mexico and the northern part of South America are within the Tropics, and are perhaps capable of an advanced civilization.

But these countries really form no exception, because, although they are within the Tropics, they are, on account of their great elevation, blessed with the climate of the Temperate Zone.

Within the Tropics we find a long list of dreary deserts, savage races, and no civilization. And thus it has been through all the history of the world. All of the religions of antiquity except the lowest form of fetichism were founded in the Temperate Zone. Zoroaster and his Parsee followers; Osiris and Isis, and their Egyptian worshipers; Brahma and Buddha; Confucius, Mohammed; Christianity, Judaism, and all had their origin in the Temperate Zones. But the Philippine Islands are wholly within the Tropics and close to the equator at that, and the country is low, humid, and hot. All of our insular possessions—Porto Rico, the Sandwich Islands, the Philippine Islands, the new Danish Islands, and all of the possessions acquired during the last few years of our crazy commercialism—lie within this forbidden section of the globe.

If six thousand years of human history and the experience of all the world are worth anything, we must learn that it is impossible for any people to become progressive and civilized in these tropical climates.

But secondly, whatever any people anywhere are capable of achieving, it must be accomplished by themselves; they must evolve their own laws and their own institutions, and no alien race can forcibly interfere without retarding, rather than advancing, their progress.

Whatever any people, either in the Tropics or elsewhere, are capable of accomplishing will be best attained by allowing them freedom and by giving them full scope to work out their own destiny.

Various fortunes have been meted out to subjugated races. In many instances extermination has been their fate, as the Moors in Spain, the aborigines of Palestine, and others. Then, we find cases where the subjugated race has remained for centuries in slavery, without improvement or progress, as the Jews in Egypt, the Javanese under the tyranny of Holland, and the people of India under the foreign yoke of England, and others. Then, again, we find instances where the conquering race came and stayed in such numbers that by intermarriages the two peoples became blended into one, as the Normans in England, as the Romans in Gaul, or as the northern barbarians in southern Europe, or the Greeks in Asia Minor. But history furnishes no instance of an alien race held separately and in subjection improving under a foreign domination. You can not thrust upon any race of people a foreign yoke without injuring them and retarding instead of promoting their advancement. It matters not how superior the laws and the institutions of the conquering people may be abstractly considered. Such laws and institutions imposed by superior force upon an unwilling race always prove disastrous to those who are forced to receive them. Fifty years ago Japan was a semibarbarous and half-civilized country. Suppose Commodore Perry, when he landed there, had shelled the cities of Japan and by an army of invasion had undertaken to thrust our modern civilization down the throats of these people, would Japan have advanced as rapidly as she has done?

By being left to pursue their own methods, by being allowed to fashion their own peculiar laws and institutions in their own way, they have made a marvelous progress, but which would have failed under the control of this country or of England or any other foreign power. Spain and Portugal tried for centuries with weapons in one hand and prayer books and rosaries in the other to force their ideas of religion and of civilization upon their colonies. Pizarro in Peru and Cortez in Mexico left those countries in an infinitely worse condition than when they were first discovered.

Not only so, but those countries continued to remain in a worse condition during all of the centuries the foreigner was struggling to improve them. So it has always been and always will be. When the alien race ceases to drive and never attempts to govern, but endeavors by friendly contact and commercial intercourse to trade, these influences will gradually have their beneficent influence upon the inferior race, and the people will develop. But always and everywhere the inferior race can only develop by methods and processes of their own selection.

England, too, has often tried the foolish experiment of thrusting the sword through the heathen in order to make him a Christian.

When Captain Cook discovered Australia there were many thousands of natives, and now they have almost been exterminated. So with the Sandwich Islands; so with the American Indians, and so everywhere in the history of the world. Egyptian civilization was the peculiar outgrowth and the evolution of her own people. Her architecture, her literature, her poetry, her religion, and everything were unlike those of any other country. Assyria tried to thrust her own superior culture down the throats of these people of the Nile. Assyrian literature, poetry, architecture, and everything were said to be superior to those of Egypt. The result of the effort was that Egypt became a wilderness, and her cities and monuments crumbled into dust. The Assyrian Empire became great and waxed strong for a thousand years. But the Persian invasion came and introduced what was thought to be a higher religion, new and better laws, and the Assyrian in turn and his civilization passed away.

Then came the Macedonian, with the elegance and culture of the Greeks, and undertook to introduce the splendid philosophy of Plato and the splendid architecture of Phideas, and Persia became a story and a tradition. The hand of the invader and sword of the conqueror may better the condition of the invader, but they have always been destructive of the defeated race, and have always everywhere caused their decline and decay. The colonies of the Roman Empire continued to be tribute-paying barbarians as long as the power of the conqueror remained. External force never advanced the civilization of any people. Certain races of mankind will reach by slow processes of evolution a certain stage of progress and there remain stationary for ages. We have tried for several hundred years to Christianize and civilize the Indian, and we have not even succeeded in making him cut off his hair. Proximity to civilization, opportunities to attend churches and schools do not affect him. He reached that degree of progress, or, if you prefer, he descended thus far in the scale of humanity, and no farther, by reason of his own inherent qualities, whether of strength or weakness, and no other nation can come to his rescue. The African negro likewise has roamed for ages over the Dark Continent utterly ignorant of the value of his country, unconscious of the splendid fertility of the soil, the salubrity of the climate, or the wealth of its mineral resources. Whether in the Tropics or out of the Tropics, there are certain races that must inevitably disappear, like the rattlesnake and the buffalo, before the march of civilization. No exterior force, however well intentioned, no civilized government, however wise, can elevate certain races.

But those that are capable of being civilized at all must evolve—grow up to it by laws and institutions of their own fashioning. Civilization is not a manufactured article and has no particular features or dimensions. On the contrary, every race and every nation that has succeeded at all has developed peculiarities, and no procrustean bed can be made to fit any two of them.

We insist, in the third place, that the universal prerequisite to the progress of any people is the right to make their own laws and to develop their own institutions in their own way. The dark ages of Europe, from the fifth to the fifteenth century, came as the result of the policy of the Roman Empire. That imperial city held the provinces in subjection, denied them local self-government, and burdened them with taxes and tributes until they became more savage and barbarous than ever, and that barbarism reacted against the city until all went down together. When civilization began to dawn again its feeble appearance was first seen in local independent communities which, under the feudal system, permitted the people to cluster around the baronial castle and to enact local laws and customs of their own. Further on we find the free cities becoming the centers of wealth and culture—Venice, Florence, Padua, Genoa, and the Hanse Towns of Germany. These cities obtained charters which enabled them to make their own laws and build up institutions to suit themselves. And in proportion as they enjoyed freedom they outstripped their neighbors in science, in art, in wealth, and all that goes to make a cultivated and prosperous people.

These free cities taught modern Europe the value of freedom, and then the next step finds separate nations struggling for independence and with wars and revolutions finally establishing their separate national existence and the right to make laws for themselves.

Where there is a unity of race, of religion, of language, and interest under one government, that people may be a republic, a monarchy, or what not, and still they will make progress if it be a race capable of making progress at all. The form of government is not as important as to have home-grown institutions with laws and customs emanating among the people themselves. Let me repeat that an intermeddling alien race always does more harm than good, and it makes no difference that the intermeddler represents a superior race, nor does it make any difference that this intermeddler has a better government, or a better religion, or a wiser system of laws.

The Moors in Spain for eight hundred years had their own laws and their own religion and were an independent, thrifty, progressive people. They were perhaps the most civilized country then to be found in Europe. Malaga and Toledo, Cadiz and Grenada were splendid cities lighted with lamps, paved with cut stone, with fountains playing and flowers blooming in the parks. But the Spaniards came, determined to force upon them the Christian religion and a better system of laws. The result was the Moor and his cities disappeared, while ruin and desolation marked the path of the invader. Cortez found an Aztec civilization in Mexico, which was advancing and which had already made considerable progress.

These the Spaniards destroyed and those people made not another step forward until the yoke of the foreign oppressor was removed.

Since her independence Mexico has been slowly but surely coming to the front. When these Spaniards invaded Peru, they found splendid aqueducts running along the west slope of the Andes, furnishing abundance of water, which was skillfully diverted into channels for irrigation. They found fertile fields, cultivated with care, producing two and three crops a year. They found herds of fat sheep roaming the hillsides and their wool woven into cloth of many curious patterns and ornamented with many brilliant colors.

They found the splendid Temple of Cuzco carved with the chisel of the sculptor, the altar covered with burnished gold; and the rustic soldiers of Spain were awed by the chanting of the many worshippers who came to watch the rising sun. But with the conquest all these disappeared; no further progress was made for three hundred years, and not until that country again became free. The stereotyped answer to all this is that we are not oppressing the Filipinos and do not propose to oppress them. The argument is that we are going to establish schools, build roads, and teach these people self-government. This is no answer at all. Let me tell you again that you can not manufacture a civilization to order. It is a growth and not a manufacture. It is always and everywhere an evolution, and an evolution of the people themselves, and not superimposed by another race. We have already seen that whenever and wherever an alien race attempts by force to impose its laws and institutions upon another race the effort has always been in the past and always will be in the future a failure. Let me repeat that it matters not that your laws and your institutions are better, abstractly considered, than theirs.

The failure will be none the less signal on that account. The failure comes from the obvious fact that your modes of thought, your manner of doing things, your literature, your laws, your institutions, your architecture, your habits of life, and your everything are different from theirs, and the failure comes especially from the fact that these things are imposed by force, imposed by a foreign race, and because they are distasteful and unsuited to those people. You should never forget that the laws and institutions are valuable to a people only when they express the sentiments of the people themselves. England has better laws and institutions than Russia, and yet if England should subjugate

Russia or buy her and attempt to force those superior laws down the throats of the Muscovite he would not advance more rapidly by the change. He would not advance at all. He would retrograde. But you say the Filipinos welcome our invasion. If this be true, then it contradicts all the history and experience of mankind. It marks these people as the only race in all the world that ever welcomed a foreign invader.

No other people, since the journey of the Children of Israel across the Red Sea to escape the taskmasters of Egypt, have ever appeared who despised independence and hailed the coming of a strange people. This is the only race, if this be true, who were ever willing to throw away their mother tongue for the language of the stranger, who are willing to obey laws that are enacted, and who are willing to pay taxes that are imposed on the opposite side of the globe. No, gentlemen, the convict may smile in the face of his keeper with the hope of lightening his burden, but at heart he is praying for freedom. These people may or may not be capable of self-government—that is to say, they may or may not be capable of adopting and maintaining our form of Government—but beyond all question they are more capable of governing themselves in their own way than we are of governing them in our way.

Their government fashioned to suit themselves will be a better government for them than any we can impose upon them.

There is no tribe or people on the earth, and there never was, who were not capable of governing themselves better than any other people can govern them. We do not govern the American Indian.

We allow them to govern themselves according to their own tribal customs and usages. We have found that no other government is possible among them. We do not govern the Chinese. The Six Companies rule them according to Chinese laws and customs of which we know nothing. There is no such thing as a people not capable of self-government. There never was a people who did not thrive better and improve faster under laws of their own than under laws imposed by a foreign and alien race.

You are building schoolhouses and making roads, are you? So did Rome and Spain and Portugal and England. The Appian Way stretched over hill and dale and was broad and beautiful, but to the provinces it stood only as a monument of oppression. England has built railroads in India, but they only increase the number of pilgrims who flock to Delhi and Benares, who pray more fervently than ever to the gods of Brahma and Buddha to take away the strangers.

Your schools will only hasten the day of another revolt, and your roads will only increase the speed of a new-grown army.

The students in the schools of Russia are the greatest thorn in the side of the Czar, and these people that our schools are educating will be the first and the leaders in the next revolt, which is sure to come.

Hundreds of thousands of sturdy Englishmen have laid down their lives in India, but scarcely a Hindoo has been taught the philosophy of Bacon or made to understand the dramas of Shakespeare. Hundreds of thousands of Hollanders have died in Java, but not a Javanese has been made to love the poetry of Richter or to appreciate the reasoning of Kant. Hundreds of millions of dollars will be spent by this country in the Philippine Islands and hundreds of thousands of our young men in the coming years will leave their bones to bleach in the tropic sun of these far-off islands, but not a Filipino will ever be made to believe that we are adhering to the doctrines of the Declaration of Independence, or that we are governing them according to the teachings of Washington and Jefferson. We have assumed a task doubly impossible and absurd. Impossible and absurd because no civilization ever existed in any low, hot country like the Philippines. We had just as well undertake to open up an ostrich farm in the Klondike or to raise Polar bears in Cuba as to expect to transplant our Western civilization among those oriental and tropical people. Our task is impossible and absurd because no people while they are held in subjection by a different race ever made any progress, even in the Temperate Zone.

Now, mark my prophecy. Some fine day a new insurrection will come and a new army will be marching along these fine roads toward Manila. They will come like the hungry and ragged peasantry came to Paris, and the students you are now educating in your boasted schools will be the officers and the ringleaders. Remember that race prejudices are eternal and the only way to keep these people pacified is to do worse than Spain and keep them in ignorance and slavery. Your schools and your roads will only serve to develop a national spirit and to hasten that new revolution.

Therefore history and the experience of mankind point out both what we can do and what we ought to do. We can go further and do worse than Spain. We can keep these people in more abject slavery, destroy their national spirit, and thus prevent revolutions. We can go there in great numbers and take possession of the country as England has done in Canada and Australia, and thus make a larger America, as Canada and Australia and other countries go to make up a larger England. Nobody advocates either of these methods.

Then how can we make the schools we have established and the roads we have built profitable? And how can we haul down the flag consistently and withdraw from the islands now after having spent $20,000,000 for them and started upon a policy of subjugation? It is always easy and honorable to do right.

The greatest act in the life of Mr. Gladstone was in confessing the wrongs of the Empire at Majuba Hill and withdrawing the British army from Africa. Every Englishman now regrets that this liberal policy had not been continued. So we can and ought to say to the Philippines just what we have said to Cuba: Form your government and we will get out. Allow them to make their own laws and to fashion their own institutions in their own way. This will not be retreating, nor will it be hauling down the flag. It will be carrying out what the American people and all the world supposed we meant to do when we ratified the treaty with Spain. Do that and the treaty of Paris will become the greatest act of disinterested devotion to the cause of human liberty the world has ever seen.

To pay $20,000,000 for the privilege of liberating a downtrodden and oppressed people is the greatest and noblest act of the human race. Let us tell these people now that they shall be free and we can at once withdraw our Army and Navy.

They can, as all the world teaches us, govern themselves better than we can govern them. Let us erect on the shores of Asia a banner inscribed with the grand motto; "All men are created with certain inalienable rights; among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

Then these people will work out a civilization, the highest possible in that climate, the highest of which the race is capable, and our country will have accomplished the greatest of all national achievements.

The great English essayist and historian, Sir Thomas Carlyle, has said:

> If England were presented with the necessity of surrendering either her Indian Empire or her Shakespeare, she would without a moment's hesitation surrender those vast Eastern possessions and hold onto those immortal dramas.

So let me say that the American Revolution was not fought in vain if thereby the human family learned the single sentiment, "All men are created with certain inalienable rights. Among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

It would be infinitely better for us and for the Filipinos to immediately surrender those far-off islands than to surrender those foundation principles of the Government upon which we have grown to be the most splendid example of human freedom that the world has ever seen. Let us not sell our birthright for a mess of pottage.

[At this point Admiral Prince Henry of Germany entered the galleries of the House.]

The Angles who settled England came from Germany. The Anglo-Saxon and the German, if we go back a few generations, were all of the same race. We are proud of the achievements of both races, and welcome you to America's Capitol.

Let me call the attention of this House to what some recent authors who are worthy of our attention have said upon this subject of thrusting one civilization upon an unwilling and alien race.

Professor Seeley, in the course of a series of lectures recently delivered at Cambridge, England, has this to say:

> We doubt whether our rule of India is preparing them for a happier condition. We doubt whether it may not be sinking them lower in misery, and we have our misgivings that perhaps a genuine Asiatic government, and still more a national government springing up out of the Hindoo population itself, might in the long run be more beneficial because more genial, though perhaps less civilized, than such a foreign, unsympathetic government as our own. (Expansion of England, Prof. Seeley, p. 236.)

And this author proceeds to state what every observing and reading man already knows, as follows:

> The instinct of nationality or of separate religion is so strong among all peoples that they more than supply the place of valor or of discipline. The desire for independence is universal among mankind, and is diffused among the whole population, whereas valor and discipline are confined to the fighting part of the invading country. * * *
> The elements that go to make a nationality are unity of interest, uniformity of language, and sameness of religion.

The historian, Ireland, in his recent book, Tropical Colonization, 1899, shows (page 220) that now after England has been in India for more than two hundred years she can sell but a trifling amount and receives from them a still less amount. This is his language:

> We have seen that England can only sell her tropical subjects 71 cents' worth of goods per capita each year, and that she draws from each only 66 cents' worth of supplies.

In a recent work, styled "English Colonization and Empire," by Alfred Caldecott, the author says (page 3):

> Again and again the cooler climes have sent their wholesomely nurtured hordes to reap the fruits of the labors of enfeebled nations dwelling in the milder regions, either to return with spoils or to be mingled with the conquered, themselves after a time of brief prosperity to be subjected to a like treatment in their turn.

Elsewhere this author says (page 74):

The growth of the English constitution is a result of long and detailed struggle, and none but the most optimistic of doctrinaires would waste time in endeavoring to transplant it to Asia.

Now, mind you, these are English authors speaking of their own failures in the East. Everybody knows that England has been the most successful colonizer in the world's history, and what horrid tales of atrocity and failure follow the bloody story of Holland in Java, of Spain and Portugal in the West Indies, in Africa, and everywhere they have gone to colonize and elevate inferior races.

But we are going to civilize the Filipinos. We are there now, loaded down with the implements of civilization.

On one side of the streets we have books and Bibles, missionaries and teachers; on the other we keep bloodhounds and halters, rifles and torches, bayonets and tariff schedules, and over all is a carpetbag government wielded by high-salaried strangers speaking a strange tongue, strangers whom they have not selected-making laws they do not want, but whose high salaries they are taxed to pay. No, gentlemen, we are on the same old broad beaten highway of folly and crime, along which through all the ages strong nations have traveled to the destruction of most that was pure and good and beautiful. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK. I yield my time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, a year ago I had occasion to submit some remarks to this House which were somewhat of a surprise to the House and the country. I admit that the facts at that time were a surprise to myself, as I had not investigated the matter prior thereto, and I expect at this time to follow it up with some remarks, and the information upon which they are based may perhaps be a surprise even to the members of this House. On that occasion I compared the applications for pensions from five regiments from Northern States and five from Southern States who had had like service in the war with Spain, and it was found upon comparison that there were five times as many applications for pensions from the Northern regiments as there were applications for pensions from the Southern regiments of like service and exposure to injury.

That statement opened the eyes of the country. I charged then and I charge now that it was due to environment. I said then and I say it now, that the South will be in the same condition when the same causes have existed at the South as long as they have at the North. I asked the House then to call a halt and I ask it to do so now. I want now to call attention to what this House did in the passage of private pension bills in the short session of the Fifty-sixth Congress. There were four days upon which private pension bills were considered, and 707 bills were passed in those four days. How much consideration could they have had from this House? How much consideration did they have from the committee? It is utterly impossible for that number of bills to be given that consideration which legislative measures should have in so short a time. Nearly every one of these bills was for increase. Why do men come to this House asking for pensions? They come because they are not entitled to them under the general law or else their title is defective under the requirements of the general law as administered at the Pension Bureau.

Ought the old soldier whose title to a pension is absolute to receive worse treatment at the hands of this Government than the soldier who either has no title under general law or a defective title? But what are the facts? The amount of increase granted by special pension legislation was, in round numbers, 200 per cent more than the same soldiers would have received under the general law at the Bureau if their title under general law had been perfect. What hope, then, is there that the flood gates of private pension legislation will ever close? When the soldier of doubtful merit and doubtful title appeals to the generosity of this House and finds that he receives, for doubtful title and doubtful service, three times the consideration that the soldier of absolute title receives under the general laws of the country, where is this abuse to end?

Mr. ADAMS. I ask the indulgence of the gentleman to move that the committee do now rise, and he shall have his place when the committee resumes its session.

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CURTIS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11471) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 219. An act for the relief of Mary Chambers, widow of Thomas Chambers;

S. 1573. An act to authorize Commander James M. Miller, United States Navy; Surg. Oliver D. Morton, United States Navy, and Mr. Edwin V. Morgan, formerly secretary of the Samoan Commission and now secretary of the legation of the United States at Seoul, Korea, to accept presents tendered to them by His Majesty the Emperor of Germany.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. GILBERT. I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

And then, on motion of Mr. ADAMS (at 4 o'clock and 19 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of fact in the case of Frederick Demmien against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting the conclusions of fact and law in the French spoliation cases relating to The schooner Sally, Jacob Osgood, master, against The United States—to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, the claim of Robert Birnie—to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of War, submitting an estimate of appropriation for road from the Aqueduct Bridge to Fort Myer, Va.—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. LITTLEFIELD, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11599) to redivide the district of Alaska into three recording and judicial divisions, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 582); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6553) to change the boundaries between the southern and central judicial districts of the Indian Territory and to establish a United States commissioner's court at Durant, Ind. T., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 583); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9962) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River at or near the city of Kansas City, Mo., reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 584); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. CLAYTON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 184) to establish and provide for a clerk for the circuit and district courts of the United States held at Wilmington, N. C., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 585); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona, from the Committee on the Territories, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 3090) to approve and ratify an act of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, entitled "An act to provide for the collection, arrangement, and display of the products of the Territory of Arizona at the International Exposition to be held at St. Louis in 1903," reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report

(No. 586); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana, from the Committee on the Territories, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 25, 1902.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday.

Mr. STEWART. I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. TURNER and Mr. DUBOIS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the reading will proceed.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the Journal, and it was approved.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE CRUMP.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the resolutions from the House of Representatives in relation to the death of Hon. ROUSSEAU O. CRUMP, my late colleague in that body.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions of the House of Representatives, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 21, 1902.

Resolved, That the House of Representatives has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. ROUSSEAU O. CRUMP, late a Representative from the State of Michigan.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to his memory the House do now adjourn.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Mr. President, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk, and ask unanimous consent for their immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. ROUSSEAU O. CRUMP, late a Representative from the State of Michigan.

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to; and, under the second resolution, the Senate (at 12 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 26, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 25, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PROPERTY TAKEN BY UNITED STATES FORCES.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave that House bill 2659, being a bill for the relief of parties for property taken from them by military forces of the United States, lie on the table, a similar bill from the Senate having been passed by the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks that House bill 2659 lie on the table, a similar bill from the Senate having been passed by the House. This order will be made, if there be no objection.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BREAZEALE, indefinitely, on account of sickness in family.

To Mr. VANDIVER, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. BOWERSOCK, for one week, on account of important business.

DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of appropriation bills, especially the one I shall call the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. CURTIS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering the diplomatic appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11471) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, at the time the committee rose the bill was being considered in general debate, and in resuming that general debate I will ask the Chair to recognize the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] for thirty minutes.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman yield one moment?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks of yesterday in the RECORD.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I hope the House will bear with me if I repeat just a little of what was said yesterday afternoon, as I was requested to yield the floor in order that the House might adjourn and pay its respects to a very distinguished citizen of a great country who was visiting our capital, Prince Henry of Prussia, and I yielded for that purpose. Now I want to say that I do not intend and it is not my purpose to say anything that will wound the feelings of any member of this House. I am serious about the remarks that I expect to make, and in some respects critical, but critical of a policy and not of the acts of individuals. This is a serious matter, when we consider the great amount that this Government has to pay year in and year out on account of pensions. I think the subject certainly worthy of reasonable and patient consideration. It is well known that on the days devoted by the rules of the House to the consideration of private pension bills we can not have time to discuss these matters in general.

I know that it is barely possible to consider a reasonable number of bills in proportion to the number on the Calendar for consideration, and that is my excuse for imposing upon the patience of the House at this time. Bear with me while I state the facts, which I think justify me in the remarks I am making. I am making no appeal to the galleries, but to this House, because I feel it is my duty to appeal to it, and it is for the House to consider the facts that I shall state. What I shall have to say will have no party politics in it, and is as much directed to this side of the House as to that.

There are some reasons for congratulation, and some of these I shall now state. The appropriation bill for pensions for the fiscal year 1900 was $145,233,830; for 1901, $145,245,230; for 1902, $145,245,230, and for 1903, the bill already passed the House, carries $139,842,230, or a reduction of $5,403,000 from 1902. It will take, according to the estimates, $5,403,000 less money to pay pensions for the ensuing fiscal year than for the last three fiscal years. While that is a fact, I wish to state that it is also true, as appears from the records, that we had on the pension rolls on the 1st of July, 1901, 997,735 pensioners, 4,206 more than the year before. While the total appropriation is $5,403,000 less, the pension roll has increased, as I have just stated.

That, I think, is something upon which we should congratulate those who manage the Pension Office, and it is a well-deserved congratulation. All just pension claims should be granted, and granted for reasonable amounts, and they should continue to increase if meritorious applications continue to come in. The continuation of military strife means a continuation of causes for pension, legitimate and worthy. Therefore it appears that the pension roll is going to be somewhat of a measure of "the greatest good to the greatest number," if we continue to increase the number of pensioners while we decrease the gross amount paid. I think it is more just to give every worthy person a pension reasonable in amount than to give large numbers excessive pensions and deny many of those justly entitled to reasonable pensions, because the amount to be paid may thus greatly increase year after year.

What I desire to talk about chiefly, and I hope I will have the earnest attention of the House, is the character of private bills that we pass, the number of them, the reasons for them, and what policy, if any, should be adopted by the House to prevent this flood of private bills for our consideration. At the present time, only three months of this session of Congress having passed, 5,672 private pension bills have been introduced and referred to the two Pension Committees. Now, it is reasonable to presume that each member in this House, in introducing a private pension bill, has done so seriously and with the intent to try to procure its passage. I want to know if it is possible for these two committees to give this great flood of bills such attention as they deserve?

I happen to know well the chairmen of both these committees. There are no two men for whom I have a higher regard; there are not, probably, two more honest and sincere in the public service. I want to say that I have had the pleasure as well as the honor of having lived four years in the same hotel with the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I believe I know something about the facts, and I think I do not misrepresent them when I say that the chairman and the clerks of his committee work six days in the week; and I do not suppose I would misrepresent were I to say a good deal on Sundays also. It is work, work all the time, and yet what does it amount to? With this great amount of work, the number of bills considered and reported is very small in proportion to the number they are asked to consider.

Why should that be the case? That is one of the things I wish to inquire into and ascertain, if I can, what must be done in order to prevent it. If these 5,672 bills are just measures, they ought to be considered in a reasonable time and action taken on them in this House; but it is utterly impossible. I believe that I do not misstate the facts in saying that some members of this House have introduced as many as 200 private pension bills. Now, in justice to the membership of this House the committees have tried to deal fairly and report about the same number of bills for each member. What does it amount to? Two, three, four, possibly five to the member is all that can be reported, while he has forty or fifty unreported bills. These unreported bills perhaps just as meritorious and worthy of consideration as the meager number that are considered.

What is the consequence? When that member goes home he has on his hands 30, 40, or 50 men for whom he has been unable to get any measure of relief. They raise a fire of complaint behind him because three, four, or five bills have been reported. They have a just right to complain. Why should they be selected out of the number introduced for favorable action, while 40, 50, or perhaps 100 others just as good are not reported?

The member finds that getting a few bills reported and passed has only increased his troubles. The three or four whose pensions have thus been increased are often badly dissatisfied because they did not get as great an increase as they felt they were entitled to, and thus the clamor and the storm grows worse.

How can the committee do more than they are doing? How can they work harder? How can they report a greater number of bills and consider them at all? How can the House do more than it is doing? It is a remarkable spectacle to come into this House on private-bill day and see bill after bill pass without a word of information, simply trusting to the committee. Do not blame the House, do not censure it, because, do as it may, it amounts substantially to a denial of justice to a great number of men no doubt as worthy as those whose bills receive consideration.

Look into it; see the result. I say, Mr. Chairman, that this House ought not to undertake to revise the pension roll. It is not capable of doing it. It has not the necessary information nor has it the time to carry it out. General legislation is loudly called for to prevent this House from perpetrating the grossest favoritism and abuses. Take the pension bills passed in the short session of the last Congress. We had only four days—three whole days and a part of another—for pensions. There were passed 707 bills, an average of 177 at a sitting of the House. No more rapid work could be done to have the dignity of consideration and be entitled to it. Let us see what we did. It certainly presents a case for proper nd intelligent treatment. I do not profess to have all the information on this subject. I have but little, and I would be glad if some member of the House more conversant with the matter would give the information we so sadly need.

As I have just said, there were 707 bills passed at the short session in four sittings of the House, an average of 177 on each sitting. The amount appropriated per annum, in round numbers, was $120,000; that to continue for the life of the pensioners. In that short space, counting five hours to a session—and there were sessions when there were not over four hours—both in Committee of the Whole and in proper session, the House had to pass upon these 177 bills, amounting to about $30,000 a session, or $5,000 an hour. The amount involved calls for more deliberate consideration.

Nearly all of these bills were for increases for men who had had consideration at the Pension Bureau and had received a pension for some amount. I want this House to get an idea of the average increase. I will go a little into detail, in order that members may know that I am not overstating the matter. There were 467 bills for increases. Two hundred and sixty-five of that 467 increase the pensions already allowed by the Pension Bureau from 100 to 500 per cent.

The average increase for all is about 200 per cent over and above what the Bureau allowed.

Mr. Chairman, I here read from the last report of the Commissioner of Pensions a statement of the private pension bills passed at the short session of the Fifty-sixth Congress for increases, showing the amount of pension received under the general law as allowed by the Pension Bureau and the amount given the soldier by private bill by way of increase, and I hope this table may be studied with both interest and profit by this House. The table shows the name of the soldier, his rank, and the pension he now receives by private act, and the amount he received prior to the special private act, as follows:

Name of soldier.	Rank and service.	Monthly rate—

Here are cases of $12 to $24, $12 to $30, $12 to $50, $8 to $20, $12 to $40, $6 to $24, $14 to $50, $14 to $30, $12 to $36, $6 to $17, $8 to 30, $12 to $24, $8 to $20, $25 to $40, $36 to $100, and so on through the entire list.

No doubt many of these bills ought not to have passed. This House ought to be able to establish some rule by which injustice shall not be done to that great body of pensioners who have received consideration at the Pension Bureau, and who are not knocking at the doors of Congress for increases by private acts, by refusing to give others who had either no title or one so defective that the Bureau refused to give any pension even greater pensions by private acts than if they had perfect and indefeasible title under general law.

Now, we will say, for example, that $20 per month should be the highest amount allowed under general law to soldiers of the Mexican war or to soldiers of the war between the States under the act of 1890, both being dependent service-pension acts.

No private bill should be reported for a greater amount. The act of July 14, 1890, provides for a pension of $12 per month where there is dependency. Now, how much should we, by general law, in case of total disability allow? Suppose the amount should be $20 per month, same as we would allow the Mexican soldier. No private bill should be passed for more than that amount. In such cases let the committee refuse to report and the House refuse to pass a bill for a greater amount. If the amount fixed by general law is not high enough, then let it be increased by general law.

Of course I assume that nothing except honorable influence is exerted. But we know that often a worthy, a popular, a strong member of this House goes to either of these committees and says, "I have a constituent who is in a terrible condition," and then he describes the man's condition. He says "I want you to do the best you can for him in regard to this pension." Then members, on account of the pitiful description given of the particular case and on account of the influence of the member who introduced the bill, are induced to give more than would otherwise be granted. But the member who asks the committee to do more for a particular individual than the member would be willing to do for the constituent of any other member on the floor is doing wrong.

I ask whether any member here has ever heard a member make a motion to reduce the amount allowed by the committee? I have known of only one member, whose name I will not mention, who has ever moved such an amendment. But, on the other hand, how often is it the fact that after the committee has given a pension bill mature deliberation, careful consideration, and decided to report a bill liberal in its provisions, some member of the House, eloquent perhaps, strong in personal influence, has asked the House to increase the amount of the proposed pension beyond what the committee has reported and to do this upon a statement which he makes here on the floor.

I criticise, and I think justly, any such proceeding. If there should be reported from the committee a bill for an insufficient amount, the proper method to pursue is to ask that the bill be reconsidered, or, if necessary, recommitted, and then let the committee hear the evidence offered which they did not at first have before them, and determine the question. But, sir, the committee has little inducement to be reasonable and conservative in its action if, when it makes a report, the amount allowed in the report is increased on the floor of this House—increased, it may be, without additional evidence bearing upon the case. Such action by the House is impliedly a rebuke to the committee. It is equivalent to saying to the committee, "You have not treated this soldier fairly and justly." I repeat that if there is evidence in such a case that was not submitted to the committee the bill ought to be recommitted and the committee allowed to consider the new evidence.

For reasons like these ever since I have been a member of this House I have always supported the action of the committee, because I believe they have the best opportunity to consider the merits of the case. They are in fact the only members who have such opportunity. They are no doubt influenced often in their action by the personal appeals of members in particular cases, but this influence does not operate upon the committee to the extent that it does upon the House. When an impassioned appeal is made here in behalf of some poor, deserving soldier we all feel kindly and sympathetic, and we are apt to go wild and sometimes grant a pension four times, five times, or six times larger than the soldier can get at the Pension Bureau under the general law and the established rulings of the Department.

Now, my friends, the granting of increased pensions in these exceptional cases is not going to help you at home. We will suppose that in fifty cases where applications are made from your district for increase of pensions you succeed in getting through the increase in two or three cases. You do not help yourself at home. We from the South are perhaps in a better position for success in cases of this kind than others; no doubt a greater percentage of our bills are passed than of other members, because there are fewer applications from the South. The soldiers who served in the Spanish war are from all parts of the Union, not entirely from one section. And we at the South are going to have trouble in regard to this matter. I appeal to the wisdom of the House to deal with this question seriously, honorably, liberally. Let us settle these matters as far as possible by general legislation. Let us have in this House no applications or very rare applications for increases; and when such increases are granted, let them be reasonable in amount and let them be uniform. Here are hundreds of bills on this Calendar in which increases are reported from $8 to $20; from $12 to $24; from $12 to $34; from $12 to $50. There is no uniformity in these increases. No rule seems to be followed, either by members of the committee or by the House.

I indulge in no criticism of gentlemen who are members of the Pension Committee, because they are subjected to these appeals year in and year out, and it is but human nature to give way to the pleadings of want and suffering. But it is the duty of this House to act intelligently and justly on these applications.

I want to say something, not in any spirit of criticism, but simply because it appears to be a fact. As I said, I have no thought of criticising any member of the Pension Committee unjustly, because I know and respect them all and think that they are as good as I am, and may be better under like circumstances, but three members of this committee come from one State.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What State is that?

Mr. SIMS. The State of Michigan. Two of them come from the State of Indiana. It is no reflection if they all come from either of those States. They could, and still be very good men; but the applicants for private acts from those States have an advantage which can not be prevented. Now, I wish to show you just a few figures here. Take the State of Indiana. The number of pensioners in that State is 66,974, and the gross amount paid by this Government to those pensioners is $10,291,896.75 per annum. That State has two members on the committee. Now, let us take the great State of Illinois, right beside it, and I suppose that State furnished pro rata as many soldiers as did Indiana. That State has on the pension roll 70,481, a greater number by several thousand than Indiana, and those pensioners receive $9,757,003.75. Let us take the State of Michigan, with three members on the committee. There are on the roll from Michigan 44,050 pensioners, who receive $6,653,101.55. Now take the State of Pennsylvania. Pennsylvania has on the pension roll 104,345, and they receive $13,378,371. The average annual value of a pension in Michigan is, in round numbers, $150, while the average value in Pennsylvania is but $125. The average annual value in Indiana, in round numbers, is $150, while in Illinois it is $137.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Does the gentleman contend that the allowance made to these pensioners can in any way be affected by the Committee on Invalid Pensions or the Committee on Pensions?

Mr. SIMS. Only in this way: With a greater number of members on the committee there is a better opportunity for those applying for private pensions from that particular State to get them reported.

Mr. SULLOWAY. But a very small per cent of those you name are by private act.

Mr. SIMS. I must state that I do not know just how many are by private act; neither do I know how it happens that three members of this committee come from one State and two members from another.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I want to say in answer to that, if the gentleman will pardon me, that Michigan gets no advantage in that. One of those three members is assigned to the committee that has the territory of Michigan in charge and the other two are somewhere else.

Mr. SIMS. Why, Mr. Chairman, as far as I know, they may be the very best members of that committee. Some of them I know personally and regard them highly; but an analysis of the figures that I have quoted shows that from some cause there is a great disparity in the average value of pensions from different States where the soldiers seem to have had the same service.

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. MAHON. I would like to state that troops from different States were frequently in more severe battles than troops from other States, and in that way more men were badly injured than others. This disparity that the gentleman speaks of comes from the service. It can not be regulated in any way.

Mr. SIMS. I can not go into all the causes, but I think it is a significant fact that the average value of a pension from your State is $125, taking the whole State over, and from the State of Michigan it is $150.

Mr. MAHON. It comes because of severe service.

Mr. SIMS. Of course, that applies to the Bureau and to private legislation; but I am pointing out that injustice does exist and it exists in considering bills on this floor. Why, no longer ago than the last pension day a distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania rose and made one of the most tender and appealing speeches I ever heard, asking an increase in a pension bill over the committee's report. The committee opposed it through one of its members and the increase was not made, and I thought properly—not that I doubted the gentleman's word, but he ought to have given the information he stated to the House to the committee.

Then another gentleman on this side of the House rose and asked for an increase of pension from $24, as reported, to $36. By special act that had already, as I recollect it, been doubled by the committee. The gentleman to whom I refer made statements that, I think, should have been considered by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and the chairman of that committee very kindly stated that the committee reported all they thought the applicant ought to have with the evidence before them, but that he could not question the word of the distinguished gentleman on this side [Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee], and therefore made no objection, and it went right through. Now, was there any more justice in denying the Pennsylvania soldier an increase than the Tennessee soldier?

Mr. SULLOWAY. If the gentleman will permit me, I would like to say that the gentleman on your side of the House produced some evidence here that was not before the committee and he made a much stronger case, and that was the reason for raising no objection.

Mr. SIMS. I understand that, and that is the reason the chairman stated what he did. But are we to be witnesses in all of these cases on the floor of the House and not before the committee? We can not get up here and question what a member says. He says what he believes to be true and his information may be true; but I say, let him go to the committee and make these statements.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SIMS. I would like to have five minutes more.

Mr. HITT. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. SIMS. If a member of this House gets information after the bill has been reported, why then let him ask that the bill be recommitted, and let it come regularly. Now, what is the result of our present methods? What would the entire pension roll amount to if acted on by Congress in this way? I have shown you what 465 cases amount to, that it amounts to double what could have been obtained under the general law. A man goes before the Pension Bureau with an imperfect title. If he had a good title he would get $12, but he can not make it and he does not get anything. Then he comes here, and out of kindness of heart and liberality the House gives him $24, when he could not have gotten over $12 if he had had a good title. I say that the House ought to hold itself down, and whenever they give a pension to a man because of his not being able to strictly comply with all the technicalities of the law they should not give him more than he would have received if he had the proper proof at the Bureau. There are hundreds of soldiers of like service, where there is no doubt of their injury, who receive their pension by the Bureau, and they make no complaint, but those who have a doubtful title come here and are awarded 100 per cent over what they could have obtained if they had had a good title.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I think that is a very unfair statement in view of the fact that when a claimant has made a case before the Bureau with evidence sufficient to hang any member of this House before an intelligent jury, and he is rejected, then the Committee on Pensions gives him what it thinks he ought to have upon that evidence.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I do not know just how much evidence it would take to hang a member of this House. It might not take very much in some cases, but I am presuming that the law officers of this Government do their duty. If they do not, why do they remain in office?

Mr. SULLOWAY. That is a violent presumption in that case.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. If any gentleman desires to ask a question, he will rise to his feet and address the Chair.

Mr. SIMS. I want to state that I believe that if the pension roll of $140,000,000, in round numbers, was revised by Congressional action, it would amount to $400,000,000.

I want to state now a little experience of my own, and I hope nobody will ask me to give the name. A man asked me to introduce a bill to increase his pension. He was getting $12. I introduced a bill for twenty. It was reported at sixteen. The evidence of the physician was all right, showing that this increase was fully warranted. The bill was passed and signed by the President, and I wrote him a letter about it. He wrote back and thanked me very much; but he said, "Since that proof was taken I have gotten a great deal worse. Please introduce a bill for $30." [Laughter.]

They do not all do that, but the idea that each man must get as much as every other man does prevail to a great extent, and we must remove, if possible, the impression among the soldiers of the country that they are not fairly treated, and that those who receive pensions by private legislation are preferred to those who receive pensions under the general law.

Mr. Chairman, I said one year ago in this presence that as long as I remained in this House I should continue in my humble way to make the best fight I could against extravagant and unreasonable pension legislation, either by general law or by private act, and I am now trying to redeem that promise. I am glad that there is much to encourage me in this determination. Since that pledge was made to the House and the country I have seen the total amount appropriated for pensions shrink more than $5,000,000 in one year, while the number of pensioners on the roll have increased more than 4,000. If I could only have more help in this undertaking from members on this side, I would have reason to believe that even greater results would follow; but if I have to continue to do this work alone, as my good friend from South Carolina, Mr. TALBERT, is going to leave us, I shall not cease my efforts as long as they are crowned with so much evidence of success.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, after consultation with my colleague as to the time he desires, I ask unanimous consent that the general debate be closed at half past 2 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that general debate close at half past 2 o'clock. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HITT. I ask the Chair to recognize the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] for thirty minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, in the time allotted to me this morning, I desire briefly to call attention to what I believe to be some of the mistakes and errors that appear in two carefully prepared speeches delivered in this House by the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS] on the subject of the Pacific cable.

The bill favoring Government construction and ownership of the telegraphic cable line from the coast of California to Manila has been reported favorably from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, accompanied by a minority report.

Now, it is not my purpose or desire, Mr. Chairman, to criticise or to animadvert in any improper way upon the eagerness and haste of the gentleman from Michigan or the manner in which he has so earnestly disseminated and given his views to the country before the members of the House had an opportunity to read either the majority or the minority report, and from those reports learn what the real facts are and what the conditions and circumstances are. I say I will not criticise that; that is a matter of mere taste. But I do say, Mr. Chairman, that the circumstances under which it was done lead one reasonably to believe that there was a manifest and decided disposition upon the part of the gentleman from Michigan to have this House and the country prejudge the question in advance of discussion.

Now, it appears to me, Mr. Chairman, that this precipitate and untimely haste in rushing into the discussion of this Pacific cable question—more hurried than Hamlet's mother's marriage to the husband's brother—leaves the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS] in the unpleasant attitude of the "agitator of old," of whom it was said, "The zeal of thine house has eaten thee up."

I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that this is the opportune time to discuss the question in full and according to all of its merits, as to whether the Government should construct and own this Pacific cable, or whether it should be constructed by a private corporation. But it seems to me that it is but just and fair to all concerned in this important matter that the attention of the House and country should be called to the manifest errors of statements and facts occurring in the speeches made by the distinguished gentleman from Michigan, and they ought to be corrected. I do not believe that any gentleman on this floor ought to criticise, impugn, or malign the motives of anyone—individual or corporation—that has not here the right of reply.

I hope that I do not possess any partiality or prejudice that would lead me under any circumstances to accord to a corporation any privilege or advantage that it ought not to have, or to take from that corporation any legal right that it has; and I can say here for myself that, in the many years of my professional experience, I have never had the pleasure or the honor of representing a corporation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in the first instance, I desire to call the attention of the House to a paragraph in the speech of the gentleman from Michigan, in which he uses this language, in the RECORD of February 19, page 2027:

> But, recognizing the importance of Government ownership and control, she—
> Referring to Great Britain—
> has contracted for the construction of a cable over 7,000 miles in length, extending from Vancouver, in the British possessions, down through the Pacific, connecting all of her islands, including Australia and New Zealand.

This, Mr. Chairman, is adroitly intended to commit this House, in its tendencies at least, to Government ownership by the precedent claimed to be established by Great Britain.

Now, I am not disposed in any way to criticise Great Britain. I have not any tendency or disposition in that respect. I recognize it as a great Government that has furnished us with the wonderful principles of the common law, and that we are indebted to it in a great many respects. Therefore I am not here, nor am I disposed in any way, to criticise or speak unkindly of Great Britain in any of her matters, as we hear so frequently done. I desire to see the commercial, social, and political relations of our country and Great Britain most friendly and cordial. Now, what is the real truth of the paragraph just read—and I beg to call the attention of the House to it. The fact is undeniable, and I call the attention of my friend from Michigan, with whom I have the pleasure and honor of serving on the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, that the English Government repeatedly offered a large subsidy to any private company that would build this cable, and tried over and over again with her best and ablest diplomacy to avoid its construction as a Government cable.

Mr. CORLISS. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Certainly.

Mr. CORLISS. Has the gentleman read the proceedings had by the British Parliament on the construction of this Pacific cable, in which it was determined that a Government cable was necessary for the protection of Great Britain and her interests?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I will answer my friend during the course of my remarks.

Mr. CORLISS. If not, I will produce the document for him.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I will say, like I have heard my distinguished friend the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] say so often on the floor of this House, "Oh, we are not talking about that right now; wait until I get to it." [Laughter.] But no private corporation could be induced to take that risk; and I have the evidence of it here or I would not have made that statement. In a speech before the board of directors of the Eastern Extension Cable Company, that my friend speaks so much about, in December last, Sir John Pender, the president of that company, stated that he had again declined, under the offer of a large subsidy by the British Government, to agree to lay a cable from Vancouver to Australia. It had been offered over and over again, and again he had declined.

He emphasized, Mr. Chairman, his unwillingness to undertake the risk of such a cable for so long a distance in unknown waters. And I contend now, Mr. Chairman, that when such an erroneous and misleading statement as that is sent broadcast to the country, and that in advance of a proper discussion in the Congress of the United States, it seems to me that this is sufficient to challenge and invite the inquiry of the House and the country as to what had induced such an assertion on the part of the gentleman from Michigan and what such reckless zeal means.

Mr. CORLISS. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Well, not now. I will when I get through.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Yes, for the present—just for the present. Now, I call your attention again, Mr. Chairman, to an inaccuracy and error that the gentleman makes in his report. In the report made by the gentleman himself from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce he uses this language:

> For fifty years England has been constantly acquiring by purchase and construction cable communication with her vast possessions, until she has expended upward of a hundred millions of dollars for that purpose and operates over 20,000 miles of her own cable lines connecting her colonies.

Now, let us examine that.

The fact is, Mr. Chairman, that the English Government has never to this day owned a long submarine cable. The English Government has a one-half interest only in the short channel cable connecting England with France, Belgium, Holland, and Germany. These countries insisted upon owning an equal interest in these cables, because they would not allow cables owned by another country to land on their shores. Now let us see if this is true. I call the attention of the House to the testimony that was taken in the Fifty-sixth Congress—and my friend from Michigan ought to have known better and must have known better when he made that statement. Listen. This is the testimony given by Mr. Scrymser, one of the men who has wonderfully changed his attitude on the question of Government ownership and individual building of a cable since last Congress.

I read from the testimony taken in the Fifty-sixth Congress before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee:

> Mr. SCRYMSER. I should like to ask if the United States Government would permit a foreign government to land and operate a government-owned cable on the coast of the United States?
> Mr. CORLISS. Let me answer that question by the Yankee notion of asking another question. How many cables owned by Great Britain are laid and operated by her, connecting her with foreign lands? Foreign to herself, I mean.
> Mr. SCRYMSER. I will explain that. The Submarine Telegraph Company, operating all the cables between England and the Continent, was an English corporation. When the English Government bought out the telegraph system of Great Britain it also bought a majority of the shares of the Submarine Telegraph Company, just as it bought a majority of the shares of the Suez Canal. Those shares are held by the English Government, and it is not a government cable. The Government is simply a shareholder, subject to all the conditions of the concessions held by the parent company.
> Mr. CORLISS. Great Britain owns it and controls it, however?
> Mr. SCRYMSER. Owns and controls it, and it owns it and controls it under the concessions granted to the Submarine Telegraph Company, which would give France the right to close any office at any time.
> Mr. CORLISS. Do you mean by that to be understood to say that Great Britain has not to-day in her own individual right a cable upon foreign shores?
> Mr. SCRYMSER. Only through the medium of a corporation which held concessions for that purpose and under which France and other countries have reserved the right to close at any moment.
>
> Mr. CORLISS. You mean to say that Great Britain has none at all in her own right?
> Mr. SCRYMSER. That is right, so far as relates to cable connection with foreign shores.

Now, Mr. Chairman, another point in my friend's speech, and he resorts to what he says is the "deadly parallel." I read, Mr.

Chairman, from the RECORD the deadly parallel that the gentleman from Michigan uses in his speech on February 14, and I submit that the deduction that I propose to make about which he complains in his two speeches—I submit it to the common sense and the business sense of this House and ask if there is anything in it that any business man can possibly object to.

The first deadly parallel is:

(1) That neither the company, its successors or assigns, nor any cable with which it connects, shall receive from any foreign government exclusive privileges which would prevent the establishment and operation of a cable of an American company in the jurisdiction of such foreign government.
(2) That the company shall not consolidate or amalgamate with any other line or combine therewith for the purpose of regulating rates.

The next one, where he says is the "deadly" sting:

(1) That neither this company, its successors or assigns, nor any cable with which it connects (and over which it exercises control) shall receive from any foreign government exclusive privileges which would prevent the establishment and operation of a cable of an American company in the jurisdiction of such foreign government.
(2) That the company will not consolidate or amalgamate with any other line or combine therewith for the purpose of regulating rates (except to make through rates).

Now, the objection that he makes so earnestly and vociferously is of the addition of the words "over which it exercises control," in the first paragraph, and the next is the addition of the words "except to make through rates" as they appear in the second paragraph.

The gentleman claims to expose "the villainy" of the Commercial Pacific Cable Company and "its rascally modifications" by the use of this deadly parallel. I most respectfully submit the inevitable deduction from the "deadly parallel" to the business common sense of the House. It appears to me that a very appropriate parallel can be made, if we recall it, of the mountain that labored, and you know the result.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan contends that the words in the parentheses, as I have read them, and printed in italics, are "rascally modifications" which the officers of the Commercial Company thought were so ingeniously devised as not to be discovered, or that the Secretary of State and the President of the United States were too stupid or indifferent to the public welfare to detect the villainy in them. Such, Mr. Chairman, is the violent and aggressive language that the gentleman from Michigan uses throughout both of his untimely delivered speeches, when he refers to the Commercial Cable Company that makes the simple and plain proposition to build this cable without asking a subsidy from the Government.

Why, I ask, this intemperate language? The gentleman calls most pathetically upon the members of this House who have had no opportunity to see the majority report or the minority report to come to the rescue, and in conclusion he says: "Are the members of this House willing to be charged with the disposition of Nero? Are they to sleep while this American ally usurps the rights of the people and steals the greatest public franchise now held by our country?"

If I have read tradition aright, the gentleman departs from the parallel, because my understanding is that Nero did not sleep while Rome was burning, but he "played the fiddle." [Laughter.]

But let us look a little bit further to the deadly parallel. What is there, I ask you, in the modification complained of and charged to be so rascally and ingenious, devised to mislead, and which was designed to impose upon the well-established diplomatic acumen of the Secretary of State and to blind the perceptive faculties of the President of the United States with his well-known disposition and capacity to detect fraud and deception?

The language used is plain in these italics; it is simple and easily understood. The complaint is about the insertion of the words "and over which it exercises control," in the first paragraph, and the insertion of the words "except to make through rates," in the second paragraph.

Now, I propound this question to the members of this House: How could the Commercial Pacific Company or any other cable company accept or refuse to have anything to do with concessions or privileges over a cable line over which it did not exercise control or over which it has no ownership? How can the United States Government restrict privileges to foreign cables by a foreign government simply because the United States cable connects with such foreign government? How can the United States Government cable get messages to foreign countries unless it connects with foreign cables? How can it do it? The only way it can refuse to connect with foreign cables would be for the United States Government cable or the United States cable corporation to encircle the globe and thereby bring about the octopus monopoly so greatly dreaded by the gentleman from Michigan.

Every American cable in the Atlantic "connects" per force with the foreign cable companies in Europe. Otherwise its messages could not be delivered. It is remarkable logic to undertake to make American companies responsible for the exclusive privileges possessed by foreign companies. The Commercial Company is also taken to task for including in the clause of its petition "that the company will not consolidate or amalgamate with any other line or combine for the purpose of regulating rates" and addition of the words "except to make through rates." It is plain to see that the United States Cable Company would be obliged to enter into some arrangement with foreign companies in order to make through rates. Without this reduced through rates could not be had. By means of this the Commercial Pacific Cable Company, which formerly caused the rates to China to be reduced from $2.35 a word to $1.66 a word, has arranged for further reduction, which they guarantee from $1.66 a word to $1 a word.

Suppose the same policy of complaint was put in operation as to railroads and all other land or water line transportation forbidding through rates. What would the business interests of this country say to such a proposition as that?

The gentleman from Michigan, in the report of the committee, says:

It has been claimed, and we would be pleased to have this cable monopolist deny, that Germany offers a subsidy for the construction of this cable so as to connect its Marshall Islands instead of the island of Guam, where our country has a naval station that demands cable communication.

It will be understood by this House that the only difficulty in reference to the all-American cable occurs in the deep waters around Guam, and it may be that this difficulty can not be avoided and thereby an all-American cable not secured. The testimony before the committee discloses the fact that the waters near Guam are the deepest in the world.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in answer to that error, misstatement, inaccuracy, or inadvertence in the gentleman's speech, I have this to say: The Commercial Cable Company has denied and does deny this statement. There is a letter here from Mr. Ward, vice-president and general manager, an active, intelligent, and leading man in the Commercial Pacific Cable Company, that denies it emphatically. This letter is here for inspection. This company declares that Germany has, neither directly nor indirectly, offered them any subsidy or any other inducement whatever to land a cable on the Marshall or any other island.

The company has further guaranteed—and I want you to listen to this, and we have a copy of the bond of that company attached to the minority report of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee—the company has further guaranteed that they will land on American soil, if that be a physical possibility, and they have asserted their anxiety to make a bond agreement to this effect as soon as they can ascertain through the Navy Department soundings or through soundings of their own that it will be physically possible to land a cable at Guam. They have stated, in my opinion, sound and good reasons for objecting to landing on German soil, because they would thereby be compelled to give half rates to the German Government and be subject to other restrictions that the German Government might see proper to impose.

Why, Mr. Chairman, the Government ownership bill, reported by the gentleman from Michigan, states that the cable shall be constructed by the way of Guam "by whatever route may be determined to be the most practicable by the President."

That is the provision of the gentleman's bill. Does not this paragraph inserted in the bill indicate an uncertainty? It is an admission that it may not be possible to land a cable at Guam or to construct an all-American cable. And yet this Commercial Cable Company, which has made so fair and liberal a proposition to the Government, is charged with these sinister motives because, forsooth, they say "if practicable" they will build an all-American cable.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HITT. I have no more time or I would yield further to the gentleman.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alahama. I would be glad to have my time extended for a few minutes, by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks.

Mr. CLAYTON. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague be allowed an extension of fifteen minutes.

Mr. HITT. That motion will have to be modified in some way, because by unanimous consent a time has been fixed for closing general debate. If this request is agreed to, it will have to be understood that the time for closing debate will be deferred for fifteen minutes and this additional fifteen minutes given to the gentleman from Alabama.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate be extended for fifteen minutes.

Mr. CLAYTON. And that those fifteen minutes be given to my colleague.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time for closing general debate be extended for fifteen minutes and that the gentleman from Alabama be now allowed an extension of fifteen minutes. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Now, my friend from Michigan becomes really dramatic when he uses this expression in one of his speeches:

The audacity of this octopus and the villainous ingenuity with which it seeks to evade the conditions imposed upon other cable companies, and extend its tentacles over our islands in the Pacific, and fasten its grasping clutch upon the wheels of progress so rapidly moving from our country toward the Pacific Ocean is marvelously ingenious and the most audacious usurper of public rights of the present age.

Why, Mr. Chairman, such hyperbolic language as this carries us back to the days when Socialists and Populists talked flippantly about that wonderful "octopus" that was winding itself slowly (in their heated imagination) around the body politic of this great Government of ours and squeezing the very lifeblood out of all of us. The gentleman from Michigan surely must possess well-defined Populistic views and tendencies. On March 6, at Indianapolis, in the year 1900, Eugene Debs was nominated for President of the United States on this declaration:

The public ownership of all railroads, telegraph and telephone, and all means of transportation and communication, all waterworks, gas and electric plants, and other public utilities.

On the 2d day of July, 1892, James B. Weaver was nominated for President on this declaration:

Transportation being a means of exchange and a public necessity, the Government should own and operate the railroads in the interests of the people, and the telegraph and telephone, like the post-office system, being a necessity for the transmission of news, should be owned and operated by the Government in the interests of the people.

Now, let us look at what the gentleman from Michigan says on that subject.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Yes; what is it?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I would like to ask the gentleman if he was aware that Thomas Benton, before there was ever a Populist heard of, advocated the building of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad by the United States?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. No. I have not gone back to ancient history. I have just gone back to Debs and Weaver.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. That was advocated by Thomas Benton and John C. Calhoun.

I will read from the report of the gentleman from Michigan, at page 8. Listen to it, and I ask you to institute the "deadly parallel" between the declarations in the platform of Debs and of Weaver and what the gentleman from Michigan says in this report. He says:

The transmission of communication should be held by the State. The Post-Office Department is undoubtedly the most useful arm of our Government, and has given to our people, through the blessings of rapid communication at the least possible cost, the greatest benefits and contributed most to the progress of the nation.

I leave it to the fair and unbiased judgment of this House to say what the parallel is between the position of the gentleman from Michigan and the platforms upon which Debs and Weaver were nominated. It is not my purpose, Mr. Chairman, at this time to enter upon the discussion of the acceptance by the Commercial Cable Company of the provisions of the postal act of 1866, or the authority of the President or the Secretary of State as to the landing of cables on American soil.

I simply refer to what I believe to be certain inaccuracies in order to put this House and the country on notice that it will not be well to decide this question until the facts on both sides can be regularly and fully presented. The complicated question, Mr. Chairman, of cable manufacture and management, the relative costs of Government and private ownership, the advisability of the Government invading the private field of enterprise—all of these great questions and many others should be carefully examined into before our judgment is rendered upon this important subject. This question has been ably discussed in past Congresses, and it is quite interesting to examine the present attitude of some of the leading parties as compared with their attitudes in the past. Mr. Scrymser, the president of the Mexican Telegraph Company, the Central and South American Telegraph Company, and the Pacific Cable Company, says in evidence taken before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House:

Mr. SCRYMSER. I have appeared before this committee frequently during the past five years and advocated the establishment of a private cable and opposed the establishment of a Government-owned cable.

* * * * * * *

Mr. SCRYMSER. President of the Mexican Telegraph Company, the Central and South America Telegraph Company, and the Pacific Cable Company. Mr. Baylies is with me, and he can give you some information affecting these exclusive rights in a way which I think would be far more accurate and intelligent than I can present it.

Mr. MANN. Have your companies any special connection or relation with the Western Union Telegraph Company?

Mr. SCRYMSER. Yes, sir; we have a traffic agreement.

Mr. MANN. I suppose it is a good thing once in a while to get down to what they call "brass tacks," and get a little information. If the Pacific Commercial Cable Company strikes a line across the Pacific with an arrangement with the Eastern Company, do you consider that that will be a discrimination against the Western Union Telegraph Company?

Mr. SCRYMSER. Undoubtedly; that is the rock on which we split.

Mr. MANN. That is the real reason you are now in favor of Government ownership, or one of the reasons?

* * * * * * *

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Will my colleague state whether the bill he is now advocating is in the interest of the Western Union Telegraph Company?

Mr. CORLISS. I am very glad to have that question asked at this time. In the Fifty-fifth Congress there were pending two measures, one in behalf of what was known as the Pacific Cable Company, controlled by Mr. Scrymser, who sought to obtain the right to lay this cable with a subsidy; and another company, in whose interest the Commercial Company seemed to be associated, sought also the privilege with a subsidy. One of those bills was reported to the House carrying a subsidy of, I think, $400,000 per annum. It was in behalf of the Pacific Cable Company, associated with which is supposed to be the Western Union interest in the cable across the Atlantic. They were undoubtedly interested in that bill, as the Commercial Cable Company, now seeking to usurp the right, was anxious to defeat that bill or pass one for its own use.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want simply in conclusion to refer to the report of the minority on this subject. The minority of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee says:

We dissent from the majority report. In our judgment the Government should not undertake to construct a cable to the Hawaiian Islands and the Philippines. A private corporation, the Commercial Pacific Cable Company, has given the assurance that a contract has been let by it for the manufacture and laying of a cable from San Francisco to the Hawaiian Islands, and that that cable will be in operation by November 1 of this year. That company has declared that it intends to complete a cable to Manila within two years thereafter.

We attach hereto a proposed contract executed on behalf of the Commercial Cable Company, under which said company claims this Government can obtain the advantages of the completion of a cable at an early day, and the probability of governmental ownership, and avoid the risks and disadvantages of governmental ownership by allowing a private corporation to lay and operate its cable. Moreover, we do not think it right for the Government to lay this cable after a private corporation has started to lay such a cable. It appears also that this Commercial Pacific Cable Company, having filed with the Postmaster-General its acceptance of a certain act of Congress of July 24, 1866, is now under moral obligations to sell its cable and property to the Government at any time at its appraised value, and also that the Postmaster-General has the right annually to fix the rate to be charged for governmental cablegrams transmitted by this cable, and also that governmental messages shall have precedence over other messages in transmission.

I now refer to the conclusions of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce that reported on this subject in the last Congress:

The following disadvantages of a Government cable have occurred to the committee, and in the opinion of the committee they are controlling and justify the conclusions now arrived at:

1. The great first cost of establishing a Government trans-Pacific cable system, that is $15,000,000.

2. The comparatively great annual cost of a Government cable, estimated at $1,500,000.

3. The inability of the United States Government to land and operate a government-owned cable either in Japan or China.

4. That as a Government cable would not obtain traffic to and from China and Japan, its income would be limited to traffic to and from the Philippines and Hawaiian Islands, which at an outside estimate would not exceed $150,000 annually, while the annual expense would be $1,500,000.

5. That, assuming that a Government cable could reach China and Japan and secure all the business which a private company might develop, still, if the experience of American cable companies in Central and South America is repeated in the Philippines, China, and Japan, as seems probable, 90 per cent of the whole telegraph traffic will be carried on by less than 400 customers, 300 of whom will be foreigners and the balance inhabitants of the United States; so that the proposition to establish a Government cable system would mean a tax amounting to an outlay of $15,000,000 and a large annual expense for the benefit of only 100 Americans and 300 foreign firms and corporations.

Mr. Chairman, I ask if there is any argument that has been made for and in behalf of the Government building, constructing, and owning this Pacific cable that does not apply with equal force to land transportation, railroads, and to our foreign shipping interests? Why does it not apply?

Now, Mr. Chairman, just in conclusion, as I see my time is about to run out, I desire to read what one of the ablest commercial papers published in this country says about that majority report. I do not mean to reflect upon anybody or on anything, but the Journal of Commerce, published in New York, stands as high with the business interests of this country as any newspaper, magazine, or other publication, I believe, in the country. It is well for this House, when undertaking to engage in a business transaction, to consider these things. Here is a company that offers to build this cable, that has a contract already let for a part of it, and that obligates itself to build it by 1905 without a single dollar of subsidy from the Government.

In the last Congress the proposition was for the Government to pay $400,000 annually for twenty years. This company now offers to build this cable without any Government subsidy. When you come to look into this matter and see the testimony of Mr. Scrymser you will see where the great Western Union Telegraph Company stands in this transaction. It is here to-day opposing this company, opposing the proposition to let an individual corporation build this line, when in the last Congress it advocated that proposition. What is the cause of the change? I say it is enough to cause us to look into it,

Now, the Journal of Commerce comments upon the majority report upon this bill, which is the report made by my friend the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS], who made two speeches upon this subject before the majority and minority reports were presented to the House. The Journal of Commerce in commenting on this report uses this language:

The majority report of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on the bill providing for Government ownership of the Pacific cable is one of those documents which tend to deepen the conviction that there has of late years been a marked decline in the average intelligence of the popular branch of Congress. It certainly reads like anything but the argument that an intelligent body of men would present on a plain business proposition for the purpose of convincing other men of presumably sound judgment of the propriety of expending a very large amount of public money. It is a curious mixture of pure claptrap, baseless assumption, and bald inaccuracy.

Mr. Chairman, if this bill is passed, I sincerely believe that it will be the stepping-stone to the most comprehensive system of Government monopoly. The most advanced expansionists can scarcely contend for such a measure. It is an old and well-established American doctrine that the Government shall not enter the field of individual enterprise. The protection of our foreign possessions is not so exacting that we should violate this fundamental principle.

Mr. CORLISS says:

How anyone representing the interests of the people can sanction such a scheme by their silence and countenance the compact between these companies is beyond my comprehension.

My reply, Mr. Chairman, to that is that it is more than preposterous to think that any public man or business man would for a moment favor the United States Government laying a cable to compete with a cable which is being manufactured and laid at private expense and without a dollar of subsidy or cost to the Government, and laid by a company competent, skilled, and reputable, and which gives every guaranty that the Government has asked—permits the Government to buy the cable at any time at an appraised value; agrees to build an all-American cable, if possible; to allow Postmaster-General to fix the Government rates; to give priority to Government messages; to allow Secretary of State, when he thinks it is expedient to the public service, to take control of the cable for the use of the Government, or if Secretary of State thinks proper, can order persons to take charge of the transmission of messages; to build the entire line to the Philippines by January 1, 1905. How can a business man ask that the Government build their cable in the face of such propositions from a competent private company?

Mr. Chairman, the comment that I have read from the Journal of Commerce comes from a paper that goes into the banking houses and business offices of the men of this country. It was made upon the report of my friend from Michigan. It speaks plainly and with force on the business aspect of this question.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BELLAMY] fifteen minutes.

Mr. BELLAMY. Mr. Chairman, on Monday last this House, by a unanimous vote, passed the bill abolishing the last of the war taxes, which were levied to meet the expenses of the war of humanity which was declared by our Government against Spain to release her tyrannical hand from the throat of prostrate Cuba.

The necessity for the repeal of these war taxes had been long apparent, and this burden on our people ought to have been removed more than two years ago, when the Democratic minority endeavored to abolish them, but were prevented by the majority party in this Chamber.

This action, however, coming as late as it does, is gratifying to the friends of good government, who believe that unnecessary taxation is unjust taxation, and that the accumulation of a large surplus in the Treasury is robbery of the substance of the people and an impoverishment of their condition.

It seems, then, that at last a general feeling of justice and equity is beginning to pervade this Chamber, which I hope will continue, that we may invoke it in behalf of the Cuban people in their appeal to the American Congress.

There is no figure in the present era of our politics who has impressed me more as one who is fearless, honest, and positive, and withal endowed with great individuality, than has our distinguished President, and, while differing with him in many of his views of governmental principles and policies, I cheerfully concede to him these virtues. In his message to Congress in December last he used this language:

I most earnestly ask your attention to the wisdom, indeed, to the vital need, of providing a substantial reduction of the tariff on Cuban imports into the United States.

In enforcing this grave matter upon Congress he but gave emphasis to these characteristics, expression to a wise and statesman-like policy, and to a sentiment that lies deeply embedded in every philanthropic American heart.

These views are entitled to the respectful and serious consideration of this Congress, and should be heeded by the enactment of a law to effect that result.

I wish to thank the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] for his wise, timely, and patriotic resolution in behalf of Cuba, inviting her to become a part of the American Republic, and to assure him that he has at least my humble aid and support in this commendable measure.

His resolution is as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to admit Cuban sugars, produced from the present crop, upon the payment of three-fourths of the present duty, in consideration of a reciprocal arrangement upon the part of Cuba, giving to the American products entering Cuba such concessions or preferential duties as he may approve and deem advisable, such arrangement to continue until the 1st day of January, 1903.

SEC. 2. That in the meantime the Republic of Cuba is invited to become a part of the United States of America and her people to become citizens of the United States, with the assurance that Cuba will be entitled at first to a Territorial form of government under the Constitution and laws of the United States, with a Delegate in Congress to represent her people, and that ultimate statehood will be granted when, in the judgment of the Congress of the United States, it is advisable to admit Cuba, including such other West India islands belonging to the United States as may be deemed advisable, as a single State in the Union, to be called the State of Cuba.

It has long been the dream, if not the ardent desire, of the American people that Cuba should some day become an integral part of our Union. Mr. Thomas Jefferson recommended its acquisition early in his first Administration.

During President Polk's Administration our Government offered Spain $100,000,000 for the islands, but Spain promptly declined the offer.

In 1854 President Pierce, through his Secretary of State, Marcy, appointed Ministers Buchanan, Mason, and Soulé, then our representatives at three European courts, to confer with Spain in reference to its acquisition, and these ministers published a manifesto in which they said the Union could never enjoy repose and security "as long as Cuba is not embraced within its boundaries."

The national Democratic convention of 1856, and that also of 1860, both declared in favor of the acquisition of Cuba. It is Democracy, therefore—yes, Jeffersonian Democracy—to advocate the expansion of our Republic, if such expansion extends to the acquisition of contiguous territory, or even territory in close proximity to the American Union.

It is the manifest destiny of this great American Union, this great national Republic, to expand its territorial borders, and in the course of time to embrace within its limits the Dominion of Canada and the Republic of Mexico, and to become a great North American Republic, ruling the people who inhabit it with those principles embodied in that form of government first promulgated to the world in the written Constitution of the United States. And it is a fervent wish in which I may be pardoned for indulging that I may live to see the day when by peaceable and honorable means not only those two great countries, but Cuba as well, may be merged into our Union under the same flag and the same Constitution which is now the emblem of our nationality and the chart of our powers.

How can we bring about these ends? Not by hostile tariff laws, which already have alienated many of the best people of Canada, who have fondly cherished the idea of annexation to this Republic, but by cultivating the most equitable reciprocal trade relations as to those articles she produces that would not cripple or injure any existing industries of our country and by encouraging the most friendly social intercourse, which will ultimately weld together the two countries by such ties as to make it to the interest and policy of that great Dominion to knock for admission to our Union, that they may also share the advantages of a republic which develops not only the most magnificent citizenship, but also the most splendid material and industrial civilization that the genius of man has ever evolved.

Many annexationists have boldly proclaimed that the Teller resolution passed at the time of the declaration of the war against Spain—

That the United States disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination, when that is accomplished, to leave the government and control of the island to its people—and that the war was declared to stop the inhuman and brutal practices of Spain toward those people, was not only a mistake, but a blunder. I do not so regard it. There is honor among nations as among individuals, and no other declaration and no other motive would have justified, at the time, this Government, either among the nations of the world or in the eyes of our own Christian people in this era of the world's civilization, in sacrificing the blood and property of this nation, which was offered up on the altar of humanity.

That resolution was the expression of a policy long adopted by this nation in its relations with the other powers of the world, which has ever made it the beacon light to lead on all struggling peoples, which have been restless for liberty and which has made this Republic leap forward in its progress as a nation, and attracted to its shores much of the splendid manhood and talent of the world, who have made it their home and contributed toward making it the richest and most powerful of all nations.

By the destiny of war Porto Rico has become a part of our territory. The Danish West Indies have been purchased within the last few days, and Cuba, the gem of the Antilles, stands at our threshold.

Cuba occupies to-day a most singular attitude toward this Republic. Geographically it is but a prolongation of the Florida coast, which in some remote age was cut off from the mainland by volcanic upheaval or depression. Certain it is that its proximity to our territory makes it a most valuable and desirable acquisition.

It has, by its last census, 1,572,000 people. It has rich soil and pleasant climate.

Her chief products are sugar, tobacco, fruits, hard woods, and minerals, which she exports, while her purchases are rice, cotton goods, boots and shoes, paper, machinery, crockery, glassware, furniture, and wood manufactures.

In her present depressed and impoverished condition she buys of other nations annually about—

Rice	$4,000,000
Low-class wines	4,000,000
Metals and machinery	5,000,000
Cotton goods	7,000,000
Boots and shoes	400,000
Crockery and glassware	7,000,000
Furniture and woodwork	3,000,000
Total	34,000,000

Besides this she purchases many millions of dollars worth of food products. Her purchases for 1891 amounted to $66,000,000. Much the larger portion of all her purchases of manufactured products are obtained from Europe, when reciprocal trade relations at the present time would enable our factories and people to sell them at least 90 per cent of all these purchases, and final annexation will practically secure it all.

And why should we not induce Cuba to enter our ports on terms more advantageous to both countries? Will it injure seriously or in any degree any existing industry of this nation?

It has been claimed by only two industries—that of beet sugar and the cigar manufacturer—that they would be affected.

Let us examine these claims. In reference to the sugar-beet industry we see that for the year 1901 the entire amount of sugar consumed in the United States was 2,372,316 tons.

The entire product of the sugar producer for 1901 was from—

	Tons.
Louisiana	300,000
Hawaii	320,000
Porto Rico	120,000
American beet sugar	150,000
Making a total of	890,000

which still left a shortage in American consumption for said year of 1,482,316 tons. Cuba's sugar product estimated for 1901–2 is 800,000 tons. If the whole of her product were allowed to come in free, there would still be a shortage in the American demand of 682,316 tons, which we would still have to import from other nations of the world; and yet the beet-sugar trust is not willing to allow the people of the United States to be generous to a nation whose good will we wish to hold and which is virtually asking to be admitted into our Union as a part of our territory!

In the matter of the cigar makers' claim, I have this to say: The quality of tobacco which Cuba produces and manufactures does not seriously come in competition with the American product. But few States in the Union cultivate tobacco for cigar purposes. Neither Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Alabama, Mississippi, or Louisiana cultivate it at all for that purpose, while Ohio, Connecticut, Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, New York, Massachusetts, and Florida to a very limited extent!

And even in Cuba her exports of cigars to the United States has fallen off from 1889 to the year 1900 of nearly 62 per cent; last year even less. In 1900 Cuba only exported to the United States three-fourths of 1 per cent of all the cigars consumed in this country. Even if Cuba should be encouraged to aspire to producing 2 per cent of the American cigar consumption she would have to double her present output, which she could not do, because of the recognized fact that she has not the land adapted to the growth of tobacco suitable to our market.

Why, then, is it not good business policy to reduce the tariff on sugar and cigars 40 per cent of the present rates for a corresponding reduction of the Cuban tariff on cotton goods, rice, furniture, woodwork, boots and shoes, machinery, glass and crockery ware?

This is a matter not only of general good to the people of all sections of our country, but especially so to the section which I represent.

Cotton manufactures are growing at a very rapid rate in the States of North and South Carolina and Georgia.

In the census returns for 1900, North Carolina has advanced ahead of all the States of the Union in the number of cotton-manufacturing establishments.

	Mills.
North Carolina	177
Massachusetts	163
Pennsylvania	150
South Carolina	80
Rhode Island	71
Georgia	67

While in the capital invested Massachusetts stands first, South Carolina, Rhode Island, and North Carolina follow in successive order. In North Carolina, in 1900, 30,273 persons were employed in these mills, while 30,201 were employed in South Carolina, and 18,283 in Georgia.

In North Carolina, in 1901, $17,386,624 of material was used, and in South Carolina $17,263,882, and $11,113,356 in Georgia. In the last two years the cotton-mill industry has been much depressed and many mills have been run at a loss. It is estimated that with proper reciprocal arrangements the cotton-goods trade alone could be increased to $13,000,000 a year when that country is permitted to make a living price on sugar and tobacco, which to-day, on account of the high tariff, we are reliably informed, is raised and sold at a loss and her people unable to buy our products.

There is another consideration which makes the residents of the Atlantic seaboard look with favor upon the problem of annexation. Situated so close to our doors, with a rich soil and luxurious vegetation under a semitropical sun, Cuba has been for generations past a breeding spot for that most virulent and fatal of all pests, yellow fever. We have seen our seaport towns, in years gone by, swept by epidemics of this dreadful disease, brought from Cuba, with such violence that our towns were almost depopulated. It took years to recover from the demoralization and loss, both to life and property, and yet each recurring season they stood in awe of another visitation.

Norfolk and Wilmington, Charleston and Savannah, New Orleans and Mobile, and Galveston all felt the scourge of this dreadful plague.

Modern hygienic measures have demonstrated not only that this disease can be checked, but can be eradicated by proper sanitary precautions.

The welfare of the great eastern section from Maine to Texas would be secured if the Government of the United States owned this territory and could put into practical execution all of its laws and rules of sanitation to the same extent and as fully as it could or would do were Cuba a part of our territory and our governmental regulations at all times in force there.

But apart from a business and sordid consideration, that humanity which we so much and so wisely respected, and which prompted us to declare war against Spain, now urgently demands that the United States, which has its army in the island, and which has forced Cuba to yield her assent to the eight provisions of the Platt amendment—that she should not enter into a treaty with a foreign power, allowing such power to obtain lodgment in or control of any portion of her territory; that she shall not contract a debt beyond the ability of the island to pay; that this Government may intervene at any time it deems proper to protect life, liberty, or property; that this Government shall have a voice in the sanitary plans of the island, and that Cuba will cede to us territory for coaling stations and dockyards, and shall not include the Isle of Pines in the government—demands now, as we virtually exercise a protectorate, that we give her the relief for which she prays.

President-elect Palma, of the Cuban Republic, tells us that unless we reduce the tariff on sugar the planter can not make any profit whatever, and he can not continue in business, and—as a consequence 500,000 persons will be practically without means of subsistence. Anarchy will reign in the island instead of law and order, and you will not only have to send more troops there, perhaps, but will surely be sending us food, that we may not die of famine.

And to the same effect is the report of our representative in Cuba, General Wood, who forcibly says:

Each day of delay in giving relief is dangerous. When once the crash comes relief will be of little value, except to the speculator, who may gather up the wrecks here. The people of the country, who have virtually reconstructed it in three years, will be ruined, and we shall have to step in and reoccupy the country or continue in occupation and do over again the work which we have spent thousands of lives and much treasure in doing up to date.

This information, coming as it does from the representatives of the two governments, with daily appeals from the commercial bodies of Cuba and many of her prominent citizens to the members of this House, is a warning which this Government can not disregard.

On comparison with the Philippine possessions Cuba is a far more desirable acquisition. I can not better draw the comparison than by quoting a part of an article in the Habana Post of November 10, 1901, where the editor says:

All of the Philippines, for example, import less than Habana does, although the population of Manila and Habana are practically the same.

Manila contains more than 50,000 Chinamen and Habana fewer than 3,000. Manila holds more than 180,000 native Filipinos and Habana fewer than 30,000 negroes; Manila has fewer than 11,000 whites, including 8,500 Americans, while Habana is controlled by 116,000 native whites, assisted by 53,000 whites of foreign birth. This tells the story. The situation in Hawaii is little if any better than in the Philippines. Porto Rico is stifled by an excessive population, negro and mixed, and holds no promise for development.

Outside of the towns, both in the Hawaiian and the Philippine islands, the barbarian holds sway. Life is not safe, and agriculture must be carried on under the protection of armed men. Outside of the cities and towns of Cuba human life is as safe as within the towns, and as safe as in Ohio or Pennsylvania. Here are millions of acres awaiting occupation and culture, and the immigrant can squat as safely in Santiago as he could fifty years ago in Nebraska.

The conditions are entirely different in Cuba from those of the other islands named. There are more white persons in Cuba than in the Philippines, Sandwich Islands, Porto Rico, Java, Trinidad, Barbadoes, Bermuda, and British Guiana together. There are more evidences of wealth and civilization in this island than in all the others united. The United States can sell more goods to this island two years from now, under proper trade arrangements, than that country will be selling to all of the others. More Americans will come to Cuba under such trade arrangements than will go to all the other areas named. With fair trade relations, this island would become Americanized long before the American armies can be withdrawn from the Philippines.

Already this Government has expended $300,000,000 for the subjugation of the Philippine Islands, and it is costing us $12,000,000 a month to further pacify them. So long as we keep these Asiatics they will be a source of irritation and expense to our country. Spain has given us the veritable shirt of Nessus, and the more we try to solve the expensive problem of pacification by arms the more we will tear the very flesh from our vitals. Let our Government promptly adopt the affirmative policy now outlined by the Democratic party in the Senate, which is:

(1) That the United States relinquish all claim to sovereignty over the Philippines, "subject to the provisions hereinafter set forth."

(2) That from and after the passage of this act the Philippine Islands shall be foreign territory, and all goods entering the United States therefrom shall be subject to the same duties, customs, and imposts as are now or may be hereafter prescribed by law for goods entered from other foreign countries: Provided, That during the temporary occupation of the islands all trade between them and the United States shall be free.

(3) That the United States shall continue to occupy the archipelago until the Filipinos have formed for themselves a stable government, and until sufficient guarantees have been obtained for the performance of our treaty obligations with Spain, and for the safety of those inhabitants who have adhered to the United States.

(4) That as soon as these results have been accomplished it is declared to be the purpose of the United States to withdraw from the Philippines and leave the government, control, and sovereignty thereof to the inhabitants, retaining only such military, naval, and coaling stations as may be designated by the Government of the United States.

If we can then free ourselves by this means of the Philippine blunder and confine our territorial acquisitions to the American continent, the United States of America will become the leading factor in the world's civilization. Our Army, which, if large, may become, as the founders said, "the engine of despotism," may be kept at a minimum and not be a burden to the people; our Navy should be increased to keep pace with our constantly increasing commerce, and will be able to protect American interests in all quarters of the globe. If, then, by generous treatment we can further gain the good will of Cuba, and by the passage of the Newlands resolution invite her to apply for annexation, the "Gem of the Antilles" will add much to the wealth of our nation. She will become a valuable strategic point, as she is now a natural military outpost for our Government, which, if not secured, may, in the not distant future, be used to the great detriment of this country in time of war.

Let us all be true and cling with confidence to the traditions of the fathers.

Let us avoid entangling alliances and develop our Republic on the Western Hemisphere.

Let us preserve and defend the Monroe doctrine.

Let us extend our trade by the principles of amity and fair dealing.

Our people will then be prosperous and happy. The American name will be revered throughout the world as the synonymn of honor, chivalry, and progress. Wars will not be known, and peace and plenty will prevail throughout the land.

> Peace! And no longer from its brazen portals
> The blast of war's great organ shakes the skies;
> But beautiful as the songs of the immortals
> The holy melodies of love arise.

[Loud applause.]

Mr. HITT. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the passage of the bill under consideration means that for another year after the close of the present fiscal year this country is pledged to a continuance of the present inefficient consular system.

Viewed from a commercial standpoint there is no branch of this Government so much in need of immediate reform as the consular service. We have reached the time when this country has become a great exporting nation. Whether we shall hold our own and increase our foreign markets largely depends upon the efficiency of this service. That will be a more potent factor in the development of our trade relations with foreign nations than any ship-subsidy bill that can be enacted into law.

I had hoped that before the present bill would be presented for our consideration a bill effecting radical changes in this service on business lines would be passed. When I vote for this bill it will be only because a continuance of the present service is better than none at all.

My plea is for a complete reorganization of this important branch of the public service.

Pending that, I urge two important reforms which are possible and most urgent, one, at least, of which can be made by amendment of the present bill.

The first is the selection of more efficient men to fill the consulships in important commercial ports, or ports which can be made important.

Second. Adequate pay for our representatives, especially at these ports.

An examination of the great commercial routes of the world will show that shipping from all the export ports of the eastern and western Atlantic converges at the entrance of the Mediterranean Sea. It then sails east, some stopping at the ports of southern Europe and northern Africa, but the main body pass through the Suez Canal and visit Arabia, Egypt, the seaport towns of eastern Africa, or those of southern Asia, until Singapore is reached. Here it diverges, going northward to Manila, Hongkong, and the commercial ports of eastern Asia and Japan, and southward through the East Indies until they touch the ports of far-off Australia and the islands of Oceania.

To the American, English, German, and French manufacturers—and these are the four greatest manufacturing nations—this commercial route takes a very considerable part of the manufactured goods they export, and through it returns all the merchandise returned in exchange for the outgoing cargoes.

One would naturally suppose that at every port of general rendezvous or importance along that great artery of commercial travel this country would be represented by a capable, active, aggressive, industrious business man—a real American hustler—who not only examines the situations as disclosed at his port daily, keeping up with the news as told by the trading vessels coming and going, locating the localities where goods were being carried, as well as the return cargoes, watching demand and supply, alert to find an opportunity for a new market or the extension of an existing one. Is this the case?

It happened to be my privilege last summer to pass over this great commercial route, stopping at Gibraltar, where all that vast volume of shipping going to the Orient stops and stops again returning, visiting the ports of Malta, Port Said, Suez, Aden, Ceylon, Singapore, Manila, Hongkong, Shanghai, Nagasaki, Kobe, and Yokohama.

All along the route I gave attention to the matter of American consuls and met and conversed with many of them. Time and time again the utter inefficiency and sometimes the absolute worthlessness of the present service at these important ports was impressed upon me. I do not hesitate to say that I believe the great mercantile firm of Marshall Field & Co., of Chicago, told nothing but the plain, unvarnished truth when they said:

> There is no branch of the service more in need of reform. So far as the importing business is concerned, our consuls, with some few exceptions, are worthless, and if we hope to secure for our manufacturers a full share of foreign trade the necessity for improvement in the service is apparent. It seems to me that this country should be intelligently and creditably represented abroad.

Any traveler who has the power of observation to a slight degree, when his attention is called to our service, must admit that only too often our consuls are worthless. One would naturally suppose that along the important commercial pathway which I have mentioned we would have our best men. If that is the case, I would like to see the worst.

It is fair at least to consider those located at the ports I visited as fair specimens of what I would find along other important commercial routes.

With these as examples I cry out loudly for reform. The increase of our foreign markets has been largely due to the individual enterprise of our manufacturing companies, and they have received little or no assistance from our consular agents. They have paid their own bills, and the expense of establishing a foreign market for any manufactured article is enormous and the risk great.

They are entitled to have such assistance as this Government can furnish them with through the most expert and energetic officials.

They have no such assistance if the ports I have visited are fair examples.

At Gibraltar, which by reason of its location ought to be one of the most important of our consular stations, what have we there? A miserable $1,500 position, with a consul who certainly does not earn by his work a larger sum.

When I was at Gibraltar during the past year, the consul had recently died, and his son was taking his place, and, if I remember rightly, his son had never seen America. The father had been there for many years. The fact was that the service at an important point like that was in the hands of a man who knew little or nothing of America. He had no occasion to speak any foreign language particularly, because the English language is current there, so that that was no excuse for having a foreigner there or a man who was equivalent to a foreigner.

Here, at that important point, at the gateway of that great highway of commerce, we have a $1,500 consulate, and the result is a $1,500 man. I say, if we want to improve this service we could start right at this point and make that consular station a position commensurate with the importance of the place, and then fill it by putting a live, hustling, American business man there.

I am satisfied there are opportunities for extending our markets all over this portion of the world, in Africa, in Spain, and many other places where proper consular officials could give us important information, through the opportunities afforded by the shipping coming through this port. At Malta, in my opinion, we have one of the most active men I have met in the service. Instead of giving him the miserable $2,000, give him better pay, for he spends the greater portion of his salary in pushing our business interests. This pushing, energetic man we should give a liberal salary, so that he should be able to meet half way the people from whom you are trying to obtain business.

We all know in business it takes money to extend trade. To say the least, our consuls must meet men and entertain them constantly; mix with them and be the polite good fellow among them. A consul receiving $1,500 or $2,000 a year must do this out of his own pocket. In these seaports along the principal commercial routes there should be a contingent fund in the consul's control, under fair limitations, by which he can meet contingencies as they occur. I am satisfied that the work of first-rate men at Gibraltar, Malta, and Port Said, where we do not have a consulate, only an agent, would pay the expense of the whole consular service in the East. Here are three important places—Gibraltar, Malta, and Port Said—through which the shipping of the Orient passes. Active men at these places could keep tab on all that takes place in the Eastern commercial world.

They could give our Government information and suggestions which would do more to extend our commerce than any subsidy bill. And if we would follow out that with an active man in Ceylon, and an able representative at Singapore, we would do much to improve the service in that part of the world. The representative at Colombo is not at all fitted for the place he holds. When we arrived there few of us were able to find our consul. He did not seem to think it was worth while to come on board a United States transport or even inquire whether he could be of any service to representatives of his country.

A man with less ambition I never met in the service; and from all I could find out about him from the active business men I met in that city he seemed to hold himself aloof from the business community and associates with himself, mixing with the merchants and planters and American visitors only as much as it was absolutely necessary to attend to routine work. He seemed to have no friends, and every one I met spoke slightingly of him.

That is not the kind of man to press American commerce; not the kind of man to increase our markets. At this port is a place for a good, active consul. The tea industries of Ceylon are increasing. Ceylon is intimately connected with the trade of British India. If there is a place in all that section that could be picked, outside of the port of Singapore, it is Ceylon, where a good, active business man could show results.

Singapore is the port where all the commerce of Australia and eastern Asia concentrates. It is the great trading mart and transshipment port of the Orient. I admit the commerce there is in the hands of the Chinese merchants. It would be hard for you to buy or sell a thousand dollars' worth of goods at that port without their going through the hands of the Chinese merchants.

At that port I found a sharp contrast between the active, efficient business man employed by the American Tobacco Company to manage and care for that company's interests in that part of the world and the American consul. The American consul perfunctorily does his business, and he receives $3,000 compensation for it.

If we had a representative like the American Tobacco Company there I am satisfied it would show results which increased business and such practical results as our manufacturing communities trading there have the right to expect. We may talk as we please about maintaining a great "open door" in the East. We may ask an "open door" in China; but, gentlemen, with "open doors" we must have the right kind of doorkeepers. That is what we must have there if we would develop the trade of our country and reap the great advantages of that immense volume of trade which it is claimed we can develop there.

Mr. CLARK. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. What scheme have you got that will give us better consuls? This committee has wrestled with that proposition a good long time.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You could not have done much worse than you have.

Mr. CLARK. Our evidence is that the American consular service is as good as anybody else's.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is a mistake.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. That is an absolute mistake. I will answer that by saying that if you will pay adequate salaries I think you will get better consuls.

Mr. CLARK. But the question I would like to ask you is as to whether a committee or an individual upon the floor of the House would know best about that. This Committee on Foreign Affairs has wrestled with the proposition a good deal and we have had these civil-service reformers up there; my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS] has his scheme; and I would ask the gentleman if he has something practical in the way of getting better consuls.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. I should have thought the Committee on Foreign Affairs, who have that matter in charge, and who would be acquainted with the details particularly must have studied the question, and I certainly thought they were able to devise some scheme. Pick your men who are business men in this country and who are accustomed to handle the goods that go through the market and give them a sufficient salary. Instead of giving them $1,500 give them $5,000 or $10,000, and you will bring into the positions a class of men that will be useful to you. What is the use of maintaining a consular service for the sake of calling it a consular service? If you want to get a good service, you must pay for it. That is the rule in this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I would like a few minutes more.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed five minutes.

Mr. HITT. I ask unanimous consent that the time for closing general debate be postponed five minutes, and I will yield it to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I would like five minutes to reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania if I consent that he shall have five minutes more. Is there any objection to that?

Mr. HITT. Three other gentlemen have asked the same thing.

Mr. HILL. Then I guess that will be reply enough, and I withdraw my request. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks that the time of the general debate be postponed five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HITT. I will yield that five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I can not say that I have examined or have sufficient information on this question of the consular service. I make this as a fair criticism from matters that have been brought to my personal attention, matters that I could not help examining, circumstances that were so thrust upon my attention that I could not help taking notice of them.

Knowing the demand of this country, knowing the opinion of men who have manufactured goods to export, knowing that they believe that we could expand to a large extent our foreign markets if they had such assistance as the Government ought to furnish them, I came here to tell you what I know, what I saw, and to plead with you to find some way in which the consular service could be reformed.

I believe that in reforming you will bring good men into the service and pay them an adequate salary. If a fund for them which they could use in an emergency could be established, and in addition to that you should inspect the consulates and keep men going around to give you the latest news from the consular ports, it would be a great benefit to the service. If you should cover this ground, you will do a great deal to reform the service and make it as practical as you can do it without absolutely reforming it.

I do not believe so much will be accomplished in a short time by civil-service rules, but I do believe that wherever there are assistants you should put them under the civil-service rules and give them a chance by promotion to take the important places as they become fitted for them. The inspectors will soon tell you who are fit men and who are not, especially if the inspector is a fair man and has the interest of the Government and the interest of the people who manufacture goods in this country at heart.

Mr. KLUTTZ. May I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question?

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Is the gentleman from Pennsylvania in favor of putting the consular service under the civil-service rules?

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. To some extent I am. I believe you can do it to a considerable extent if you make the examinations sensible and practical. I do not mean one that a school-teacher only could pass, but to examine a man and see whether he has got hustle and push, business knowledge and address that will make him efficient in a place of that kind.

Mr. HITT. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, there is nothing easier in this world than to complain and growl. I have listened on the floor of this House a great many years to an annual recurrence of the bitter criticism made upon the corps of consular representatives of the United States abroad. In 1891 I had occasion to hold either personal or written communication with each one of them, and since that time I have visited and seen a majority of them. I undertake to say, what I have said on this floor before, and which general statement will not be contradicted, that the consular service of the United States is far better, in all respects and in every respect, than is the consular service of any nation in the world. [Applause.]

I pointed out that in the European system every one of the propositions in what is called the reform movement in the consular service of the United States is involved. Long terms of service, training for the particular place, rigid and active examinations under various civil-service organizations, and all that, and yet I repeat now what our ambassador to France told me less than a year and a half ago, of his own motion, that it was conceded by every ambassador and minister at the court of Paris that our system and our representatives were by far the most efficient in all Europe. [Applause.] He told me further than that, that upon the recurrence of each one of our consular reports being printed and sent to the ambassador in Paris that the representatives of foreign governments always came to him and in a complimentary manner said: "Your system, your men, are so far superior to ours that we frankly come and say so to you and ask you for the information which they have furnished."

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. GROSVENOR. No; I can not yield. I could give names if it were proper. I will refer to one or two. They talk about the length of service. There is a consul-general at Berlin to-day who was appointed in the consular service in 1877—a man of fine education before he went abroad and who has acquired a splendid knowledge of the languages of those countries. He, with another consul-general, has charge of all the consulates in the great Empire of Germany. I say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I can take a list of the names of those consuls and read them to the House and point out that there is no better-educated class of men anywhere—no more efficient, valuable, sterling men. They are not hustlers. They would not do to handle a ready-made clothing store, I presume. There are many of them doubtless who would not be efficient in the character of the "auctioneer" in the famous play that is being performed throughout this country.

I do not think they would understand all about the question of high prices in one instance and low prices in another. But they are gentlemen who have studied the system of trade; and the reports which they send to this country from the different towns at which they are stationed should put the blush of shame upon men who are constantly deriding the institutions of our country. Take our consular reports from Glasgow, from Edinburgh, from Manchester, from Birmingham, from Huddersfield, from any of the points in the United Kingdom. Take the reports from the different consular stations in Germany or from St. Gall or elsewhere over the Continent of Europe, and tell me what is there lacking in those reports in the matter of education and intelligence and clearness of statement. I say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania—and I stand here to challenge contradiction of the statement—that our consuls are an educated, efficient, and highly valuable organization of men. You can not have a permanent——

Mr. DOUGLAS. If those men are so efficient as the gentleman says they are—and I do not agree with him on that point—should they not be paid better salaries? And I should like to ask, also, whether some of our consuls are not resigning constantly because upon the compensation allowed they can not support themselves?

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman is making a speech in my time.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but——

Mr. GROSVENOR. I decline to be interrupted in any such unfair manner.

Now, what I was about to say, Mr. Chairman, was this: We can not have long-continued service by these consuls upon the pay we are giving them. And let me say, very few of them are resigning. I have examined with some care and ascertained what happens at the consulates in Europe and in Asia. Some consuls are resigning, it is true, but I have never yet known one of those places to be vacant very many hours. There are always 25 or 30 applications for one vacancy. And if the gentleman has any friend who is an applicant for such a position he will have to be very alert in going to the State Department in behalf of the applicant, so as to know at once when a vacancy happens, for otherwise he will not have a chance to get his man in. We can not keep men in those positions for long terms, and I do not believe, as a rule, it is desirable that we should.

Mr. HILL. There is no nation that does keep its men long in such service.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly; that is the fact. The experience of mankind has been against long-continued terms of consuls.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HITT. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I had somewhat of an experience last summer in regard to our consuls. I did not hear all of the remarks of my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. GREEN], but I did hear the question put to him by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], who asked him in effect how he would improve the consular service. Allow me to say to the House that I think the personnel of this service at some places should be improved.

I think we should have better men at certain places. We should have men in this service who are consuls only, and not consuls incidentally and merchants or agents of American and other firms as a daily and regular business. It seems to me that our consuls should be consuls and capable of being so, and nothing else.

The service between New York and the Philippine Islands by way of the Suez Canal is not what it should be, because some of the officers are not fit for the place in any respect. There are some notable exceptions.

If we can not improve this service by getting better men at the salaries now paid, then I say we should increase the salaries, if money will enable us to get the men who should represent us at these places. We should not pay the "poor little pittances," as some of them said, now allowed, and then turn these officers loose upon the community to make up what should be paid them by the Government by selling goods on a commission or otherwise.

I remember distinctly that the most importunate appeals were made to me, and if I mistake not to other members of our Congressional party, and those appeals consisted in this: "For Heaven's sake raise our salaries; we can not live here scarcely on the salary we are paid and attend to our business as we should." Now, Mr. Chairman, I am an American. I dislike to criticise any man who is an American, and I am talking not so much about the law as the men who are executing the law as it is. I speak of what I happened to know, and I feel Congress should know. We have to be cruel to be kind sometimes.

Mr. LANDIS. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I should like to yield, but I think my time is up.

Mr. LANDIS. The gentleman speaks of the importunate appeals for increase of salary.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. LANDIS. I would like to ask if the gentleman knows of anyone in the Government service, excepting Senators and Representatives, who are not importunately demanding an increase of salary?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Do you object to increasing the salaries of the judges of our Supreme Court? I am not for increasing their salaries, I will tell you. There are other people in this country who are in a state of penury to-day who have no salary and no money, and in need of the every-day necessities of life, who are appealing to this Congress year after year, and have for forty years, asking that this Government pay them their just claims, and yet we turn them away with a deaf ear and a cold hand. I am opposed to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FEELY] for ten minutes.

Mr. FEELY. Mr. Chairman, in expressing my belief that the time is ripe for the improvement of the consular system, I desire not to cast any reflections on the service of the United States, as the distinguished gentleman from Ohio would have us believe anyone would do who would insist upon an improvement of the system. I desire to call attention to the fact that the business interests of the United States are daily petitioning members of this House for an examination into and a report upon the question of the improvement of the system. I can not in the few minutes allotted me discuss to any considerable extent, or formulate even the outlines of any definite plan, as is thought necessary to be done by the gentleman from Missouri before the first word can be said on this subject; but I insist that the time is now here when the members of this House and the Senate must take up this question of the improvement of the consular service. And they must answer the question of the gentleman from Missouri: Shall we place the consulate under civil service?

I do not know that the Democratic party, as a whole, is committed to the principle of civil service—and I know there are men in it who are even as insistently opposed to the principle of civil-service reform as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR]—but I for one say that if the standard of this service can be raised, if the personnel of the consular system can be improved by providing for a definite tenure of office longer than four years for the consuls and attachés, then we ought at least to favor civil-service rules in this respect. I am not afraid of a system because it may attract the opposition of some. We are now in an age when we must move forward or move backward. I do not believe that the war of 1898 marked the beginning of this country as a world power. The brain of the American, the brawn of the American, the best that is in the American character, inherited from all the nations of the earth and welded together to constitute a liberal man with unity of purpose and great patriotism, applying his powers to the development of this country and to the development of its trade, have done more to make this country respected as a world power than all the wars, than all the attempts at civilizing and assimilating foreign people than has ever been done since we went into this colonization and assimilation business.

Mr. CLARK. Will you permit me to ask you a question?

Mr. FEELY. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. Have you any practical suggestion to make as to how to get a better consulate service? If you have, let us have it, because the Foreign Affairs Committee, of which I am one of the members, has spent a great deal of time wrestling with this very proposition.

Mr. FEELY. And has confessedly failed.

Mr. CLARK. Why, yes; confessedly failed, as the House will confessedly fail——

Mr. FEELY. The gentleman is indulging in mere prediction when he says that the House will fail.

Mr. CLARK. The House, on an average, is of no higher intelligence than the Foreign Affairs Committee, I will undertake to say, without any fear of contradiction. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FEELY. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. Here is what I want my friends from Chicago and Tennessee and Pennsylvania and the rest of them to do. The Foreign Affairs Committee is just as anxious as anybody else to improve this consular service, but it will do no good and it is of no purpose to stand here and inveigh against it. That does not accomplish anything. If you have any practical suggestion to make, make it, and we will take it into consideration.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. By removing some of them and putting better men in their places.

Mr. FEELY. I would suggest to the gentleman from Missouri—and I am not at all concerned as to whether or not the House or the gentleman from Missouri or the Committee on Foreign Affairs itself thinks this a ludicrous suggestion—but I would submit that if we have a plan here to educate and develop good diplomats, as we have had a successful plan to educate and develop good soldiers for the land and on the sea, we would be making one step forward in your investigation as to what may be done to elevate the personnel and the whole system of our consular service. I do not see how a man taken from some backwoods county, with no training and no business experience, and appointed because he was useful in delivering a certain number of delegates in that county, can be as good a representative of our country in a busy foreign port as a man who has been educated along the lines of the service as we educate our soldiers and our naval officers.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. FEELY. Certainly.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Do you see how it is possible for a man from a backwoods county to make a good soldier?

Mr. FEELY. I certainly do, if he is trained for it; but I see how it has been impossible in the history of this country, in many instances, to take an untrained civilian and place him at the head of a body of soldiers and get anything like satisfactory results from his activity.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Is it not a fact that some of the best soldiers of whom our country can boast, and indeed that the strong military arm of this Government is found in the volunteers who have never had any training?

Mr. FEELY. Oh, I have as much respect for the volunteer as the gentleman from Michigan, but I submit that a volunteer never won a victory—a captain's victory, if you choose to call it that—on the day or in the year when he was first commissioned as an officer to guide soldiers in the wars of this country. I have as much respect for the volunteer as the gentleman from Michigan or any other man on the floor of this House, but I submit that if I were to volunteer to-morrow I should want, as the President of the United States wanted in 1898, to fall in line behind a trained officer of this Government. The unsuccessful competitor in the last Presidential race and the present President of the United States are examples of tribute paid to learning and to development, and military practice. The volunteer of to-day is not an untrained soldier ordinarily. He has seen years of service and practice and training in the National Guard of his State and he knows the rules and how to fight so well that he generally wants to fight under officers whose experience have been varied and training rigid.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FEELY. Yes.

Mr. KLUTTZ. How would the gentlemen select his volunteers for education by the Government?

Mr. FEELY. Oh, they might be selected along the lines that you select the volunteer from your district for appointment to West Point or Annapolis. Exactly the same way. The educated man who is ambitious soon learns business methods. I believe that the United States can not secure, for the paltry sum that it pays, the services of the kind of men whom it should have and whom it is entitled to in this service.

You all know that the great business interests of this country have their own representatives in many of these ports, because they can not rely on the men sent there by the United States under our present system. The Committee on Foreign Affairs ought to be able to do something about it, and I do not admit that that committee has confessed its inability to frame a system for the betterment of this service. If they are so confessedly unable, it might be well, in the face of all this clamor for a betterment of the service, to have public hearings and let suggestions be made by other members of the House and by the various importing and exporting interests, who are so deeply and directly interested in such matters. At any rate, the complaint is quite general, and we could then see upon what basis of reason this complaint rests. We should have the best. We should be willing to pay for it. We should not be unwilling to hear in every particular where we are weak. It is no easier to inveigh against this service than it is to bombastically declare that it is the best service in the world. Such talk will serve no purpose. We want not to declare the belief, but to know the fact.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. FEELY. I do.

Mr. DINSMORE. I should like to ask the gentleman for some suggestion of some line upon which the consular service is to be improved. I should like to have the gentleman specify in what way we may improve this service. We all admit that it ought to be improved, as other branches of the Government ought to be improved, but I should like to know what suggestion the gentleman has to make in that direction.

Mr. FEELY. In the first place, I should improve the service by improving the personnel. Competent men should fill the places. The positions should not be used to pay doubtful political obligations.

Mr. DINSMORE. How would you go about that?

A MEMBER. Elect a Democratic President! [Laughter.]

Mr. FEELY. I do not know that I would do it wholly by electing a Democratic President. I do not assume that in general the appointments made under a Democratic President have been any better than those under a Republican President; but I would raise the salaries; I would assure to the man who goes into that service a livelihood for a certain term of years, at any rate, and if he tired of the position, as suggested by the gentleman from Ohio, I would transfer him to some other post where his usefulness might be demonstrated to the country at large. Men accept these positions with the paltry salary attached for one of three reasons. Either they have despaired of making as much in ordinary business activity, or they desire to be educated at the public expense, with a view of proffering their services to trading concerns at the end of their service, or they are of the globe-trotting class, referred to by certain members, whose only desire is to travel and idly disport themselves, clad in the vestments of the authority of this great Government. They, in the most part, are of these three classes. This should not be. Our Government is too great for this. The standard should be high, the positions should be of such a standard that honor will attract, and the compensation should be such that those who accept them can live in respectability and in dignity compatible with the requirements of the country.

Let us endeavor to build up a system which will attract more than derelict politicians, pulpitless ministers, and lady-like gentlemen.

The whole system of the appointment of our consular officials is defective. The manner of appointment has been a byword, not only throughout the country, where criticism is general, but here in the capital, where it is regarded as part of the pleasantries which brighten official life.

It is vouched for by members of this House that on the incoming of a certain Administration the Executive sent to the Senate for confirmation the name of a gentleman from a certain State. Both of the Senators from that State approached each other, and out of their mouths came the same query, "Who in the Lord Harry is Smith?" and they immediately went to the White House and demanded to know why the President appointed such an individual to such an important post. The President, with the imperturbability which was one of his characteristics, reached into a pigeonhole and got the application of the gentleman who had been appointed and, lo and behold, beneath the gentleman's application there was the indorsement and signature of both the indignant Senators. The appointment was made, and it was the duty and pleasure of the two Senators to move the confirmation of the gentleman whom they did not know and of whom they had never heard. This is only one instance, and that there are many such no one will gainsay.

At the beginning of each Administration a great many of the faithful come to this Mecca to receive their reward, following the wise injunction to aim for heaven that they may at least reach purgatory, and that they may receive the reward for which their conception of their ability warrant them in aspiring. The good places are rapidly filled, and they are told daily that they will receive "something equally as good." Then they become as ubiquitous as they are anxious. They meet their Representative everywhere he goes. They bid him "good morning" when he awakes and "good night" when he retires, and finally in sheer desperation they get him in the mood of the young lady who married her unwelcome suitor in order to get rid of him. He indorses their applications and they transfer their importunities at once to the executive department. The consulship is filled, and the happy man, armed with his credentials, starts for the point where he is to shed luster and renown on our Government and forward its interests for a salary munificent and tempting.

We recognize that every wideawake official appreciates the necessity for prompt action looking in the direction of elevating the service, and we recognize also the difficulty of those who seek practical means to bring about a wholesome change. Those who suggest the establishment of diplomatic schools to fit men for the consular service meet the objection of those that the applicants shall have practical experience before they shall be trusted with such responsibilities.

Those who suggest civil-service examination meet the objection of the chronic, who is opposed to anything connected with the despised words "civil service;" but nevertheless the merit system gains friends and supporters of the cause every day and keeps on demonstrating that ability and education should be recognized and that the examination should be broad enough to cover all characteristics of particular merit for the service. Acquaintance with the language of the post to which the official is assigned ought to be a prerequisite. Definite tenure of office gains friends, and there are few who believe that consuls should be retired every four years. A reorganization looking toward rearrangement and general increase of the salary paid is one part of the plan which everyone must favor, which seems quite practicable, and which few will deny. The fee system is no more suitable here than it is in offices of a similar character in our large cities. Make a man depend on the amount which he receives for transacting the public business, and you make him a servant of himself and not of the people. Public fees should be turned into the public Treasury, and the officer should depend on a prescribed compensation, definite and certain.

Some say that they do not desire that our consul should be made a drummer for the business interests. One of the very complaints made now is that many of our consuls are drummers, not for the business of the United States, but for certain concerns in the United States and foreign countries, and are made so by certain temptations held out to them, caused by the inadequacy of the compensation and the improper appreciation of the ethical duty toward our Government which employs them.

The problem, of course, requires study, and its solution rests in a general compromise, after a careful and rigid investigation of all the defects in the service, between the radical who sees little good in the service at present and the conservatives who are perfectly satisfied with the present status.

The searchlight of publicity should be turned on the service, its personnel improved, its character made more honorable, and its compensation greater.

The great value which an efficient consular service will be to our country in the advancement of trade, in the dissemination of knowledge of this country, its aims, its objects, its possibilities, its products, and its desires, must be admitted by all. Let us give less time to the consideration of abstract theories in our foreign relations, and let us expend more energy in seeking to advance our interests and utilize trade as a civilizing influence in working out our share of the world's destiny.

This is a subject which Congress should be eager to take up and which should receive its best thought and judgment on the question of the improvement of the service. And it should keep religiously at it until the time shall come when the world can appreciate our seriousness when we stand here and declare that our consular service is the best in the world, and it shall show the wisdom and economy in the vast annual expenditure of the people's money for the maintenance of this system, which ought to be useful as well as ornamental. [Applause.]

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] twenty-five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. There are only eighteen minutes remaining.

Mr. DINSMORE. I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended so that the gentleman from Nevada may have twenty-five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time for general debate be extended so that the gentleman from Nevada may have twenty-five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. NEWLANDS addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. HITT. The time for general debate is now exhausted: but the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE], I think, wished to ask unanimous consent for a member to whom time had been promised.

Mr. CLARK. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. EDWARDS].

Mr. HITT. As I desire that faith shall be kept with everyone, I ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate be extended for five minutes. As I understand, after we enter upon the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule a point of order will lie upon the ground of irrelevancy to any remarks not germane to the bill, but it does not lie now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. EDWARDS] will be recognized for five minutes, if there be no objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, I read from page 1934 of the RECORD:

Mr. TAWNEY. What did the Democratic governor of Montana do with respect to the railroad merger that the gentleman alludes to?

Mr. BURLESON. If he is not in line with the governor of Minnesota in his protest against the railroad merger, then I, as a Democrat, repudiate him.

Mr. TAWNEY. He is not, and he repudiates you. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Now, I want to read to the gentlemen and the House some of the utterances of Governor Toole on that question. In a letter to Governor Van Sant, written November 26, 1901, Governor Toole said:

If you have rightly interpreted the purpose of this organization, as it relates to the State of Minnesota, there would seem to be no doubt but that such a consolidation is a violation of the spirit if not the letter of our constitution.

I am not sufficiently advised at this time to indicate what remedies are available to defeat this consolidation and its purpose to control the rates of transportation in this State, but whatever lawful methods are available will be employed, and to this extent our cooperation may be relied upon.

"I have not devoted any time to the consideration of the discussion going on in the press, as to whether the unobstructed and successful launching of this gigantic combination would prove dangerous and detrimental to the commercial welfare of the Northwest, or whether it would eventuate, as claimed by some, in giving stability and steadiness to transportation charges, and hence redound to the public good, but have considered that question settled by what seems to me to be the plain plenary and positive provisions of the constitution and laws of Montana, designed to prohibit the very things which confessedly the Northern Securities could not do directly, but which it is avowedly attempting to do indirectly.

"It may be, as claimed by counsel representing the Northern Securities Company, that the scheme embodied in this organization is a successful evasion of our constitution and laws, but until the court of last resort has sanctioned such combination and its purpose no such contingency ought to be accepted for a moment."

And assuring Governor Van Sant that Attorney-General Donovan is opposed to this invasion of the constitution and statutes of Montana, and will give such assistance as he can in any procedure finally determined upon.

An interview given out on December 26, in regard to the rumor that the merger roads were going to reduce freight rates so as to show that the merger means lower instead of higher rates, Governor Toole said of the promise of lower rates:

"This would be a good thing—certainly as long as it lasted. The great trouble found in reconciling one's self to such seductive overtures lies in the constitution and laws prohibiting the consolidation of parallel or competing lines, and the formation of what is 'known as a trust,' more than in any incredulity which such an offer at such a time might create.

"The power to reduce rates carries with it the power to increase rates, and the exercise of this power by a combination of individuals or corporations, whether for good or bad, appears to be the thing prohibited. Right or wrong, wise or foolish, this prohibition is firmly ingrafted into the public policy of this State. The generally accepted reasons for this, if such are required, may be found in a decision of the supreme court of Texas, where the following language is used:

"'To fix by combination a rate lower than the one that has prevailed carries with it the power and ability to establish higher ones, and the object of the statute is to free business and commerce from being controlled by combinations, whether of persons or corporations. It does not matter that the immediate result of combination may be a reduction in the price of commodities. A dangerous arbitrary power has been lodged in its hands, by which the business of the country may be absolutely dominated and prices arbitrarily controlled, regardless of the laws of trade or the rules of supply and demand. If the combination be one "to create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce or aids to commerce," no matter what may be the result of the combination, the law has been violated.

"'The law does not look to the results. The object of the statute is to guard the commerce and trade of the State, so that it may flow in its regular channels, subject to the law of supply and demand, and untrammeled by combination of man or corporation which can at will control their course. The State is unwilling to trust to any combination, even though of her creatures, the tyrannical and oppressive power that is inseparably connected with the power to raise and lower prices of commodities and control the trade of the country.

* * * * * * *

"'It does not matter that the parties to the unlawful combination may not have been actuated by any bad motive, or that the public may have been temporarily benefited by it, such combination was incompatible with public policy and is condemned by law.

"'The inquiry is not as to the degree of injury inflicted upon the public. It is sufficient to know that the inevitable tendency of the act is injurious to the public.'"

Resolutions adopted by the antimerger conference in Helena on December 31:

"In our opinion, the consolidation or threatened consolidation of the Great Northern, Northern Pacific, and Burlington railway systems, in the several States through which they run, as parallel and competing lines, is contrary to sound public policy and also, with the exception of Idaho, is in violation of the constitution or laws of said States. And mindful of the obligation which the law imposes in such cases upon the officials of the several States here represented, we hereby give our unqualified approval and indorsement to any proper and suitable proceedings which may be instituted in any court having jurisdiction by the sovereign State of Minnesota, or any other State affected thereby, designed or intended to speedily and finally test and determine the validity of such consolidation or threatened consolidation; and to that end we hereby pledge our earnest cooperation, and, further, we unanimously protest against any combination or consolidation which restricts or stifles free competition in the trade or commerce of the country."

Governor Toole was chairman of the committee that drafted that resolution. After its adoption by the conference Governor Toole signed it, as did the other conferees present. And here is another resolution passed by the conference:

"Whereas a consolidation of the great transcontinental railway lines has been accomplished or threatened, which in the opinion of the members of this conference is inimical to the public welfare: Therefore, be it

"Resolved, First. That the Congress of the United States be, and is hereby, requested to investigate the general subject and take suitable action thereon.

"Second. That power should be granted to the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix maximum rates upon interstate traffic and to regulate the same.

"Third. That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the Senators and Representatives in Congress of the States here represented."

The Indiana courts seem to entertain the same view. "The authorities affirm," says the court, "as a general rule, that if the act complained of by its results will restrict or stifle competition the law will regard such act as incompatible with public policy, without proof of evil intent on the part of the actor or actual injury to the public. The inquiry is not as to the degree of injury inflicted upon the public. It is sufficient to know that the inevitable tendency of the act is injurious to the public."

And so I may add that the promise to reduce rates may be made in the utmost good faith, with every intention of fulfillment, upon the part of the president of the Northern Securities Company, but such a promise, however tempting, can not overcome or neutralize the effect of the constitution and laws which the executive is called upon to enforce."

The anti-merger conference was held in Governor Toole's office; he was chairman of the committee on resolutions, and since the conferences on public occasions he has said:

The results of the conference were eminently satisfactory to me. The resolutions adopted express my views.

And I want to say to you that when we adopted those resolutions we meant what we said. There is no string tied to them.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CLARK. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Montana have leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The Committee of the Whole then proceeded to consider the bill by paragraphs under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

SALARIES OF AMBASSADORS AND MINISTERS.

Ambassadors extraordinary and plenipotentiary to France, Germany, Great Britain, Mexico, and Russia, at $17,500 each, $87,500.

Mr. OLMSTED. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs why the ambassador to Mexico is allowed a salary of $17,500 and three secretaries, while the ambassador to Italy is allowed only $12,000 and two secretaries?

Mr. HITT. In order to conform to the rule, I will move to amend by striking out the last word, and will answer the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The mission to Mexico was formerly at a lower rate of salary, and, of course, a lower grade. It is a far more important mission than the one to Italy. It has many times the amount of business. And it was, therefore, raised in pay and in grade until it was finally made an embassy. The relations between this country and Mexico are now so extensive that it was long ago deemed necessary, for reasons which were duly considered by the House and Senate, that the increasing dignity and importance of this mission should be recognized. We have $250,000,000 of American money there in railroads and other investments, and thousands of our citizens are deeply interested there.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GREEN] raised a very grave question, one that is worthy of exhaustive debate, one which challenges the sum total of the wisdom of this House. It is the improvement of the consular service of the United States. It is extremely easy to inveigh against any system. It is a great deal more difficult to suggest an improvement. It is easy to make a diagnosis of the disease, but it seems almost impossible to prescribe an adequate remedy. I wish to say, in the first place, that the Committee on Foreign Affairs has spent a great deal of time studying this question, talking about it, and hearing delegations from boards of trade all over this country, that have come into our room for the purpose of enlightening us. We have done our best to devise a better plan. I repeat what I said in an interlocutory way a little while ago, that, leaving myself out of consideration, I believe the Foreign Affairs Committee shows as high an average of intelligence as the House itself contains, and to prove that that is true there is nothing else necessary to be done than to read the list of the members of that committee.

It is composed of the following Representatives: ROBERT R. HITT, of Illinois; ROBERT ADAMS, jr., of Pennsylvania, both of whom have had large diplomatic experience; ROBERT G. COUSINS, of Iowa; WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH, of Michigan; JOEL P. HEATWOLE, of Minnesota: FREDERICK H. GILLETT, of Massachusetts; CHARLES B. LANDIS, of Indiana; JAMES B. PERKINS, of New York; JACOB A. BEIDLER, of Ohio; DAVID J. FOSTER, of Vermont; THEOBOLD OTJEN, of Wisconsin; HUGH A. DINSMORE, of Arkansas, who has had a good deal of diplomatic experience himself; WILLIAM M. HOWARD, of Georgia; ALBERT S. BURLESON, of Texas; CHARLES E. HOOKER, of Mississippi; HENRY F. NAPHEN, of Massachusetts, and myself. The members of that committee are just as anxious to improve the consular service of the United States as any other member of this House can possibly be. The evidence in the case shows, when these visiting gentlemen come before the Foreign Affairs Committee and are cross-examined, which is the surest way of eliciting the truth, that our consular service ranks among the very best consular systems in the world.

Another fact is demonstrated on cross-examination, and that is that the consular service of the United States is constantly improving. The trouble about it is that there are certain doctrinaires in this country who are determined that the consular service of the United States shall be put under a hard-and-fast civil-service system of examination, and who denounce as "spoilsmen" all who do not accept their ideas and plans without question and without amendment. I want to say, speaking for myself and the entire Democratic party, that we are not opposed to a merit system. I repeat that with emphasis, so that no idiot can go away from here and misconstrue it [laughter], that the Democratic party is not opposed to a merit system based on common sense. We are not opposed to a merit system, but we are opposed to life tenure in office. It is both undemocratic and un-American. I have an old-fashioned idea that when the Republicans carry the election in this country they have a right to the offices and when the Democrats carry it they have a right to them; and certainly Democrats do not carry it often enough to form the chronic habit of office holding. [Laughter.]

I undertake to say, without the fear of successful contradiction, that it is a libel on American intelligence and on the public-school system of this country, which we so proudly vaunt and which costs so much, to say that out of the 6,000,000 men who voted for William J. Bryan in 1900 you can not find 200,000 fit to hold these appointive offices under the President of the United States; and it is a greater libel, simply because there were more of them and not because they were more intelligent, to say that out of the 7,000,000 Republicans who voted for William McKinley you can not find 200,000 fit to hold these offices. If a system could be devised of this sort there would be some sense in it; that is, when the Democrats are in power, have it understood that they are to appoint Democrats.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLARK. I would like to have ten minutes more.

Mr. HITT. I move to strike out the last two words. With that I will consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes more.

Mr. CLARK. That gives me ten minutes—five minutes for each word. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that his time be extended ten minutes further.

Mr. HITT. If we get to unanimous consent, we will never get through. I will try and arrange it to give the gentleman his time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended. Is there objection?

Mr. HITT. I object. I object to unanimous consent for ten minutes, but the gentleman has the floor to speak on the amendment for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CLARK. I say this, that when the Democrats are in power, if you would have a rule that the appointees should be Democrats, and then that they should be thoroughly examined, that would be all right, and the same way when the Republicans are in power; but here is the objection in this consular business to the civil-service-reform examination as now conducted.

They do not ascertain a man's fitness to be a consul, because the examinations are not about things which a consul ought to know in order to render the best service.

I stated on the floor of this House once, and I repeat it now, that in my judgment, notwithstanding there are over two hundred college graduates in this House and a proportional number in the Senate, there are not 30 men in both Houses who could stand an examination for a $900 clerkship over here in one of the departments. [Laughter.] Why is that true? I will tell you. It is true because the men who are fit to sit in the Congress of the United States have forgotten the things that they are examined on in these examinations over there. That is the truth about it.

Men are fit to serve in House and Senate, not because they have forgotten certain things but because they have learned more important things. The latter things crowd the former out of their minds. To undertake to examine men for consular positions in one of the civil-service examinations, as now conducted, will end in this, that you will get a lot of men just out of school who know nothing about business, while business knowledge is the most necessary qualification for consul, as it is a purely business office. Napoleon picked his marshals by the shape of their noses. [Laughter.] I undertake to say that there is not a man on this floor who can not go into his own district and pick the men who are fit to be consuls anywhere by their business capacity, because he knows them and understands what they are good for. Natural pride would compel him to select the most competent.

Now, somebody says that you get a lot of backwoods politicians who have delivered delegates to somebody. We never have any delegates in the district which I have the honor to represent, for we have primaries. "Backwoods" districts are not the only places where there are a job lot of politicians hanging around. [Laughter.] I have heard that politicians abound in great cities and deliver delegates sometimes. Another thing, the men who run this House, as a rule, are backwoods men. They come from the country or from little towns. There never has been but one man nominated for President of the United States from a great city. That was Grover Cleveland in his second term, the greatest calamity that has happened to the human race since the fall of Adam. [Laughter.]

Mr. FEELY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a short question?

Mr. CLARK. Yes, with pleasure.

Mr. FEELY. Does the gentleman believe the members of this House can go into their districts and find men fit to hold these positions who will accept them for the salary now paid?

Mr. CLARK. The question of salaries is a different question. I will come to that after a while. I say that I can find men in my Congressional district, and every man on this floor can find men who are fit to fill these consular places anywhere. This talk about backwoods statesmen and backwoods districts makes me very weary. [Laughter.]

We have fallen of late years into the habit of selecting West Point candidates by competitive examinations. That gives all the boys a fair chance; but if that rule had been in force years ago neither Stonewall Jackson nor Ulysses S. Grant would ever have seen the inside of the West Point Academy.

I wish to say to my friends from Pennsylvania and Tennessee and Chicago that we are not combating their proposition that this service ought to be improved, but what we do combat is the performance of these gentlemen coming in here and making a broadside criticism of the Committee on Foreign Affairs when the Committee on Foreign Affairs is doing the very best it can. Time and time again in that committee, when these self-appointed delegations have appeared from these boards of trade, we have tried to get them to suggest something that is feasible, and you never get a single practical suggestion out of the whole gang; never.

Now as to the question of salary. There is a great deal of rot got off around this Capitol, first and last, to the effect that men are not getting big enough salaries. I undertake to say this, Mr. Chairman, that if every Federal officeholder from Theodore Roosevelt down to the cuspidor cleaners in this House, including every member of the House and the Senate, were to die to-night, their places could be filled within a month by men just as capable as the men who hold the offices now, and they will take them at the same salaries, too. [Laughter.] The ins and not the outs clamor for higher salaries. I want to reiterate on this floor a statement that Senator BAILEY made the other day in the Senate. I take a great deal of pride in the fact that a prophecy which I have made about him time and time again was partially verified yesterday—that in less than two years from the time he set foot in the Senate he would demonstrate that he was the strongest debater in that body. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read.

Mr. HITT. If the Chair will have the Clerk read the next few lines, I will make the formal motion and yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary to Italy, $12,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from Missouri that it is not in order to refer in debate to the remarks of a member of the other body.

Mr. HITT. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. CLARK. If the gentleman will yield to me, I will take the time.

I want to repeat what Senator BAILEY said about salaries in discussing the question of the salaries of judges. He said he hoped the time would never come in this country when the salaries of the officers would be made so large that the salary itself would be the main temptation or inducement to a man to hold an office. [Applause.] That is right, too. There is not one of us that does not feel that the honor attaching to our position is of greater value than the salary. I will say now that we do not get as much as the judges of the United States, and yet there are plenty of men in this House who are thoroughly fit to be judges of the Supreme Court of the United States who are just as good lawyers as any of the men on that bench.

Nobody ever heard of any office, great or small, going begging. There are always many more applicants than positions. Lincoln's story of the excess of pigs and the paucity of teats is as applicable to-day as when he told it first. No office is ever vacant for an hour because the pay is too small; but as soon as the average citizen is safely installed in office—especially if he holds by life tenure—he begins yelling and lobbying to have his wages increased. If he does not like his pay, he has his remedy. He can resign. There are others who stand ready to take his place. We all know that people want to get the Federal appointive offices, even at the present salaries; otherwise they would not apply for them.

Now, let us see what is the duty of a consul. My friend from Chicago and my friend from Pennsylvania—I did not happen to hear what the gentleman from Tennessee said, as I was out—seem to think that the sole duty of a consul is to act as a drummer for somebody in Europe, Asia, Africa, or wherever he happens to be. I deny that it is the function of the consul. If the American Tobacco Company (of which the gentleman spoke) wants to sell its tobacco in Europe, Asia, or Africa, let the American Tobacco Company do exactly in those countries what it does in the United States—send its drummers out and solicit trade at its own expense.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Our consuls get a commission to do that.

Mr. CLARK. That is aside from their business.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They are drummers.

Mr. CLARK. I will tell you what a respectable consul ought to be. Above all he should be a man of incorruptible integrity, an American to his heart's core, proud of his country. In addition thereto he ought to be a man of good common sense, of fair intelligence in business matters generally, and of indefatigable industry. His duty is to take care of American interests in general, and to inform our Government as to trade conditions in the country where he is domiciled. He should not be the agent for any particular sort of our products or for any particular house. To be a drummer is as honorable as to be a consul; but the two functions should not be combined in one person because they are incompatible. A man can not serve two masters.

It will be a sad day for the American Republic when our consular service is converted into a service of drummers pure and simple; because, when that is done, you will witness the sordid spectacle in this capital of great commercial, manufacturing, and exporting houses scrambling and fighting among themselves, each struggling to have its own man appointed consul, to act as a drummer for its special interest at the public expense. It surely can not be that any sane man desires such a state of affairs as that.

Instead of making jimcrack speeches in criticism of the consular service of this country, let every man in this House put on his thinking cap and make to the Committee on Foreign Affairs a practical suggestion—and without being authorized to do it, I assume the responsibility of speaking for the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT], the chairman, and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE], the ranking Democrat on that committee, and for all the members of the committee and saying that every such suggestion will receive all the courtesy, consideration, and wisdom that we can command. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HITT. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to Austria, Brazil, China, Japan, and Spain, at $12,000 each, $60,000.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in view of what has been said upon this side of the House by gentlemen upon this subject, and to supplement what has been said so very forcibly by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], I want to submit two or three observations. The Committee on Foreign Affairs has not been indifferent to the importance of this question. They have given it thought and sober consideration, and the suggestions made by these gentlemen are quite welcome to us. They are only in keeping with many suggestions that have been made in advice given by gentlemen who have come before the committee and insisted upon a reform in the consular service.

It is the desire of the Committee on Foreign Affairs to get the very best consular service possible; but when we are enjoined to make a reform, the committee would be glad to be advised as to how the reform shall be made. When gentlemen say the consular service should be better, and we ask them to designate in what respect and how it may be made so, we are told to increase the salaries. I want for one to interpose a respectful protest to that.

I do not believe that an increase in salaries will bring a greater efficiency in the service. At the same time I must admit I believe it is possible and even probable that the consuls in some particulars are not sufficiently paid. I do not wish the House to believe that I would have them underpaid. As a Representative interested in the public service of the country, in behalf of my own constituents, I say that they ought to be sufficiently paid.

But, Mr. Chairman, I have not much patience with this constant insistence that we hear from all quarters about increasing salaries. I believe that the officials of the Federal Government are, as a rule, sufficiently paid, and that when we increase salaries or compensation we do not, as a rule, increase the efficiency of the service. Increase of compensation often adds to the splendor and style of living, and I fear detracts from efficiency of service.

How shall we proceed to improve the service? I agree with my colleague, I agree with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] who addressed the House this afternoon, that the United States has to-day a consular service equal, if not superior, to any other country in the world. [Applause.]

It is true that we do not put men into the consular service in their young days and keep them there continually, elevating them from one position to another, secure against removal; but I beg to suggest to this House that that system would not improve the efficiency of the men. I know that in many instances our consuls are not fair representatives and do not come up to the standard of requirement; but I am disposed to believe that these are the exceptions.

Having been a little more than three years in the foreign service myself, I have had an opportunity to observe something of the relative merits and standing of American consuls abroad with those of other countries, and I take a great deal of pride in saying, before the House and the country, that, with rare exceptions, I have never known anything to make me feel that the Government had cause to feel ashamed of its consular reputation. [Applause.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Arkansas allow me a question?

Mr. DINSMORE. With pleasure.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman, from his experience and knowledge of consular matters, whether the placing of the consular agents and consuls under the civil service by President Cleveland improved the service; what does the gentleman think upon that subject?

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe it did improve the service. I know that it was the desire of the Department of State to do so, and I attribute to this House and to these gentlemen who have made suggestions an interest in public affairs which prompted them, and a desire to bring about an improvement. But we have so often had occasion to observe the effect of these things when they come to practical application, and have so often found that they failed to bring about that which was desired, that I am not convinced that the application of the civil-service rules to the consular service will give us a more efficient system.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. HITT. I move to strike out the last two words, and I will yield the time to the gentleman from Arkansas.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that under the rules the gentleman had no right to yield time.

Mr. HITT. I made the motion and the gentleman was speaking in opposition to my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Clerk report the next paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to the Argentine Republic, Belgium, Chile, Colombia, Netherlands, Peru, Turkey, and Venezuela, at $10,000 each, $80,000.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I know that the proposition would commend itself to the ordinary mind and intelligence to have consuls, or men to represent the Government, or in any other branch of the service selected under a system of examination with a view to ascertaining their fitness for the duties which they are to perform, and that it would bring about more efficiency. But, unfortunately, it has been our experience that these examinations are not conducted upon lines which are calculated to disclose whether they are qualified for the performance of the duties which they are to perform.

Let me give an instance. It is not entirely in line, but it is upon the subject of civil service. I have a friend in my district who, under Mr. Cleveland's first administration, filed an application with the Government to be appointed a postal inspector. He had been engaged in the postal service of the United States about eight years. His father was postmaster of the town in which I live. He was a young gentleman of intelligence, education, and fine business capacity. He had been in that office, and I have reason to know myself was thoroughly familiar with all the postal regulations of the Government. He had informed himself about everything appertaining to the duties of the service. He thought he was qualified to make a good postal inspector, and he came on to Washington and stood an examination.

In that examination he was asked questions, scientific questions, on subjects that no postal examiner would ever be called upon to know in the performance of his duties. He was asked catch questions in geography, mathematics, and physical science that only a boy fresh from school would be expected to be informed upon, and he failed.

Another young man was appointed postal inspector who knew absolutely nothing about the postal service, but because he knew more about the matters that he was examined upon and with which he was familiar from his recent school experience.

Now, let me give another experience that came to me from my own observation in the consular service. Gentlemen go abroad to represent us, and may come from what my friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] calls the backwoods district and, perhaps, have not the manners which commend themselves to the dilletante gentry who travel over the country globe trotting to see the world. Their manners may not be good, but nevertheless they may have something back of these manners which may make them eminently fit to perform the duties of their position.

Mr. FEELY. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. DINSMORE. Certainly.

Mr. FEELY. I want to ask the gentleman if a large per cent of the men now holding consular positions are not of the same dilettante globe-trotting class of which the gentleman speaks.

Mr. DINSMORE. It may be so since the civil-service rules were applied and adopted by a former Administration.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And continued by the present Administration.

Mr. DINSMORE. And, as my friend from Tennessee says, continued by the present Administration.

But I want to get at the manner in which men are selected for these positions under the system which at present obtains, and which was referred to by my friend from Missouri who has just taken his seat. A Congressman who recommends a citizen of his district for appointment as consul is not fit to represent his people in Congress if the man whom he selects is not chosen with reference to his fitness for the position. A Congressman having a proper regard for his duty and his responsibilities to his Government and his own people will not recommend a man for a position in the foreign service unless he believes he can perform the duties of the office respectably and acceptably.

I say, further, when you talk about politicians from the crossroads who can furnish delegates for a convention, that when a man has manifested his ability to control men even in a convention he has manifested an ability which will serve him well in any other position which he may be called upon to fill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Do you think a man ought to be made a consul for such a reason?

Mr. DINSMORE. Perhaps not. I merely make that remark in answer to an argument that has been made here. But I shall come to the point to which the gentleman from Tennessee now directs my attention.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FEELY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Arkansas be allowed to proceed.

Mr. HITT. I object. Let the reading of the bill be resumed, and then the gentleman from Arkansas can offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Nicaragua, Costa Rica, and Salvador, $10,000.

Mr. DINSMORE. I move to amend by striking out the last word.

When interrupted I was directing my remarks to the objections raised to the consular representatives of the United States abroad. Some years ago a gentleman of West Virginia was selected to be consul at Nagasaki, Japan. He was a parvenu, so to speak, in consular matters. He had never been abroad—perhaps he had never been out of the confines of the State of West Virginia, unless it may have been to come to this capital or to go to New York. On arriving at Nagasaki he found it inconvenient to secure proper quarters for his consulate.

He could not get a house in which to establish his office. But he found an American merchant doing business in Nagasaki, who said to him: "You can have these rooms above my store." So Mr. Birch, the gentleman of whom I am speaking, took the rooms above that store and hoisted his flag. He was immediately tabooed by the whole consular fraternity there and by the community. Why? Because the English idea of affairs obtained out there, and shopkeepers were not considered entirely respectable people. Mr. Birch had set up his consulate in a shopkeeper's establishment.

On making application at that time to become a member of the Nagasaki Club, Mr. Birch was blackballed; he was not admitted to the club. But I take pleasure in saying that before John M. Birch had been in that port two years he was recognized as the best consul there, and was president of the same club which had before blackballed him for putting his flag over a shop.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. As a matter of fact, the consul at Nagasaki now has handsome headquarters up on the side of the hill.

Mr. DINSMORE. I am very glad to hear it, though I do not know that it is very material to the present question.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The consulate has been moved away from the store.

Mr. DINSMORE. Yes, it was moved away from the store very soon. But that same American spirit in the heart and mind of John M. Birch which prompted him to put up his flag wherever he might find a place for it to wave is the same spirit that makes the flexible American character, which makes Americans better fitted to be consuls or anything else than any other men occupying such positions abroad.

And so it is in other ports. At Shanghai, Mr. Kennedy, now dead; at Kobe, Mr. Thomas R. Jernigan; at Yokohama, Mr. Greathouse; at Hongkong, Mr. Withers, of Virginia. Notwithstanding they had had no previous training and were selected without competitive examination, all stood at the very top of the consular representation in the countries where they were respectively stationed; and when at the end of the Administration these gentlemen, as it was thought, would be recalled, petitions were sent up to our Government, signed by all nationalities in those ports, asking for their retention in the service.

Our consuls abroad are usually officers of efficiency and ability. They have not been selected under civil-service regulations; they have not been selected under the ideas which gentlemen here think ought to obtain; but they were selected by Congressmen and Senators, because it was thought they would be capable and reputable representatives of the United States in consular positions.

A MEMBER. And because they were men.

Mr. DINSMORE. And because they were men, capable men.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to state further in my observance of these things, I have been led to believe that there is something in the genius of American institutions that better fits a man for responsibility than the ordinary groove into which men fall under civil-service rules and regulations. You take the British service. They have some very estimable men, some very able men, but they start in for a career in the consular service. They begin as student interpreters in the Orient, and they are promoted from time to time and they spend their lives there. All they have to do is to render acceptable service and they know they will be retained.

They fall into a groove; they do not aspire to get outside; they are slow to take responsibilities; they shirk them; they submit questions to their superiors for settlement, but I was always proud to observe that the American, taught from his youth to fit himself for any occupation into which he might be thrown, for any duties which might devolve upon him, in his consular responsibilities was always prepared to act, and usually he acted so well that he received the approval of his Government at home. I believe they are more capable. I believe the very fact that they were not there holding a secure position in which they might decay had a tendency to make them more efficient in their service and that they brought about better results for our country. Occasionally they fail; occasionally we get a man who is incompetent to perform the duties of his office; occasionally there comes a man of whom we are ashamed, a recent illustration of which we had before the Committee on Foreign Affairs, when a gentleman testified as to certain things that the consul had written; but taking them by and large as a whole, I believe that in the consular service and in every other service America has had as good representation as any other nation. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Guatemala and Honduras, $10,000.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last words. I regret that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] is about to leave the Hall, because the gentleman in his speech, that we all enjoyed as usual, alluded to what he supposed I said, as he was not present when I addressed the committee a few moments ago.

In making his splendid speech he said exactly what I had said—that is, that some of our consuls—and I met some on this trip—are drummers for American firms; and why? Because they can not maintain themselves with the salary that we pay, so they said. We went to the headquarters of one I have in mind, in a dark, deserted, cold—no, it was not cold, it was hot—hot place, that not a member of this House would live in, and there we found articles of cotton goods from Atlanta, and goods from St. Louis, and goods from Chicago, and goods from New York, all in a sample case, and his little cups and various little boxes and various drumming paraphernalia that he put under his arm and peddled around throughout the town.

And why? To make a living—not that he cared so much for the American commerce, I dare say, but to make a living. Now, I am glad that my distinguished friend from Missouri condemns that practice. I say that the consul to whom I refer showed that he was industrious, that he wanted to make an honest living, and was doubtless doing so.

Now, is that the proper way to have a consular service? If it is, gentlemen, you are having it that way in some places. I agree with my friend, the great champion of American rights and American manhood, the gentleman from Missouri, that it is the men who come from the backwoods that have always ruled and always will rule and always should rule this country; but not all of them, Mr. Chairman, are men who should and can fill any position, because they are not all competent.

Now, my friend from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE] admits something I believe that my friend from Missouri did not admit, to wit, that there are defects in our service and in the personnel of our consular service. I do not speak of the law, because I know nothing of the law, but I know something of the personnel of this service, and I say, Mr. Chairman, that the personnel of our consular service can be improved upon and should be improved upon by Congress or by the appointing power in a number of places between New York and the Philippine Islands.

I do not know who appointed them. Many of them have been in position for years. Some of them are quite young men, and certainly they could not have been there very long; but the fact remains, as I have stated, that their headquarters were not as they should be, as shown by the example mentioned by my friend from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE], who alluded to our consul at Nagasaki, a beautiful city clustered all around a magnificent bay, an ancient city, by the consul going there and hanging out the American flag over some man's third-class business store.

Did he stay there? No. He now has splendid headquarters upon the side of the hill, with the American flag floating over it, and a good officer he must be. I did not see him; he had his clerk there to represent him. He was absent. I believe he was in the United States.

Now, I say, gentlemen, that I am as good an American, I believe, as any man in this House, and love my country as much and will do as much, and if I do not do it I will try to do as much as any other man in this House for its promotion, regardless of politics, and I shall continue to do it, and I dislike to criticise; but I do say, as a duty, here and now, that there are places where the personnel of the consular service could be and should be improved.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. DINSMORE. I merely want to ask my friend if he will suggest to us some means by which we may improve the consular service.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I wish to say that I do not believe there is a member of that committee who would be derelict in his duty if he knew where the fault was, but I say, Mr. Chairman, that certainly one fault is in the appointing power appointing inferior men. I do not care whether the appointee comes from the city or from a village or a town or from the country. In every instance where a man is efficient I hope he comes from the country, for my part.

Mr. Chairman, I am for the country man as against the city man every time. [Applause.] As a rule, that is equitable; it is just. It often in the start evens up the city and country boy in the race of life. I know what the trials of a country boy are, and as long as I can, here or elsewhere, give him a helping hand I will. I have and I shall continue to do so. Regardless of the city or country man, we, I say, have inferior consular service in some places.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], in his usual adroit manner of defense, said that our service was all right in Paris. I do not doubt that in the least. I did not go to Paris. He says it is all right in Europe. I have not been to Europe.

I have not the least doubt in the world but what in London, in Frankfort, in Berlin, in Italy, in Greece, and in various other places I might mention, there is a magnificent ambassador, as we know there is, and a splendid consul, as I presume there is; and these must be so, because the gentleman from Ohio says it is so. But I say, Mr. Chairman, and I say it to the delectable chairman of this committee [Mr. HITT], whose friendship I enjoy and whose confidence I hope I have, that there are men in the consular service who should not be in it at any salary.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask to extend my remarks in the RECORD. I think I can add to them some suggestions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

As I understand the question, it is not as my friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] suggests, that we are here to improve the consular service by making a Democratic consular service or a Republican consular service, according to whether the President is a Democrat or a Republican. I thought we were here to improve and rehabilitate the United States consular service. I think this consular service should be for the benefit of the American people and not for the benefit of the Democratic party or the Republican party, and to the extent that you bring politics into this service you injure it.

You will find that to be true. The most favorable statement made to-day about this consular service is that where we have had first-class consuls the people in those places have made their wishes known and asked that they be retained in spite of a change in Administration. Now, I say we can go a step further. We can have a system of inspection of this consular service. Certainly under a system of inspection the inferior men who are acting as consuls must, some of them at least, be found out, and I hope they will be removed.

And where we have a good man who is fitted to occupy a better place that man should be promoted. Then, I believe, we will reach the merit system. So, I say, promote efficient men who are capable of filling more responsible positions, and remove those men who are unfit to occupy any position. We can accomplish this by an honest and efficient system of inspection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Minister resident and consul-general to Korea, $7,500."

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, in line 6, strike out the words "minister resident and consul-general" and insert "envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary."

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 5833. An act temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 26:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed the number of copies hereafter stated of Tables of an Annotated Index to the Congressional Series of the United States Public Documents, prepared under the supervision of the Superintendent of Documents, 5,000 copies; 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 3,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 for the Superintendent of Documents.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Consul-general at Constantinople and agent at Sofia, $5,000;

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out lines 14 and 15.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 14 and 15 on page 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, $390,000.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend line 19 by striking out "ninety" and inserting "eighty-five;" so that it will read "$385,000."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend line 19, page 3, by striking out "ninety" and inserting "eighty-five;" so that it will read "three hundred and eighty-five."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Secretaries of legations to Argentine Republic, Venezuela, and Peru, at $1,800 each, Liberia and Korea, at $1,500 each, $8,400.

Mr. HITT. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, line 6, amend by inserting, after the word "Korea," the words "(who shall be consul-general to Seoul)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINGENT EXPENSES, FOREIGN MISSIONS.

To enable the President to provide, at the public expense, all such stationery, blanks, records, and other books, seals, presses, flags, and signs as he shall think necessary for the several embassies and legations in the transaction of their business, and also for rent, postage, telegrams, furniture, messenger service, clerk hire, compensation of kavasses, guards, dragomen, and porters, including compensation of interpreter, guards, and Arabic clerk at the consulate at Tangiers, and the compensation of dispatch agents at London, New York, and San Francisco, and for traveling and miscellaneous expenses of embassies and legations, and for printing in the Department of State, and for loss on bills of exchange to and from embassies and legations, $175,000.

Mr. HITT. I move to strike out the last word. I stated in explaining the bill that I would call attention to any item in which there was a considerable change. This is the largest item in this part of the bill, and it contains an increase of $25,000. This branch of the appropriation last year was $150,000 for contingent expenses, foreign missions. That is now increased by $25,000, making it $175,000. It is caused by the general enlargement of business, corresponding to the enlargement and growth of our country. By reading the preceding paragraph anyone caring to know will see by the long list of purposes for which this is to be expended the necessity for the provision. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

ERECTION OF BUILDINGS FOR LEGATION TO CHINA.

For the erection of necessary buildings for legation premises at Pekin, China, $60,000.

Mr. HITT. That item, Mr. Chairman, is new. An appropriation of $40,000 made last year for the purchase of ground is not repeated here. This is a provision for building a legation, made necessary by the recent disturbance in China. It was expected that we would buy the ground on which our old legation building stood, but so great a price was asked that it could not be obtained, and we have purchased other ground, which is believed to be more advantageous. This sum, it is said, will be sufficient for the erection of the building.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL BUREAU OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

Contribution to the maintenance of the International Bureau of Weights and Measures for the year ending June 30, 1902, in conformity with the terms of the convention of May 24, 1875, the same, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be paid, under the direction of the Secretary of State, to said Bureau, on its certificate of apportionment, $2,270.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I move to strike out the last word, in order to call attention to a probable mistake on line 4, page 10. I think you ought to strike out "two" and insert "three."

Mr. HITT. The gentleman is correct. I move to strike out "two" and insert "three."

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 10, line 4, strike out the word "two" and insert the word "three," so that it will read "1903."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL BUREAU FOR PUBLICATION OF CUSTOMS TARIFFS.

To meet the share of the United States in the annual expense for the year ending March 31, 1902, of sustaining the International Bureau at Brussels for the translation and publication of customs tariffs, $1,318.76; this appropriation to be available on April 1, 1902, pursuant to convention proclaimed December 17, 1890.

Mr. HITT. I move to strike out the word "two," in line 14, and insert the word "three."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL (WATER) BOUNDARY COMMISSION, UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.

To enable the Commission to continue its work under the treaties of 1884 and 1889, $17,400.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I move to strike out the last word, in order that I may ask when the duties of this Commission will cease?

Mr. HITT. This work is continuous. It is pursuant to a convention between the nations, to which it is intended that copies of new tariffs, as made from time to time, shall be sent for translation and publication, and they are then communicated to the different countries.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I think the gentleman misunderstands my question. It is the last item, "International Boundary Commission."

Mr. HITT. That is the boundary survey to ascertain the boundary between the United States and Mexico, which is a work that has been prosecuted for a series of years. The Commission referred to is composed of a body of officers, a part of them from our Engineer Corps on the side of the United States, and a body of officers on the side of Mexico. It is a long, apparently endless work; but it is approaching completion, and we have provided this time an appropriation of $2,600 less than last year, and we hope that it will be done very soon.

There is a series of volumes, I will state to the gentleman if he is interested in the subject and desires to see them, showing the progress of the work and the difficulty of determining and fixing the path of the Rio Grande. Gentlemen from Texas are familiar with the shifting pathway of the river, and know that it is the most uncertain stream in America. Sometimes part of the United States is found to be over in Mexico, and again, by another change, part of Mexico is in the United States, if you follow the course of the river as it runs in its changes. This has produced a vast amount of trouble in our customs service and in other ways, and this work is to settle and determine in some permanent way the boundary of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

To meet the share of the United States in the expenses of the special bureau created by article 82 of the general act concluded at Brussels July 2, 1890, for the repression of the African slave trade and the restriction of the importation into and sale in a certain defined zone of the African continent of firearms, ammunition, and spirituous liquors, for the year 1903, $100.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee where the African slave trade exists and between what countries.

Mr. HITT. There is a slave trade existing in central and eastern Africa. There was a convention or conference held at Brussels six or seven years ago, and our country adhered to it. It is a small cost. It is a slave traffic that is considerable and produces great horrors. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania is interested in the subject I will say that there was an admirable report made to this House by John H. Andrew, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. OLMSTED. I have no objection to the appropriation; I simply asked for information. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my formal amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amsterdam, Netherlands, consul, Schedule B, class 5, $2,000.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice that the salary of the consul at Amsterdam is raised $500. The office receives something like $7,500 official fees, and I want to ask if the consul receives any fees in addition?

Mr. HITT. That official receives $1,100 of unofficial fees besides the salary. There is a considerable allowance for clerk hire, but if the gentleman will notice the official fees which go to the Government, and not to the consul, he will see that it is one of the large business offices in Europe. The amount of business is so great that it was deemed proper to make that increase. It is a strong case, an exceptional case, though it is subject to a point of order if the gentleman chooses to make it.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I do not wish to make the point of order, and I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Budapest, Austria-Hungary, consul, Schedule B, class 6, $1,500.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Budapest has been an office paid by fees. The fees amounted to $1,461. It was thought much better to have it fixed by salary for various reasons than by fees, and we have made it a salary of $1,500. This is a new salaried office.

The Clerk read as follows:

Cape Town, Africa, consul-general, Schedule B, $3,000.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not think there has been any intention to criticise the gentlemen of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, although several gentlemen have brought this question into the debate. I can not quite agree with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] nor the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. Those who have traveled in foreign countries will fully agree with me that the consular service of the United States is not what some of us say it is, and we ought to have reasonable revision of this important Government department. But, Mr. Chairman, my reason for especially rising in connection with this question is that I want to put these facts before the House. The consul-general at Cape Town is occupying a most important post. To-day that trade is increasing with enormous strides, and when the war in South Africa is over that gentleman will have very arduous duties to perform. It is a fact that the last consul-general, an able, fine man, Colonel Stowe, resigned because he was not paid a salary commensurate with his duties and one upon which he could afford to live decently, which can be confirmed by the State Department.

A gentleman by the name of Bingham was appointed to the position, and that gentleman is now in Cape Town. I have received letters from him within a recent date, in which he also says he can not live on the salary now paid. He has to do a great deal of work, and house rent and living expenses are very high, and a $3,000 salary is inadequate for him to live upon.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the chairman of the committee consider this question. I shall also ask the consent of the House to continue my remarks in the RECORD, as I hope to give our friend from Missouri, notwithstanding his witty speech, some views on this subject which may be of value to the committee.

I ask, Mr. Chairman, to strike out the words "three thousand" and insert the words "forty-five hundred" as the salary of the consul-general at Cape Town. He only receives $600 for clerk hire, and he wrote me the other day that he could not get a clerk at any such price. I know that is correct and that he can not obtain a clerk and stenographer combined that will do the duties properly for less than $1,200. He would probably be willing to stay there if he could get a reasonable increase in his compensation. He wrote me in a letter, which I showed to the State Department, that he had spent since he left the United States, seven or eight months ago, over $5,000 for himself and family, or over $2,000 in excess of what he receives. I hope the chairman of the committee and the House will agree to my amendment.

Mr. HITT. The conditions are such that I am compelled to object. I recognize and the committee know the truth of the greater part of what the gentleman has stated. The $3,000 salary at Cape Town is very attractive to applicants who want an office, and many applications are made for that office and have been for twenty years, and the men appointed are disillusioned by finding that it is a very expensive post.

The former incumbent, a most efficient man who, resigned, Mr. Stowe, has stated the facts truly. The consul there gets a greater amount than the gentleman from New York has stated. There are some notarial fees which go to him, and he gets $304 as his one-half of the fees of the agents. We have also given him $600 for clerk hire. If we had gone on to raise the salary of one $3,000 post to $3,500 like this, there would have been 50 gentlemen on the floor who would have insisted on equality and fair treatment, and that other consuls should be raised a like amount. The gentleman can see that if the committee allowed one amendment to go in there would be a dozen others.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I recognize the truth of the remark by the chairman of the committee, and I withdraw my proposed amendment. I ask, however, Mr. Chairman, consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Dawson City, Northwest Territory, consul, Schedule B, class 3, $3,500.

Mr. HITT. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out, after the word "class," the word "three" and inserting "two;" so as to read "class 2."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I move to amend by striking out the last word. I notice that this salary has been increased $500. Does this officer get any fees in addition to his salary?

Mr. HITT. Yes, sir; enormous fees, as they seem to me. The unofficial fees going into his own pocket last year were $3.925. The year before they were still higher, and his salary, which has been $3,000, we have increased to $3,500. In addition to that, we allow him a slight increase of clerk hire.

Mr. HEMENWAY. What reason is there why this officer should have this very large compensation?

Mr. HITT. That question was asked by the committee; and it was most aboundingly answered that this consul could not get a clerk for $1,000 a year, nor could he keep one very long for more than that amount. The prices of living there are said to be prodigiously high. There is no other point in the world, as facts given to us seem to show, where the cost of lodging, food of mere existence from day to day, is so high as in Dawson City. To get one's meals at a restaurant costs more than board with a suite of rooms at the finest hotel in this part of the country.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Does the chairman of the committee think that this salary ought to be increased $500 in addition to the fees which this officer receives?

Mr. HITT. I contested that point at the Department. We discussed this question in committee, because the compensation seemed too high, especially in view of another fact which I will candidly state, that this officer is not at this place all the year. But it appeared that the expenses of living there go outside of all scales that we have to measure things by. It is a mining camp, where all articles necessary for subsistence have to be imported from a distance at a great cost, and are poor and bad when they get there.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands, the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ensenada, Mexico, consul, Schedule C, class 7, $1,500.

Mr. HITT. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out "C" and inserting "B," and by striking out "seven" and inserting "six;" so as to read "Schedule B, class 6."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HITT. I move to amend by striking out the last word. In this case we have raised the salary from $1,000 to $1,500. The business in Government fees has amounted to $654 and in unofficial fees to about $50.

I speak of this in order to show the spirit of the committee—their desire to do what appeared to be necessary. This is a small town and the business is small, but it is increasing very rapidly with the rush of American trade into northern Mexico. It has recently doubled and trebled. Undoubtedly, although it does not show in the invoices, there will be a larger business there.

We could not get a man of the proper capacity to live there in the mountains of Mexico on a salary of $1,000 a year. In order to get an officer to stay there and be of some use we increased the salary $500, although on the face of the matter this might seem to be unfair and partial treatment. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Freiburg, Germany, consul, Schedule B, class 5, $2,000.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I observe at this place the salary has been increased. I would like to know some reason for this.

Mr. HITT. There is a large business at Freiburg.

Mr. HEMENWAY. How about the fees?

Mr. HITT. The official fees are large. The invoices cover quantities of velvets, woolen goods, etc., and in a single invoice may amount to $5,000. The official fees last year were $3,336.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Now, then, I understand the consul there gets one-half of that?

Mr. HITT. He gets nothing of that. That all goes to the Government.

Mr. HEMENWAY. What does he get in addition?

Mr. HITT. He gets the salary directly and then the unofficial fees, and last year all the unofficial fees or notarial fees in that consulate amounted to but $444. That was so plain a case of underpay that we could not afford to let it pass, and so we increased it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Lucerne, Switzerland, consul, Schedule B, class 5, $2,000.

Mr. HITT. I will say that that is a new consulate established by the committee in place of Aarau, which was a consulate and is now reduced to a consular agency. Lucerne is a city of much more importance politically and a suitable place for a consulate. So we made it a consulate instead of an agency and the other we made an agency instead of a consulate.

The Clerk read as follows:

Lyon, France, consul, Schedule B, class 4, $2,500.

Mr. HITT. I move to amend, in line 13, page 23, by inserting the letter "s" after the word "Lyon," so that it will be "Lyons."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Marseille, France, consul, Schedule B, class 4, $2,500.

Mr. HITT. I will ask consent to go back to page 22, line 21, and change a letter in the word "Leipzig." I wish to make it a "c" instead of a "g."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made.

Mr. HITT. On page 24, the paragraph just read, I move to insert after the word "Marseille" the letter "s;" making it read "Marseilles."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ottawa, Ontario, consul-general, Schedule B, $3,500.

Mr. HITT. On page 26, in line 15, I move to amend by striking out the word "three" and in line 16 strike out the word "three" and the words "five hundred" and insert "four;" so that it will read: "Ottawa, Ontario, consul-general, Schedule D, $4,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HITT. I will ask consent to correct the motion I made a moment ago as to the word "Leipzic." I want to have that word corrected so that it will be spelled "Leipsic."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made.

The Clerk read as follows:

Para, Brazil, consul, Schedule B, class 5, $2,500.

Mr. HITT. In line 21, page 26, I move to amend by striking out the word "five" and inserting the word "four;" so that it will read "class four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Patras, Greece, consul, Schedule C, class 6, $1,500.

Mr. HITT. In line 1, at the top of page 27, I move to amend by striking out the letter "C" and inserting the letter "B."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I move to strike out the last word. I notice an increase in the salary there of $500 and the total fees received are only $467. Why is that?

Mr. HITT. Patras is a considerable port and the invoices do not always show the volume of business. The invoices of Paris are in these little articles of toilet, so that there are a great number of invoices, each one bringing a fee of $2.50 for a small amount of value, but in the export tea trade from China a single invoice may cover many thousands of dollars' worth of tea. This is the chief port of Greece. The fruit and currant traffic is considerable.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Has it increased in the last year?

Mr. HITT. It is increasing all the time, but it run down during their war.

Mr. HEMENWAY. As to the next item there, the same matter, there is an increase there from $2,500 to $3,000 where the fees show only $926. The item has been read.

Mr. HITT. Yes; Pernambuco is a coffee and sugar port. It is an unhealthy place, and unattractive, but important. One of the members of the committee who has been in Brazil agreed so strongly with the Department in recommending it, that we thought it was necessary to increase it in order to always secure a competent man in the place.

Mr. HEMENWAY. There has been no resignation?

Mr. HITT. There has not, but now and then deaths at those hot ports.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn, and the Clerk read as follows:

Port Limon, Costa Rica, consul, Schedule B, class 6, $1,500.

Mr. HITT. I move to strike out the last word. Port Limon is a new consulate, and was established by the committee, not in the spirit of making offices, but for efficiency and to have a salaried consul. It is now paid by fees, and last year the fees that were paid, which went to the consul and to the consular agent, were $2,884. We have put him on a salary of $1,500, and then he gets the unofficial fees, which are not large.

The Clerk read as follows:

Port Sarnia, Ontario, consul, Schedule B, class 6, $1,500.

Mr, HITT. Mr. Chairman, there is an omission that was made in the reporting of the bill. The subcommittee had agreed on it. Port Sarnia should be $2,000, and I move that amendment. The gentleman who had charge of that was absent from the committee on the day it was passed on, and he has called attention to it since. I will make that motion.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

In lines 13 and 14 strike out the words "one thousand five hundred" and insert the words "two thousand."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HITT. I also move to strike out the word "six," in line 13, and insert the word "five" instead.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Port Stanley, Falkland Islands, consul, Schedule B, class 6, $2,000.

Mr. HITT. In line 16 of page 27 I move to strike out the word "six" and insert the word "five."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pretoria, South African Republic, consul, Schedule B, class 5, $3,000.

Mr. HITT. On page 27 I wish to amend, at line 22, by striking out the word "five" and inserting the word "three."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Quebec, Quebec, consul, Schedule B, class 4, $3,000.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, in line 5, page 28, the word "four" should be "three," so that it will read "class 3."

The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 28, in line 5, strike out "four" and insert "three," so that it will read "class 3."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Rheims, France, consul, Schedule B, class 5, $2,000.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, after line 10, I move to insert the words "Riga, Russia, consul, Schedule C, class 7, $750."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 10, insert "Riga, Russia, consul, Schedule C, class 7, $750.

Mr. HITT. It is due to the House that I should explain this amendment. This is the lowest salary given to a consul, so far as I know. The State Department asked this. It was not submitted formally to the committee, but the statement was made by the Assistant Secretary that the officer there is a large shipping merchant who does a great deal of business for Americans and American interests.

We can not get an American to go out there at any such compensation, and the State Department asks that this resident of the town of Riga be given this small salary. There seems to be considerable business there, but he has to pay the clerk hire and the office rent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Stanbridge, Canada, consul, Schedule B, $1,000.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, that is a new salaried office. The fees there are not much. The whole compensation of the consul is only a little over $500. We have made the salary $1,000. None of us thought we could make it any less in decency. The duties are of an important character, but some of them have nothing to do with commerce. That is a runway for the Chinese who are brought across the border by a system of bribery and smuggling. This officer has been efficient there. We make the new salaried office and fix the salary at $1,000.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sydney, New South Wales, consul, Schedule B, class 5, $2,000.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois and the members of this House to increase the salary of the consul at Sydney, New South Wales. That is a city of 400,000 people, and under the new federation of the colonies it will be the most important point in the South Seas. I have lived there myself, and know the place well, and I do not see how a man can possibly live there on that salary. I move to strike out $2,000 and insert $3,000.

Mr. HITT. Is that Sydney, Nova Scotia?

Mr. DOUGLAS. No; Sydney, New South Wales.

Mr. HITT. The salary is $2,000 at present.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Two thousand dollars at present, in a city of 400,000 people, with at least $10,000,000 of exports from this country going in there every year. I know the consuls who have lived there for the last twenty years. I have lived there myself. I will not say how much I have had to spend there, but I say that no man can represent this country properly on that salary, even with what little fees he may have. It is a disgrace to this country to ask him to do it.

Mr. HITT. I agree with the gentleman. I know the port very well and I know the consul. He has made a good official.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I do not know who the consul is at present, except by name.

Mr. HITT. I do, and he is a good officer. But I have no right as an individual member to assent to an amendment of this kind.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I will ask to have the amendment submitted to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 31, line 20, strike out "two" and insert "three;" so that it will read "$3,000."

Mr. HITT. I am compelled, Mr. Chairman, to make the point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Three Rivers, Canada, consul, Schedule B, class 5, $2,000.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, at Three Rivers, Canada, there is an increase. On account of the great rapidity in the increase of business we have raised it from $1,500 to $2,000. The fees will show that there is a large increase there, based on increase of American population who have bought these lands, and the trade in timber and in agricultural implements is very large.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, $581,500.

Mr. HITT. I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 19, page 34, strike out the word "one" and insert the word "two," and by striking out the word "five" and inserting the word "seven," and by adding after the word "hundred" "and fifty;" so that it will read $582,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Leipzig, Germany, $800.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, on line 2 make the same change, from "Leipzig" to "Leipsic."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Lyon, France, $1,200.

Mr. HITT. I move to amend, in line 5, after the word "Lyon," by inserting the letter "s," so as to read "Lyons."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Marseille, France, $1,200.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting "s" after the word "Marseille."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. FEELY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, that concludes the consideration of the bill in the committee. I now move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation of the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CURTIS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11471) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment; if not, the Chair will submit them in gross to the House.

The question was taken on the amendments in gross, and they were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HITT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HOUSE BILL AND SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate concurrent resolution and House bill (with Senate amendments) of the following title were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

Senate concurrent resolution 26:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed the number of copies hereafter stated of tables of an annotated index to the Congressional series of the United States public documents, prepared under the supervision of the Superintendent of Documents, 5,000 copies; 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 3,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 copies for the Superintendent of Documents—to the Committee on Printing.

H. R. 5833. An act temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriations for establishment of the boundary line between Montana and Idaho—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a petition of yeomen and others in the Navy, asking for the passage of the bills (H. R. 7486, S. 1883) relating to clerical services in the Navy—to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Ira J. Partlow, administrator of estate of Lydia Hoff and Hannah Updike against the United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. TATE, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10161) providing for the distribution of Government publications to colleges, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 591); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. JONES of Washington, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4549) authorizing the issuance of a patent to the county of Clallam, State of Washington, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 593); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MONDELL, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11053) providing for the issuance of patent to the town site of Basin, to the municipal authorities thereof, for the use and benefit of said town, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 594); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. DAVEY of Louisiana, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10072) for the establishment of a light-house at the mouth of Oyster Bayou, near the Louisiana coast, in the Gulf of Mexico, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 595); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LOUD, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11728) to classify the rural free-delivery service and fix the compensation to employees thereof, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 597); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4607) to provide for the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River at or near South Omaha, Nebr., reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 598); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. SLAYDEN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 1592) for the relief of F. M. Vowells, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 592); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DAYTON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1258) to remove the charge of desertion from the naval record of John Glass, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 596); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 26, 1902.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, on account of the McKinley memorial exercises, which are to be held in the Hall of the House of Representatives at 12 o'clock to-morrow, I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day the adjournment be until a quarter before 12 to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, the Committee on Privileges and Elections had a session this morning, and we are in the midst of the consideration of the order submitted to that committee. By direction of the committee, and hoping we may be able to reach an agreement, I am requested to make the motion that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 27, 1902, at 11 o'clock and 45 minutes a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 26, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

REPRINT OF A BILL.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I will ask first unanimous consent for a reprint of the bill (H. R. 11354) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, including the accompanying report, No. 550, as I understand it is exhausted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent for the reprint of the House bill 11354, being the Post-Office appropriation bill and the accompanying report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LOUD. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will ask unanimous consent of the House that bill H. R. 11728, to classify the rural free-delivery service, and the compensation of the employees thereof, be taken up for consideration Monday next, immediately after the reading of the Journal, and that such bill shall be the continuing special order until disposed of; the bill to be considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that House bill 11728, a bill to classify the rural free-delivery service, and fix the compensation of the employees thereof, be taken up on Monday next, immediately after the approval of the Journal, and become the continuing special order until disposed of by the House, subject to revenue and appropriation bills and conference reports. Is there objection?

Mr. LOUD. And to be considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. That would follow, but the Chair will add that to the request.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have added to that a request for unanimous consent that the time in which this bill is considered shall be equally divided between those who favor the bill and those who oppose it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks that there be added to the request the provision that the time allowed for consideration of the bill be equally divided between those in favor and those opposed to the bill. The Chair thinks that will follow as a matter of course. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. FORDNEY. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LOUD. Will the gentleman withhold his objection that I may make a brief statement about the facts in the case?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, the Post-Office Committee finds itself in this position: For a number of years we have been appropriating a lump sum for the rural free-delivery service. This year if it is continued it may necessarily require legislation, and legislation outside of that which I anticipate the gentleman from Michigan objects to. We can not consider the appropriation bill unless this legislation shall first be considered, or it must be considered on the appropriation bill. The question that confronts the House must be disposed of one way or the other, or the appropriation bill must pass the House without containing the provision for rural free-delivery service. If there are any provisions in this bill that the House does not like, it has the power to strike it out; but a failure to consider this bill, as far as the House is concerned, prohibits an incorporation of the rural free-delivery service in the bill. I think that is all, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CORLISS. I would like to ask the gentleman from California a question.

Mr. FORDNEY. I will withdraw my objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LOUD. I will yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CORLISS. I would like to ask the gentleman if this bill—I have not been able to get a copy of it—embraces the provision with reference to a contract system for the rural free-delivery carriers?

Mr. LOUD. It does; that is one of the provisions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SWANSON. I shall object, Mr. Speaker, unless the request that the time be equally divided be added to the request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's request is added to the request of the gentleman from California, although the Chair thinks it would follow anyway. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the order is made as requested.

BRIDGE OVER THE MISSOURI RIVER NEAR KANSAS CITY.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill (S. 3107) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River at or near Kansas City, Mo. I desire to say that the bill H. R. 9962 is a similar bill and has been reported favorably by the House committee.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

The SPEAKER. Inasmuch as this is a Senate bill substantially the same as the House bill which has been favorably reported by a committee of the House, it does not have to be considered in Committee of the Whole. Under section 2 of Rule XXIV it is in order on the Speaker's table.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COWHERD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that House bill 9962, a similar bill, lie on the table.

There was no objection.

HOMESTEAD ENTRIES IN OKLAHOMA.

Mr. LONG. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The bill (H. R. 7933) providing for the commutation for town-site purposes of homestead entries in certain portions of Oklahoma was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That that portion of section 22 of the act approved May 2, 1890, entitled "An act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Oklahoma, to enlarge the jurisdiction of the United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," providing for the commutation for town-site purposes of homestead entries in certain instances, be, and the same is hereby, made applicable to the lands in the Territory of Oklahoma ceded to the United States by the Wichita and affiliated bands of Indians and the Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes of Indians, under agreements, respectively, ratified by the acts of Congress of March 2, 1895, and June 6, 1900.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. We would like to hear some explanation of the extent and scope of the bill, and would also be glad to know what committee has reported it.

Mr. LONG. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FLYNN] that he may explain the bill.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been unanimously reported by the Committee on the Public Lands of this House. It provides that the section of the general land law which authorizes in all parts of Oklahoma commutation of homestead entries for town-site purposes shall be extended over the reservations known as the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache reservations opened up last August. The bill has the united support of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] and myself. Both of us appeared before the Committee on the Public Lands in relation to the measure.

Under existing law a homesteader can commute his homestead entry at the expiration of fourteen months by the payment to the Government of $1.25 an acre. Under this bill he can commute for town-site purposes by paying $10 an acre at any time. It merely extends the existing provisions of law now applying to all other parts of Oklahoma which were opened up last August. It was purely by oversight that this section was omitted from the bill which passed the House.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LONG, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago, when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] was addressing the House on the subject of trusts, he alluded to the merger of two railroad companies in Minnesota——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I rise to a point of order. I do not understand by what right the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] is occupying the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota can proceed only by unanimous consent.

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask unanimous consent to make a personal statement.

Mr. LANHAM. I do not see my colleague [Mr. BURLESON] in the House.

Mr. TAWNEY. I spoke to him a moment ago about this matter concerning which I intend to make a statement, and we agreed upon the request I am about to make. I do not know where he is just now, but I spoke to him about the matter.

Mr. LANHAM. If my colleague has consented to the arrangement, all right.

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER. For how long?

Mr. TAWNEY. Just to make a personal statement to the House and then to ask that the question asked of the gentleman from Texas by me in the course of his remarks a few days ago and his reply thereto may be stricken from the permanent record of the House. I do not want more than five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks five minutes to make a statement. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAWNEY. As I said a moment ago, the gentleman from Texas, in the course of his remarks a few days ago, alluded to the proposed merger of the Great Northern and Northern Pacific railroads in the State of Minnesota, and commended the governor of Minnesota, a Republican, for the action which he had taken to prevent the full consummation of that combination. At that point it was suggested to me by a member sitting near by that I ask the gentleman from Texas what was the attitude of the governor of Montana, a Democratic governor, on this same question.

It was suggested to me that he was against the prosecution of pending judicial proceedings, and recalling the fact that the governor of one of the neighboring States was opposed, or did not join in the proceedings to prevent the merger, I asked the question as to the attitude of the governor of Montana, to which the gentleman from Texas replied that he did not know, but that if he was against it he [Mr. BURLESON] repudiated him; and I replied that he was against it. I wish to correct that statement. It is not in accordance with the fact. My remark was uttered hastily and without stopping to consider what particular governor was opposed to the prosecution of the judicial proceedings for the purpose of preventing this merger. The governor of Montana, as I am informed, has always been opposed to the merger and is now opposed to it—is doing all he can to assist the governor of Minnesota in preventing the full consummation of the merger contemplated by and through the organization of the Northern Securities Company.

I make this statement in justice to the governor of Montana. I knew that one or more of the governors of States in that section were opposed to the proceedings against the so-called merger, and the suggestion being made to me by a member sitting near me that it was the governor of Montana, I hastily asked the question I did. In view of the fact that it was an erroneous statement concerning the chief executive of Montana, I ask unanimous consent that those questions and answers may be stricken from the official record of the House. I wish to say that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] consented to this a moment ago when he was here and would consent to it now if he was here.

Mr. LANHAM. It was just the statement made by yourself?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is a question and the answer.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that there may be stricken from the official record of the date referred to so much of the colloquy between himself and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] as he has explained. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

RURAL FREE DELIVERY.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the minority members of the Post-Office Committee may be permitted to file their views against House bill 11728, which provides for the contract system of rural delivery.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to submit the views of the minority members of the Post-Office Committee against House bill 11728. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PHILIPPINE TARIFF.

Mr. PAYNE. I desire to report from the Committee on Ways and Means on the Senate amendments to House bill 5833, being an act temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York, chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, by direction of that committee reports back House bill 5833.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the committee recommends a disagreement with all the amendments of the Senate, although I may say for the majority of the committee that they are in accord with nearly all of the amendments; but a number of them with which they are in accord they think ought to be amended in order to clearly state the object of the amendments, and to be sure that what the object of the Senate was in making the amendment is accomplished by the language employed; and I would ask unanimous consent of the House to disagree with these amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the House disagree to the amendments of the Senate to House bill 5833, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to say that the amendments were hastily considered in the Committee on Ways and Means, and for the minority I would say that some of them were regarded as not very material and were not objected to; but I can not agree with the request of the gentleman from New York, and I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee demands the regular order. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I make the point of order that they require consideration in the Committee of the Whole. I will make it now or after they are reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Provided, That upon all articles the growth and product of the Philippine Archipelago coming into the United States from the Philippine Archipelago there shall be levied, collected, and paid only 75 per cent of the rates of duty aforesaid: And provided further, That the rates of duty which are required hereby to be levied, collected, and paid upon products of the Philippine Archipelago coming into the United States shall be less any duty or taxes levied, collected, and paid thereon upon the exportation thereof from the Philippine Archipelago, as provided by the act of the United States Philippine Commission referred to in section 1 of this act, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, but all articles, the growth and product of the Philippine Islands, now admitted into the ports of the United States free of duty and exported directly from said islands to the United States for use and consumption therein, shall be hereafter exempt from any export duties imposed in the Philippine Islands."

Page 4, after line 9, insert:

"SEC. 9. That no person in the Philippine Islands shall, under the authority of the United States, be convicted of treason by any tribunal, civil or military, unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court: Provided, That there shall be no conviction or punishment under the authority of the United States by any tribunal, civil or military, of any mother or father for failing to give information against his or her child, or of any son or daughter for failing to give information against his or her mother or father, or of any husband for failing to give information against his wife, or of any wife for failing to give information against her husband."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point of order that these amendments should be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Tennessee to indicate to which of these amendments he makes the point of order, because that point can apply only to propositions for raising revenue, not to regulations or increases or decreases from the propositions of the House bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, amendment No. 1 reads as follows:

(1) Provided, That upon all articles the growth and product of the Philippine Archipelago coming into the United States from the Philippine Archipelago there shall be levied, collected, and paid only 75 per cent of the rates of duty aforesaid: And provided further, That the rates of duty which are required hereby to be levied, collected, and paid upon products of the Philippine Archipelago coming into the United States shall be less any duty or taxes levied, collected, and paid thereon upon the exportation thereof from the Philippine Archipelago, as provided by the act of the United States Philippine Commission referred to in section 1 of this act, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe; but all articles the growth and product of the Philippine Islands now admitted into the ports of the United States free of duty and exported directly from said islands to the United States for use and consumption therein shall be hereafter exempt from any export duties imposed in the Philippine Islands.

Now, I grant you that that is a simple reduction from 100 per cent charged under the Dingley law to 75 per cent, but the proviso—

That the rates of duty which are required hereby to be levied, collected, and paid upon products of the Philippine Archipelago coming into the United States shall be less any duty or taxes levied, collected, and paid thereon upon the exportation thereof from the Philippine Archipelago, as provided in the act of the United States Philippine Commission referred to in section 1 of this act, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe; but all articles the growth and product of the Philippine Islands not admitted into the ports of the United States free of duty and exported directly from said islands to the United States for use and consumption therein shall be hereafter exempt from any export duties imposed in the Philippine Islands—is a direct change of law with reference to the rates of duty. Then there are a number of other changes, some of them not very material. The second amendment adds the word "foreign," which changes the law as to the tonnage taxes on vessels from all vessels to foreign vessels, which makes a change in the revenue law. The third amendment exempts the vessels that "in addition to any tonnage dues or taxes now imposed by the government of the Philippine Islands upon all foreign vessels, except vessels of Spain," etc. It may be insisted that the object of that amendment is to make it conform to the treaty, but it changes the law. Amendment No. 4 is as follows:

Page 2, lines 11 and 12, strike out "otherwise provided by law" and insert "July 1, 1904."

That might not require consideration in Committee of the Whole. However, it is not important. Amendment No. 5 provides a restriction as to the vessels of the United States, the transportation of passengers and merchandise, etc., and inserts:

or between ports in the Philippine Archipelago: And provided further, That the Philippine Commission shall be authorized and empowered to issue licenses to all vessels or other craft now engaged in lighterage or other exclusively harbor business; but after the passage of this act such licenses except as herein provided shall be issued only to vessels or other craft built in the Philippine Islands, or in the United States and owned by citizens of the United States or by inhabitants of the Philippine Islands.

I do not care so much for that amendment, and yet it is a modification of the law. Then in section 4 amendments 6, 7, 8, and 9 refer to the collection of the revenue, and affect at any rate the amount, but that is not so very important. Still they do change the existing law in respect to the revenue.

Now, amendment 11 is one which certainly requires consideration in Committee of the Whole. It is as follows:

And all taxes paid upon such articles shipped to the Philippine Islands since November 15, 1901, under the decision of the Secretary of the Treasury of that date, shall be refunded to the parties who have paid the same, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, and a sum sufficient to make such payment is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

That is a direct appropriation of money to refund by reason of this change in the law caused by the Senate amendment. There is an amendment, No. 12, that I do not consider important. It simply corrects the verbiage.

Amendment 13 is as follows:

That merchandise in bonded warehouse or otherwise in the custody and control of the officers of the customs, upon which duties have been paid, shall be entitled, on shipment to the Philippine Islands within three years from the date of the original arrival, to a return of the duties paid less 1 per cent, and merchandise upon which duties have not been paid may be shipped without the payment of duties to the Philippine Islands within said period, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

This amendment requires consideration in the Committee of the Whole. The next amendment is No. 14, which relates to appeals. It gives appeals in respect to all articles coming into the Philippine Archipelago from the United States and all articles coming into the United States from the Philippine Archipelago, which is a direct interference with the tax law and makes a change in our law in respect to this question of appeal. Amendment No. 15 is one that relates to the matter of treason, and defines how conviction shall be had for treason by any tribunal, civil or military, etc., in the islands. That might not require consideration in the Committee of the Whole. It simply regulates the method and mode of practice and fixes the evidence necessary for a conviction for treason. It is one of the best amendments, I think, that the Senate proposes. So that, Mr. Speaker, nearly every one of the amendments require consideration in the Committee of the Whole; not all of them, but those that do not are merely amendments of not much importance and would not be resisted, I think.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman is through——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I am for the present.

Mr. PAYNE (continuing). On page 681 of the Digest I find:

A Senate amendment which is a modification merely of a House proposition, like the increase or decrease of the amount, etc., and does not involve new and distinct expenditures, is not to be required to be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That is right.

Mr. PAYNE. That seems to have been decided a great many times and is the parliamentary law of this body. In the light of that decision, Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to find an amendment proposed by the Senate that does not come under that ruling affecting the receipts of revenue. As to amendment No. 1, the House bill provided that on goods coming from the Philippine Islands to the United States the full Dingley rate should apply. The Senate amendment modifies that and says we shall collect 75 per cent of those rates. The proviso to that amendment reduces the amount of export duties on goods coming from the Philippine Islands to the United States. We in the House imposed those export duties by reenacting the Taft Commission bill, and the Senate in the proviso strikes out these export duties. That would come clearly under the rule that I have read.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That part of it makes it absolutely necessary to be considered in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PAYNE. I did not hear what the gentleman from Tennessee said.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I said I conceded that the point would not lie as to the first four lines of the Senate amendment, being simply a reduction, and would not require consideration in the Committee of the Whole; but that the proviso made it fairly within the rule.

Mr. PAYNE. In the House bill we provided distinctly that the export duties provided by the Philippine Commission should be collected upon all goods coming from the Philippine Islands into the United States. This provides that no such export duty shall be collected. It is a modification of the House bill, and no more. On amendment numbered 2 we provided for tonnage taxes upon all vessels. The Senate restricted that to foreign vessels.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Before the gentleman leaves the other point. I do not want to interrupt his argument. While on that amendment, I call his attention to the fact that this proviso makes new law and affects the revenue directly in a manner that the House bill did not affect it. It is not simply a reduction of what was in the House bill, but new law affecting the revenue, and therefore subject to the point of order.

Mr. PAYNE. I am glad to have the gentleman come to our proposition here, that the laws of the Philippine Commission are laws binding upon Congress. But we reenacted these laws. We did that in connection with the first section of the bill, in stating that these export duties enacted by the Philippine Commission should be collected upon all goods coming into the United States from the Philippine Islands; but that does not go to the root of the matter, because the Senate has simply modified a section of our bill and provided that no export duty shall be collected upon goods coming from the Philippine Islands into the United States; so that that amendment is not within the rule. The next amendment relates to tonnage on vessels.

We provided in the House bill that tonnage should be collected on all vessels, including vessels of the United States, carrying goods from the Philippine Islands to the ports of the United States and back. This amendment provides that this tax shall only be collected on foreign vessels, or, in other words, exempt vessels of the United States. It is a modification of the provision in our bill. Amendment 3 is also an amendment to the Philippine tariff commission bill which we had enacted:

And in addition to any tonnage dues or taxes now imposed by the government of the Philippine Islands upon all foreign vessels, except vessels of Spain or owned by Spanish subjects, engaged in traffic between the ports of the Philippine Archipelago.

We put it upon all vessels; they confine it to foreign vessels, and then they excepted Spanish vessels, or, in other words, it reduces the revenue that we were providing for under our bill.

Amendment numbered 4 is in relation to the time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee did not make a point of order on amendment numbered 4 or amendment numbered 5, as the Chair understands.

Mr. PAYNE. On amendments 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10.

The SPEAKER. The point of order was not made as to either of these. The gentleman from Tennessee will correct the Chair if he is in error.

Mr. PAYNE. On amendment numbered 11 a point of order is made against that, in that it provides for revenue duties and appropriates money. That is something new. The point of order might possibly be good as to that amendment. Amendment 12 simply strikes——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I could not hear what the gentleman was saying as to amendment 11.

Mr. PAYNE. I say possibly that may be subject to the point of order.

Amendment 12 strikes out the word "imported."

The SPEAKER. No point of order was made against that.

Mr. PAYNE. It simply changes the language. Section 7 provides:

That merchandise in bonded warehouse or otherwise in the custody and control of the officers of the customs, upon which duties have been paid, shall be entitled, on shipment to the Philippine Islands within three years from the date of the original arrival, to a return of the duties paid less 1 per cent, and merchandise upon which the duties have not been paid may be shipped without the payment of duties to the Philippine Islands within said period, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

That makes no appropriation; it extends the exemption that we had put in our bill upon the payment of duties.

Section 8, amendment 14, provides——

The SPEAKER. The Chair would say to the gentleman from New York that the Chair did not hear what the gentleman said about amendment 13.

Mr. PAYNE. I am in doubt, Mr. Speaker, as to amendment 13. It provides for a refunding of the duties paid under certain circumstances. Now, as to amendment 14——

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand that the gentleman from Tennessee made the point of order against the fourteenth amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Yes, Mr. Speaker; I insist that amendment 14 changes the law in respect to appeals and would affect the revenue. I said it was obnoxious to the rule. I think we might have gone into Committee of the Whole upon these amendments and expedited business. We did not propose to abuse the rule.

Mr. PAYNE. It has been held that if one or more amendments are subject to a point of order the House may go on and consider the remainder, and then go into Committee of the Whole on such amendments as must be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I did not hear what the gentleman stated.

Mr. PAYNE. It has been held that where there are several amendments, and only one or more of them, or a portion of them, must be considered in Committee of the Whole, the House may first proceed and consider the amendments not subject to that point of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. There is no question but that that may be done if the Speaker should be of the opinion that there was only one; but there are so many that require consideration in Committee of the Whole that I think we would get along more expeditiously if we went into Committee of the Whole upon all the amendments. We do not propose to abuse the rule by debate, but we think it would be better to consider them in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PAYNE. Can we agree on general debate in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I do not think it will be necessary to have general debate. I do not think it would take a great while. We do not want to abuse the patience of the House.

Mr. PAYNE. What would the gentleman say to an hour or two hours for general debate?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I would rather that the amendments should be read and let us go along with them at once.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman agree that we shall go along without any general debate, under the five-minute rule?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I have had no request for general debate, but some members on this side want to discuss certain amendments.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, suppose we take it up under the five-minute rule?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I am willing to do that, inasmuch as nobody has asked for general debate.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the amendments, and pending that, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be dispensed with, and that the amendments be taken up under the five-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the Senate amendments to the bill 5833, and, pending that, asks unanimous consent that general debate be dispensed with and that the Committee of the Whole proceed at once under the five-minute rule. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The motion of Mr. PAYNE was then agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. HEPBURN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering Senate amendments to House bill 5833. General debate having been dispensed with, the Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 1, after the word "countries," insert:

"Provided, That upon all articles the growth and product of the Philippine Archipelago coming into the United States from the Philippine Archipelago there shall be levied, collected, and paid only 75 per cent of the rates of duty aforesaid: And provided further, That the rates of duty which are required hereby to be levied, collected, and paid upon products of the Philippine Archipelago coming into the United States shall be less any duty or taxes levied, collected, and paid thereon upon the exportation thereof from the Philippine Archipelago, as provided by the act of the United States Philippine Commission referred to in section 1 of this act, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, but all articles, the growth and product of the Philippine Islands, now admitted into the ports of the United States free of duty and exported directly from said islands to the United States for use and consumption therein, shall be hereafter exempt from any export duties imposed in the Philippine Islands."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee recommend to the House nonconcurrence with this amendment, and I want to make a statement about it.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee recommend a concurrence in Senate amendment No. 1 with the amendment that I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves that the committee recommend concurrence with the amendment which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend Senate amendment as follows:

"In line 9, strike out the word 'seventy-five' and insert in lieu thereof the word 'twenty-five.'"

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that. As I understand it, the House having fixed the rate at 100 per cent and the Senate at 75 per cent, the House must agree upon something between 75 and 100 per cent. I know it is so whenever the matter is in conference, and I do not see why the same rule does not hold good when operating on a Senate amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I submit that there is no such rule as that referred to by the gentleman from New York governing us in dealing with Senate amendments. The House passed this bill with the Dingley rates. The Senate passed an amendment fixing the rates at 75 per cent of the Dingley rates; and there were other things in the amendment. It is proposed now to concur in the entire Senate amendment, merely striking out 75 per cent and inserting 25 per cent. There is no rule of parliamentary law, there is no rule of law of any kind, so far as I know, that prevents the House amending the Senate amendment in the manner proposed in the amendment of of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCCLELLAN].

I grant, if we go into conference, the conferees can deal only with the text as changed by the Senate; but the entire amendments of the Senate would be open to amendment. We could very well say: "If we can not get 100 per cent reduction we will take a 25 per cent duty, but not 75 per cent." There is no sort of restriction upon the House in amending a Senate amendment, except it must be germane. I submit that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] can not find a precedent to sustain him in the position he has taken.

Mr. PAYNE. I am unable to turn to any precedent. This is a new question to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not inclined to sustain the point of order as raised by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, the reason I made the motion to disagree to this amendment——

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Has the Chair ruled on the point of order?

Mr. PAYNE. The Chair ruled the amendment in order.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I would like to be heard on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] has been recognized.

Mr. PAYNE. So I supposed. Now, I will begin again. My reason for making the motion to disagree to this amendment was this: The committee, so far as the majority members are concerned, are willing to concede this 25 per cent reduction, and they are willing also to concede that the export duties, so called, on goods coming from the Philippine Islands to the United States be abolished. But when we came to look at the language employed by the Senate in the provision abolishing these export duties we thought it could very easily be made clearer and more definite, while employing a good deal less language. We thought there might be a proviso something like this: That no tax or duty shall be collected in the Philippine Islands upon any goods——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee rose.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, do not interrupt me in the midst of a sentence.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I rose simply to ask for order. I am very anxious to hear what the gentleman is saying.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of the Whole will be in order.

Mr. PAYNE. As I have stated, the majority members of the committee were willing to concede the reduction of 25 per cent as proposed by the Senate, and also willing to concede what the Senate asks in regard to the abolition of export duties. But we very seriously question whether the Senate, by the use of half a page of language in trying to get rid of what are called export duties on goods coming from the Philippine Islands to the United States, has accomplished the object aimed at. It has occurred to us that a simple provision that no duty or tax shall be collected in the Philippine Islands upon any goods coming from those islands to the United States would be all sufficient and would make the meaning perfectly clear.

I confess that in reading over the Senate provision I can not determine whether the court would hold that the language of the Senate had made the proposition as clear as it ought to be. For this reason we wish to nonconcur in the Senate amendment.

So far as the amendment of my colleague is concerned, to reduce the duty to 50 per cent, the House well knows that that proposition came up in the Senate——

A MEMBER. Twenty-five per cent.

Mr. PAYNE. Was the amendment of my colleague 25 per cent?

Mr. McCLELLAN. The recommendation of Governor Taft was a reduction of 75 per cent. My proposition is to strike out "75" and insert "25."

Mr. PAYNE. Every member knows that an attempt was made in the Senate to reduce the duty to 50 per cent.

A MEMBER. Twenty-five.

Mr. PAYNE. A vote was taken on both propositions in the Senate—50 per cent and 25 per cent. There was full discussion in the Senate, especially on the proposition to reduce the duty to 50 per cent. But that amendment was beaten by an overwhelming vote.

Now, what we desire is to get this bill speedily into conference; and in order to do this, to dispose of these amendments in Committee of the Whole, to report them to the House for consideration, and then secure as soon as possible the passage of a bill providing revenue for these islands. The House will remember that this bill passed the House on the 17th of December. We passed it promptly in order to cut off importations, free of duty, from the Philippine Islands.

A few days after we passed the bill I was told by a large dealer that he was trying to get up a syndicate to bring here a large shipload of tobacco free of duty, but that the prompt action of the House had discouraged the syndicate, and that they had given up the project. They thought then the Senate would promptly take up the bill and dispose of it. The Senate did take it up. There have been many days of debate there on every other question except this. The Senate has finally passed the bill, and that cargo of tobacco has not come here yet. I want this bill passed before it does come, so that when it arrives it shall be compelled to pay into the revenue of the Philippine Islands 75 per cent duty. Therefore I hope that the Committee of the Whole will vote down the amendment offered by my colleague, will disagree to the amendment of the Senate, and will throw this question into conference, so that we may have in this bill a provision which everybody will understand.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, I voted against this bill when it passed the House, and I should be very glad to do anything now to defeat it. But the bill has passed the House, and it has been returned to us by the Senate with amendments. It will become a law very nearly as it is before us to-day. I do not offer a free-trade amendment, for section 1 of the House bill has already been adopted by the Senate. A proposition to allow Philippine goods to enter the United States free would have no possible chance of success. Therefore, while I should like to see free trade with the Philippine Islands, I feel that such a consummation is impossible, that the best we can obtain is some modification or improvement of a bad bill. I have offered an amendment to reduce the rate of duty to 25 per cent instead of 75 per cent, as proposed by the Senate amendment, because of statements made by Governor Taft in the hearings before the Senate committee. I read from page 165 of those hearings:

Senator ALLISON. If you were not obliged to have revenue to carry on the government of the islands, I suppose it would be beneficial to the islands to have absolute free trade?

Governor TAFT. Yes, sir, undoubtedly; and we limited our recommendation to at least a 50 per cent reduction, and now to 75, because we feel that we ought not to ask free trade with the United States while imposing a customs duty on the United States.

Then on page 229, at the hearing of February 8, he states that he wired General Wright on January 31, 1902, as follows:

Consult sugar tobacco men on probable effect 50 per cent reduction Dingley rates exports to United States. Manila hemp already on free list.

In reply to that he received the following:

With reference to your telegram of 31st ultimo, public session, sugar and tobacco interests favor a reduction of 75 per cent at least. State a reduction of 50 per cent leaves tariff almost prohibitive. Sugar price now very low. European market very dull on account of overproduction and low price beet sugar. Planters each have lost heavily by carabaos machinery, and otherwise sugar cultivation in a bad condition. Memorials received from sugar growers' associations, Negros and Panay, ask for free trade for this reason. Think a reduction of 75 per cent on sugar and tobacco would be a measure of relief and have excellent political effect here.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McCLELLAN) there were—ayes 75, noes 80.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. PAYNE and Mr. McCLELLAN.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 84, noes 107.

The CHAIRMAN. On this question the ayes are 84 and the noes 107. The noes have it, and the amendment is not agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I desire to move to concur in the Senate amendment with the following amendment. I have not a copy of the Senate bill except as it is printed. I will read my amendment:

Strike out, in line 4, beginning with the words "be levied, collected, and paid 75 per cent of the rates of duties," and all the words following in section 5 to and including the words "Philippine Islands," in line 4, page 2, and insert the following words: "Not be collected any rate of duty, but the trade between the Philippine Islands and the United States shall be free."

It would then read as follows:

Provided, That upon all articles the growth and product of the Philippine Archipelago coming into the United States from the Philippine Archipelago there shall not be collected any rate of duty, but the trade between the Philippine Islands and the United States shall be free.

I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that we ought to make any charge if they are part and parcel of the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will you object to adding the words "so long as they are a part of the United States?"

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. No; I have no objection to adding those words and will now add them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of the amendment after the word "shall," in line 4, and insert the words so that the amendment in full will read: "That upon all articles the growth and product of the Philippine Archipelago coming into the United States from the Philippine Archipelago there shall not be collected any rate of duty, but the trade between the Philippine Islands and the United States shall be free so long as they are a part of the United States.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that that it changes the part of the bill which has not been amended by the Senate. If the Chair will look at the first part of section 2, he will see that part has not been changed. This makes a material change in that part of the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Only a word, Mr. Chairman. Of course my amendment would not be in order to the first section, because the Senate did not amend the first section, but it is in order, it seems to me, for the second section, because the second section deals directly with this question: The rate of duty. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the fact that the two sections might then be inconsistent would not make it subject to a point of order I grant that the two sections, the first and second, if my amendment be adopted, would be inconsistent. All the authorities go to the point, however, that that does not make the second section or the amendment I offer obnoxious to the rules, as the Chair can very well understand.

It may be ground upon which gentlemen would vote against the second section, or my amendment, having adopted the first; but it does not make it obnoxious to the rule. it does not make it out of order because it is inconsistent. The House has a right to pass two inconsistent propositions in the same bill. They are not against the rules, they are not out of order because they are inconsistent; and I repeat, it may be that an inconsistent proposition coming later in the bill would be ground upon which a member should vote against the proposition, but it is not sufficient—and the authorities all go to that extent—for the Chair to hold that it is obnoxious to any rule, because the House has the right to insert in the same bill two inconsistent propositions, if it wishes to do so, without violating any parliamentary law. I can find the authority on that if the Chair doubts it.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this is an act temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes. It is solely a revenue bill, and its purpose is to raise revenues. Section 2, to which the amendment is offered, provides for the raising of revenues, and section 4, to which the Chair will observe there is no point of order pending, provides that the revenue provided for by section 2 shall not be paid into the Treasury of the United States, but be held as a separate fund and paid into the treasury of the Philippine Islands, to be used and expended for the government and benefit of said islands. Now, it is certainly not in order to offer as an amendment that which defeats the entire purpose of the bill; that which, if allowed, would be equivalent to striking out the enacting clause.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You say this is an act "temporarily to provide revenues for the Philippine Islands"—"temporarily." The act itself may be a temporary law; but is it the policy of the gentleman's party and the Administration to levy a tariff permanently on the products sent from the United States to the Philippines and from the Philippines to the United States? Is this policy permanent or not?

Mr. DALZELL. I am not discussing any question of policy. I am discussing the purpose of this bill and the relevancy of this point of order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I wanted to know whether the policy upon which this bill is based is permanent or whether both the law and this policy are temporary?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The authority which I mentioned a moment ago is a decision in the Forty-seventh Congress, and it has never been ruled otherwise:

The fact that a proposed amendment is inconsistent with the text or embodies a proposition already voted on constitutes a condition to be passed upon by the House and not by the Speaker.

That is the point I make, that it may be inconsistent, but the House must pass upon it and not the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order raised by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Now, then, Mr. Chairman, I want only a moment. It seems to me that we involve ourselves in confusions when we undertake to fix a duty between a country that belongs to or is a part of the United States and our own country. We already have free trade with Porto Rico, and with Hawaii, all of our Territories. Why not have it with the Philippines? I am not going to debate it; I simply submit the matter, because it seems to me it appeals directly to the sense of justice on the part of the members.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to levying a tariff upon products sent from the Philippines here or from the United States to the Philippine Islands. This is the culmination of the annexation policy of the Republican party. They did not care particularly about taxing imports from Porto Rico, and said so on the floor of this House, and they went further and said: "If under the Constitution you can not tax imports from Porto Rico, then you can not tax them from the Philippine Islands, and the tobacco and the sugar sent from the Philippine Islands will ruin the tobacco and sugar interests in the United States."

So they trumped up the Porto Rican tariff law, and upon that a lawsuit to test this question in the courts, and they did test it, and the sugar lords, tobacco men, and the Republican party won. They have the law now adjudged to suit them, and this bill follows as a result and for the purpose of excluding the product to the Philippine Islands from the United States that would otherwise interfere with this industrious, patriotic, and thoroughly American tobacco and sugar society.

Mr. Justice Brown, speaking for himself and for four of his associate justices (Fuller, Brewer, Harlan, Peckham), in the De Lima cases, held that Porto Rico was "domestic territory," and ceased to be "foreign country for any purpose" as soon as the treaty was ratified; that is, after cession and possession of that territory was given. Mr. Justice Brown, after having most elaborately reviewed all the decision and traced the practice of this Government down to the present era, said:

From this résumé of the decisions of this court—

That is, all the decisions of the court up to that hour—

the instructions of the Executive Departments, and the above acts of Congress, it it is evident, from 1803—

When we acquired the Louisiana purchase—the date of Mr. Gallatin's letter, to the present time, there is not a shred of authority, except the dictum in Fleming v. Page (practically overruled in Cross v. Harrison), for holding that a district ceded to and in the possession of the United States remains for any purpose a foreign country. Both these conditions—that is, cession and possession, must exist to produce a change of nationality for revenue purposes.

The words "ceded to and in the possession of" are italicized by the distinguished justice.

Justice Brown continues:

Possession is not alone sufficient, as was held in Fleming against Page; nor is a treaty ceding such territory sufficient without a surrender of possession; citing 8 Pet., 308; 14 Pet., 353, 406; 7 Ala., 899; 5 Ch. Rob., 97. The practice of the Executive, thus continued for more than a half century, is entitled to great weight, and should not be disregarded nor overturned except for cogent reasons, and unless it be clear that such construction be erroneous; citing 124 U. S., 236.

So that Porto Rico is not "for any purpose a foreign country," and ceased to be such when cession and possession were given by Spain to the United States, and this has been the practice of this Government in "the executive department for more than half a century," and has always been the law.

We acquired the Philippines and Porto Rico under the same treaty, and the Supreme Court, in the recent Diamond Rings case, applied the same rule of law to the Philippines as was here applied in the De Lima case. Both territories ceased to be "foreign for any purpose" and became "domestic territory," the court held, when the treaty was ratified.

Porto Rico has free trade with us; so has always Alaska had after we acquired her, June 20, 1867; so has Hawaii. Why not the Philippines? The Philippines are "domestic territory of the United States;" I contend, "a part of the United States." Why should the Philippines be treated, be taxed, as "foreign country," when she is "domestic territory?" Did not the Supreme Court say that the Philippines, as did Porto Rico, ceased to be "foreign country for any purpose" when the treaty was ratified, and has this not been the practice with the Executive Departments all the history of our Republic after cession and possession? Why this discrimination? Why this unjust and unequal taxation?

Did not President McKinley say that our flag did not mean one thing in the Tropics and another in this country? Why this new and wicked policy? You have crushed the uniformity clause of the Constitution to do this, but is this policy right? The inhabitants of the Philippines are "subject to the jurisdiction of the United States," and we punish them if they fail to obey our laws and yield peaceful allegiance to our sovereignty. Why treat these people unlike the people in our Territories out west of the Mississippi, who never had such laws applied to them? But under the law now you can treat them as you are about to treat the Filipinos.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in the De Lima case five judges agreed, and that, too, Mr. Chairman, after the court had, with great industry, investigated every Executive order that has ever been made on this subject and all the cases. Not a single President of the United States, whether Whig, Democrat, Know-nothing, Free Soiler, or Republican, ever undertook to do what the Republicans are doing to-day; and I will let my right hand forget its cunning and my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth before I shall impose on these people such an infamous law. [Derisive applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The House will be in order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, when we annexed the little Territory of Alaska Andrew Johnson, of Tennessee, was then President, Mr. Seward was Secretary of State, William M. Evarts was Attorney-General, and Hugh McCulloch Secretary of the Treasury, and the question was presented to them, a few days after the treaty was ratified, asking if goods from Alaska could come into the United States duty free?

What did Mr. McCulloch, a distinguished Republican, Mr. Chairman, then and there, April 6, 1868, say? He said the moment the treaty was ratified that they were entitled to free entry into our ports. He said:

The request for the free entry of said oil was made on the ground that the oil was shipped from Sitka after the ratification of the treaty by which the Territory of Alaska became the property of the United States. The treaty in question was ratified on the 20th of June, 1867, and the collector at San Francisco has reported that the manifest of the vessel shows the oil to have been shipped from Alaska on the 6th day of July, 1867, and that the shipment consisted of 52 packages. Under these circumstances you are hereby authorized to admit the said 52 packages of oil free of duty.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Just a few minutes more, Mr. Chairman. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks that his time be extended for two minutes. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. DALZELL. Go ahead.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no objection.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You dilettante gentlemen on the other side do not want to hear what we have done heretofore contrasted with what you want to do to-day.

In the second letter they did not simply rely upon the short opinion which Secretary McCulloch gave, but they relied upon the case of Cross against Harrison, and said that after the treaty was ratified we had no right to levy a tax on the products from Alaska. I will read from Mr. Justice Brown on this point as follows:

This position was indorsed by the Secretary of State, Mr. Seward, in a letter dated January 30, 1869, in which he said: "I understand the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Harrison v. Cross (16 How., 164) to declare its opinion that upon the addition to the United States of new territory by conquest and cession the acts regulating foreign commerce attach to and take effect within such territory ipso facto and without any fresh act of legislation expressly giving such extension to the preexisting laws. I can see no reason for a discrimination in this effect between acts regulating foreign commerce and the laws regulating intercourse with the Indian tribes."

This is found in the De Lima case.

The case of Cross v. Harrison exploited the policy of President Polk, of Tennessee, and his policy and the law as he understood it, and as the Democrats then, as now, contend it is or should be, and yet a bare majority of the present Supreme Court has overruled this case, and the Republicans repudiate both the law and the policy of Polk and all his successors—indeed, the fixed policy of this Republic heretofore. The Republicans have the law now to suit them—goods from Porto Rico to come into our ports free and those from the Philippine Islands taxed—and when I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] if this is the fixed policy of his party, he avoids the question. But we know it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAYNE. Debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask unanimous consent to have five minutes in which to speak.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nevada asks unanimous consent that he may address the committee for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. I will not object to this, but I shall do so to any other request for a speech on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, and in doing so I wish to state my reasons. I favor immediate action by the United States declaring that it holds the Philippine Islands only in trust for the Filipino people, and that it is its purpose, when a stable government shall be organized there, to leave those islands to a government of their own people. Resolutions to that effect have been offered again and again in both Houses, and have failed of passage; and the question to-day on this bill is whether the Philippine Islands constitute foreign country or whether they are part of the United States. They have been determined by action of the courts to be part of the United States, and my view is there should be but one boundary to the Republic, and not two. In that boundary there should be free trade, and without that boundary impartial trade. Just as outside of that boundary I would oppose partial trade relations with different people, involving discontent and jealousy on the part of others, so inside of that boundary I object to anything like partial trade and favor absolute free trade.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee) there were—69 ayes and 67 noes.

Mr. PAYNE. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Mr. PAYNE and Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee as tellers.

The question was again taken; and the tellers reported—95 ayes and 109 noes.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to recommend that the House nonconcur in Senate amendment numbered 1.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 8, after the word "all," insert the word "foreign."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I move to recommend nonconcurrence in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, No. 3, as follows:

On page 2, line 9, after the word "archipelago," insert:

"And in addition to any tonnage dues or taxes now imposed by the government of the Philippine Islands upon all foreign vessels, except vessels of Spain owned by Spanish subjects engaged in traffic between the ports of the Philippine Archipelago."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I move to recommend nonconcurrence in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, No. 4, as follows:

On page 2, lines 11 and 12, strike out the words "otherwise provided by law" and insert the words "July 1, 1904."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I move to recommend that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, numbered 5, as follows:

On page 2, line 17, after the words "United States," insert:

"Or between ports in the Philippine Archipelago: And provided further, That the Philippine Commission shall be authorized and empowered to issue licenses to all vessels or other craft now engaged in lighterage or other exclusively harbor business; but after the passage of this act such licenses except as herein provided shall be issued only to vessels or other craft built in the Philippine Islands, or in the United States and owned by citizens of the United States or by inhabitants of the Philippine Islands."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I move to recommend that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to nonconcur in amendments 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10. They all refer to the same section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to nonconcur in amendments numbered 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read the next amendment, numbered 11, as follows:

On page 4, line 2, after the word "prescribed," insert:

"And all taxes paid upon such articles shipped to the Philippine Islands since November 15, 1901, under the decision of the Secretary of the Treasury of that date, shall be refunded to the parties who have paid the same, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, and a sum sufficient to make such payment is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I move to recommend that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York what objection there is to concurring in that amendment?

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to send the whole thing to conference. I do not see any particular objection to this amendment, but I want to examine it in connection with the Treasury officials and see whether it needs amendment or not.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Very well.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, numbered 12, as follows:

On page 4, line 3, strike out the word "imported."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I move to recommend that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, numbered 13, as follows:

On page 4, after line 9, insert:

"SEC. 7. That merchandise in bonded warehouse or otherwise in the custody and control of the officers of the customs, upon which duties have been paid, shall be entitled, on shipment to the Philippine Islands within three years from the date of the original arrival, to a return of the duties paid, less 1 per cent, and merchandise upon which duties have not been paid may be shipped without the payment of duties to the Philippine Islands within said period, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee recommend nonconcurrence in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, numbered 14, as follows:

On page 4, after line 9, insert:

SEC. 8. That an appeal as respects all articles coming into the Philippine Archipelago from the United States, and all articles coming into the United States from the Philippine Archipelago, shall be allowed as provided in an act entitled "An act to simplify the laws in relation to the collection of revenues," approved on the 10th day of June, 1890 (26 Stat., 131), as amended by an act entitled "An act to provide for the Government and to encourage the industries of the United States," approved July 24, 1897 (30 Stat., 151).

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee recommend that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, numbered 15, as follows:

On page 4, after line 9, insert:

SEC. 9. That no person in the Philippine Islands shall, under the authority of the United States, be convicted of treason by any tribunal, civil or military, unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court: Provided, That there shall be no conviction or punishment under the authority of the United States by any tribunal, civil or military, of any mother or father for failing to give information against his or her child, or of any son or daughter for failing to give information against his or her mother or father, or of any husband for failing to give information against his wife, or of any wife for failing to give information against her husband.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee recommend nonconcurrence in this amendment.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee recommend that the House concur in the Senate amendment with the amendment that I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the Senate amendment 15 by striking out, on page 7 of the printed bill, in line 4, all after the word "military" and insert in place thereof "of any person for failing to give information against any other person."

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, as this Senate amendment stands, no person can be indicted or convicted for failing to give information against his son, or his daughter, or his wife, or her father, or her daughter, or her husband. Manifestly, it seems to me, the same general reasons for those exceptions ought to extend to brothers and sisters. It seems to me it is very dangerous for Congress to allow the conviction of any person for a mere failure to give information. I believe that this amendment undertakes to treat as treason the failure to give information. I have not before me the law adopted by the Philippine Commission, and I do not remember the specific acts that are made treasonable; but certainly this Congress ought never to permit a person to be convicted of treason unless there has been some overt act treasonable in itself. It seems to me that this section of the Constitution of the United States, which I shall read, is broad enough to go to the Philippines, even if the other provisions of the Constitution are held not to go there:

SEC. 3. Treason against the United States shall consist only in levying war against them or in adhering to their enemies—giving them aid and comfort. No person shall be convicted of treason unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court.

Now, if you consider the failure to give information an overt act, which appears unreasonable, it seems to me you might get a hundred witnesses against any man who has not opened his mouth, and, under a section of the laws of the Philippine Commission, might have him convicted of treason; because if this law of the Philippine Commission is allowed to stand, even limited by the Senate amendment, the failure to give information must be considered an overt act, in order to be in harmony with the Constitution.

It seems to me that the amendment I have proposed will be a safeguard to the law-abiding people of the Philippines, especially in these days when there is trouble and difficulty and insurrection there. Those people there who are men of peace should be entitled to the protection of this clause of the United States Constitution. I hope, therefore, that gentlemen on the other side of the House will stand with us to prevent the enactment of a law that will permit the failure to give information by a brother or sister against their brother to be treated as a treasonable act.

These are the reasons which, in my judgment, ought to support us in adopting this amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not prevail. Of course I have no objection to all of the amendment before the word "Provided," which is simply a recital of the provision of the Constitution of the United States. As to the other paragraph, I do not know—and I read over the Senate discussion—why it was put in or what there is in the laws of the Philippine Islands that requires any such provision. I do not for a moment suppose that it is declared to be an overt act of treason to fail to give information under the circumstances referred to in the amendment. But however that may be, I do know that as a general rule the laws of the Philippine Commission on the subject of sedition and treason are the laws of nearly every State of this Union, as well as the laws of the United States as embraced in the Revised Statutes. It seems to me that all it can be necessary to do in this bill in regard to this matter is to insert this clause of the Constitution and put it in action in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. We can not hear the gentleman from New York over here.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, I am sorry the gentleman has not heard me, for I am just concluding my remarks. I hope the gentleman's amendment will not prevail, but that we shall get this whole matter into the conference, where we can examine the subject critically and report to the House. It will then be for the House to determine whether it will accept the judgment of the conferees.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then I hope my friend from New York will let me ask him just one question.

Mr. PAYNE. I can not, as debate is exhausted.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman spoke just now of the laws enacted by the Taft Commission. The gentleman knows how much I esteem Governor Taft and how much I esteem my neighbor, General Wright. But that Commission has passed a law which prohibits the people of that territory from even petitioning the Commission for a redress of grievances—from even petitioning the President of the United States or Congress for a redress of grievances. Does the gentleman approve such a law as that? Is that law repealed by this bill; and if not, why not?

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman states that the Philippine Commission has passed such a law. I have not examined their laws.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman approve such a provision?

Mr. PAYNE. I do know that the laws of that Commission on this subject have been examined and compared with the laws of the various States of the Union, including, I think, the gentleman's own State, and the Revised Statutes of the United States, and those laws of that Commission are fully as lenient toward treason as the laws of any State of the United States.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. There never has been in the State of Tennessee, and there never will be in that State, or, as I believe, in any other State, any provision which will undertake to deny or abridge the right of the people to petition the lawmaking power for a redress of grievances. Attorney-General Butler, many years ago, when the territory now the State of Arkansas was seeking statehood and other relief, passed on that question, and so did the Congress of the United States; and they held that the people of a Territory, regardless of their Territorial condition, have the inherent right to petition the lawmaking power. But this right has been denied in the Philippine Islands. The right of petition is one of the most valued and precious rights that have blessed the inhabitants of this Republic, and to deny the right is tyrannous, I care not by whom or where it is done.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN, there were—ayes 73, noes 81.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. PAYNE and Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 86, noes 112.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I move to concur in the last amendment—amendment No. 15—with the proviso which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That, subject to the provisions hereinafter set forth, the United States of America hereby relinquish all claim of sovereignty over and title to the archipelago known as the Philippine Islands.

That from and after the passage of this act said archipelago shall be foreign territory, and all goods entering the United States therefrom shall be subject to the same duties, customs, and imposts as are now, or may hereafter be, prescribed by law for goods entered from other foreign countries: Provided, That during the temporary occupation of said islands, as hereinafter provided, all trade between the same and the United States shall be free.

That the United States shall continue to occupy and govern said archipelago until the people thereof have established a stable government, and until sufficient guaranties have been obtained for the performance of our treaty obligations with Spain, for the safety of those inhabitants who have adhered to the United States, and for the maintenance and protection of all rights which have accrued under their authority.

That as soon as these results have been accomplished it is declared to be the purpose of the United States, which the President is directed to carry into effect, to withdraw from said islands and leave the government, control, and sovereignty thereof to the inhabitants of the same, retaining only such military, naval, and coaling stations as may be designated by the Government of the United States.

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains that point of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Although the Chair has already ruled, I think I can show that we have a right to attach the proviso to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks you would not have the right to attach a proviso of that character.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Very well.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, my motion was to nonconcur.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to nonconcur in the amendment of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the committee do now rise and report back to the House the bill and amendments with the recommendation that the House do nonconcur in the amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. DALZELL having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HEPBURN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration sundry Senate amendments to House bill 5833, and had directed him to report them back with the recommendation of nonconcurrence.

Mr. PAYNE. I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded on any of the amendments? If not, the question is on the amendments in gross.

The amendments were nonconcurred in.

On motion of Mr. PAYNE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the House ask for a conference on the disagreement of the House to the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to, and the following conferees were appointed on the part of the House: Messrs. PAYNE, DALZELL, and RICHARDSON of Tennessee.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 27, 1902.

The Senate met at 11.45 o'clock a. m.

The Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday last was read and approved.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to say that on Monday last he requested the clerks not to call the names of the two Senators from South Carolina, they being by a resolution of the Senate in contempt of the body. On Tuesday he requested the clerks to read the names in the event there was a roll call. He did this not because he doubted in the least the propriety of the action he took on Monday. He did it because he recognized that it was a grave question, and he preferred to be in a position where, if it again arose, it could be by him submitted to the decision of the Senate and thus relieve the Chair from the responsibility.

The Chair on Tuesday morning noticed by the Journal that the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] entered an appeal to one of his decisions. In the confusion in the Senate at the time and owing to the cloud of points of order that were raised and to the fact that the Senator from Washington gave the Chair no opportunity at the time to state the appeal to the Senate, but proceeded to address the body, he forgot entirely the appeal. He begs the pardon of the Senator from Washington for that forgetfulness, and wishes to assure him that if the Chair should deliberately refuse to entertain at any time, when it was properly made, an appeal, he never could pardon himself.

PROTEST OF SENATOR B. R. TILLMAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] sent a note yesterday to the President of the Senate in which he asked that he might be heard on a question of the highest privilege. The Chair had informed the Senator from South Carolina that he could not recognize him until he had been relieved from the contempt declared by the Senate resolution. Thereupon the Senator, in his note, asked that the consent of the Senate might be obtained that he rise to such a question. While the Chair doubts the propriety of that request, he gives the Senator from South Carolina the benefit of the doubt and asks unanimous consent that at some other time, on tomorrow, he may be heard. Is there objection?

Mr. TURNER and Mr. BURROWS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington.

Mr. TURNER. I think it is proper, since the President pro tempore has made this statement to the Senate, that I now take this opportunity to present to the Senate and ask to have spread upon the record the protest of the senior Senator from South Carolina on the action of the President pro tempore and to which the Chair has just referred. In this connection, I wish to say that I endeavored to present this protest at the time the action was taken to which the President pro tempore has referred, and was prevented from doing so by a question of order. Later on, after the voting had ceased on the bill then pending before the Senate, I endeavored again to present the protest and was taken off the floor, while endeavoring to do so, by a motion of the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to proceed to the consideration of executive business. Since that time there have been two adjournments of the Senate soon after meeting, which have prevented me from performing this duty, and I now beg leave to perform it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington that the protest may be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President——

Mr. TURNER. No, Mr. President; I have consulted the precedents somewhat. I find that this practice of protests originated in the House of Lords, and that it is laid down by the commentators upon parliamentary law that it is the uniform custom in the United States, which has been exemplified, I believe, in this body on more than one occasion, that any member shall have the right to present a written protest either when he thinks his rights have been invaded or when the Constitution or laws of the country have been invaded. I insist that it shall be spread upon the records of the Senate, just what I asked to be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the Senator from Washington is right in his contention, and it will be printed in the RECORD as a protest. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, while there may be an occasion when I may make no objection to it, yet at this time I shall be obliged to object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will receive a message from the President of the United States.

[The message from the President appears later in the proceedings.]

Mr. TURNER. I did not catch the sense of the remark made by the Senator from Michigan, but I am told by those around me that he has objected to the reception of the protest.

Mr. BURROWS. No.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No.

Mr. BURROWS. Not at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has objected to the request of the Senator from South Carolina. The protest will be printed in the RECORD, and it will be spread on the Journal at the same time. That was the request of the Senator, the Chair thinks.

The protest is as follows:

The undersigned, holding a commission in this body from the sovereign State of South Carolina, as one of its Senators, and having been in the full and undisputed exercise of that high office for seven years last past, solemnly protests against the ruling of the Presiding Officer sustained by the vote of a majority of the Senate, depriving him of the right as such Senator to vote on the pending measure and to take part generally in the proceedings of the Senate, and he respectfully asks that this, his protest, may be spread on the Journals of the Senate.

The office of Senator of the United States is a high constitutional office. Section 3 of Article I of the Constitution declares:

> The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the legislature thereof for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote.

I respectfully insist that a right and duty is here conferred and imposed on each Senator, and that so long as he remains a member of the Senate he can not be deprived of that right and duty. He may be punished for disorderly behavior by a majority vote of the Senate, and he may be expelled from the Senate by a two-thirds vote. This is declared by the second clause of section 5, Article I, of the Constitution, but the right to punish for disorderly procedure can not proceed to the extent of depriving him of his voice and vote in this body unless and until the punishment against him shall have been adjudged to be one of expulsion. While it is true that the undersigned has been adjudged to be in contempt of the Senate for disorder committed in its presence on the last legislative day before this, an act committed in the heat of blood and which he regrets and has apologized for, that incident has passed and gone and he is now in his place as a Senator, desirous of proceeding in order and in accordance with the rules of the Senate in the performance of the high duties intrusted to him by the authority and under the seal of the State of South Carolina. The second section of Rule XIX of this body, which provides that a Senator called to order for transgressing the rules of the Senate shall sit down and not proceed without leave of the Senate, is a rule to secure the orderly conduct of debate, and its direction that a Senator called to order shall sit down and not proceed without leave of the Senate has relation to the debate then immediately progressing and nothing else.

Such has been its uniform construction and application, and the attempt now to stretch it so as to indefinitely disqualify Senators from performing their duties here, even to the extent of depriving them of the right to vote, is an invasion of the privilege of Senators and a grave breach of the constitutional right of each State to equal representation in this body. Under such a construction of that rule the majority may force a cloture in this body by simply declaring each member of the minority in contempt. Under such a construction, moreover, a minority may be transformed into a majority, if, taking advantage of the accidental absence of majority members, the minority, being temporarily in the majority, shall declare a sufficient number of majority members to be in contempt. The rule in question was never intended for such a purpose and ought not to be given a construction which can make such a result possible.

In making this protest the undersigned is not moved by considerations personal to himself. He is not restive under the just discipline of this body. He is ready to cheerfully accept such order as it may make for the vindication of its rights and its dignity. But until that order shall have been made, and until it shall have adjudged his expulsion, if the Senate thinks his offense merits that punishment, he can not silently permit his State to be deprived of its full constitutional representation on the floor of this Chamber, which is most notably exemplified in its right through its Senators to vote and speak upon every measure before it. All of which is respectfully submitted for the consideration of the Senate.

B. R. TILLMAN,
Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOAR. I think the protest should also be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections and be before them with the other matters to be disposed of. I make that request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that the protest be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. TURNER. If the protest be spread upon the Journal of the Senate, of course——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That has been ordered.

Mr. TURNER. I have no objection to the reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the protest will be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I have not looked into the precedents in this matter. Therefore, of course, I am in a position to be corrected by Senators. I hope the Chair will withhold the ruling that there is no objection. We may not be able to pass upon this matter right now.

It occurs to me, without having an opportunity to examine it, that the matter of protest is not one for the action of the body at all. It is a protest which is final in its character, so far as that particular document is concerned.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Georgia is not heard in this part of the Chamber.

Mr. BACON. I beg the Senator's pardon. I was simply saying that I have not had the opportunity to look into the precedents as to whether a protest which had been received by the body and spread upon its minutes was thereafter a matter for reference to a committee as if it were something which required further action.

I thought the time was so short now that we could not possibly look into that matter to-day, and I simply asked, without assuming to suggest a final conclusion on the subject, that the Chair withhold the announcement which he was about to make, and in fact had made, that there was no objection to the request for a reference. There may be none; I am not prepared to say that there will be any; but certainly it is a very important matter as a precedent as to whether a protest, after it has been received by the body and ordered to be spread both upon the Journal and in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, is a subject thereafter for reference as a bill or resolution would be, or any matter which required further action.

I repeat, Mr. President, in order that I may not be misunderstood, I have not had the opportunity to examine the question and I do not wish to express a final conclusion on the matter, but I think in view of the present emergency it ought to go over and be determined hereafter.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, it seems to me that the protest is in the nature of a petition, and that respect for it is manifested by any act which implies further respectful consideration. So the reference to a committee is not a matter of disrespect, but of high respect to the protest. Otherwise, though the occurrence of its presentation is spread upon the Journal, the Senate treats it with absolute silence and disregard. I suppose any document in the possession of the Senate, a petition, a bill, a resolution, or other document, may be referred to one of its committees for consideration. The resolutions of State legislatures are frequently so referred, though they are not petitions, and various protests of commercial bodies. Even essays are not infrequently presented here and printed as documents and then referred to committees.

I do not wish to make any point if the Senator from Georgia has grave doubts, but I suppose that to receive the protest with no further notice would be a mark of disrespect to the gentleman who has presented it.

Mr. BACON. I hope it may go over. That is all I ask now, Mr. President.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 21st instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 910) to extend the time for the completion of a bridge across the Missouri River; and

An act (S. 1165) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River at or near the city of St. Joseph, Mo.

The message also announced that the President had on the 24th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 73) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River near Fort Gibson, Ind. T.;

An act (S. 651) extending the time within which the Mississippi River, Hamburg and Western Railway Company is authorized to construct a bridge across the Bayou Bartholomew, in Arkansas;

An act (S. 1838) authorizing the Memphis, Helena and Louisiana Railway Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Arkansas River, in the State of Arkansas; and

An act (S. 1839) authorizing the Memphis, Helena and Louisiana Railway Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the White River, in the State of Arkansas.

The message further announced that the President had on the 26th instant approved and signed the act (S. 650) granting to the White River Railway Company the right to construct, maintain, and operate a single-track railway across the lands of the United States in the south half of the southwest quarter of section 22, township 14 north, range 8 west, of the fifth principal meridian, in the county of Independence, in the State of Arkansas, reserved for use in connection with the construction of Lock No. 3, Upper White River, Arkansas.

MEMORIAL EXERCISES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The House has notified the Senate that it is prepared to receive this body for the memorial exercises. What action will the Senate take in relation to the day? Will the Senate take a recess until 3 o'clock or adjourn?

Mr. HOAR. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. ALDRICH and Mr. HALE. Let us adjourn now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. BACON. That is right.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock meridian) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 28, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 27, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

The Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, Almighty God, that our nation will honor itself to-day in a memorial service to our late lamented and beloved President. May it teach us all the uncertainty of life and help us by good works to be prepared for that change which must come to us all. In the name of Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MEMORIAL OF WILLIAM M'KINLEY.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the concurrent resolution governing our action to-day, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the melancholy event of the violent and tragic death of William McKinley, late President of the United States, having occurred during the recess of Congress, and the two Houses sharing in the general grief and desiring to manifest their sensibility upon the occasion of the public bereavement: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress will assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on a day and hour fixed and announced by the joint committee, to wit, Thursday, February 27, 1902, and that in the presence of the two Houses there assembled an address upon the life and character of William McKinley, late President of the United States, be pronounced by Hon. John Hay, and that the President of the Senate pro tempore and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be requested to invite the President and ex-President of the United States, ex-Vice-Presidents, the heads of the several Departments, the judges of the Supreme Court, the representatives of the foreign Governments, the governors of the several States, the Lieutenant-General of the Army, and the Admiral of the Navy, and such officers of the Army and Navy as have received the thanks of Congress who may then be at the seat of government, to be present on the occasion, and such others as may be suggested by the executive committee.

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to transmit a copy of these resolutions to Mrs. Ida S. McKinley, and to assure her of the profound sympathy of the two Houses of Congress for her deep personal affliction, and of their sincere condolence for the late national bereavement.

The following was the official programme of arrangements, prepared by the joint committee of the two Houses:

The Capitol will be closed on the morning of the 27th day of February, 1902, to all except members and officers of Congress.

At 10 o'clock the east door leading to the Rotunda will be opened to those to whom invitations have been extended under the joint resolution of Congress by the presiding officers of the two Houses, and to those holding tickets of admission to the galleries.

The Hall of the House of Representatives will be opened for the admission of Representatives and to those who have invitations, who will be conducted to the seats assigned to them, as follows:

The President and ex-President of the United States and special guests will be seated in front of the Speaker.

The Chief Justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court will occupy seats next to the President and ex-President and special guests, on the right of the Speaker.

The Cabinet officers, the Lieutenant-General of the Army, and the Admiral of the Navy, and the officers of the Army and Navy who, by name, have received the thanks of Congress, will occupy seats on the left of the Speaker.

The chief justices and judges of the Court of Claims and the chief justice and associate justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia will occupy seats directly in the rear of the Supreme Court.

The diplomatic corps will occupy the front row of seats.

Ex-Vice-Presidents and Senators will occupy seats in the second, third, fourth, and fifth rows on east side of main aisle.

Representatives will occupy seats on west side of main aisle and in rear of the Senators on east side.

Commissioners of the District, governors of States and Territories, assistant heads of departments, and invited guests will occupy seats in rear of Representatives.

The executive gallery will be reserved exclusively for the families of the Supreme Court, and the families of the Cabinet, and the invited guests of the President. Tickets thereto will be delivered to the secretary to the President.

The diplomatic gallery will be reserved exclusively for the families of the members of the diplomatic corps. Tickets thereto will be delivered to the Secretary of State.

The reporters' gallery will be reserved exclusively for the use of the reporters for the press. Tickets thereto will be delivered to the press committee.

The official reporters of the Senate and of the House will occupy the reporters' desk in front of the Clerk's table.

The House of Representatives will be called to order by the Speaker at 12 o'clock.

The Marine Band will be in attendance.

The Senate will assemble at 12 o'clock, and immediately after prayer will proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The diplomatic corps will meet at half-past 11 o'clock in Representatives' lobby, and be conducted by the Sargeant-at-Arms of the House to the seats assigned them.

The President of the Senate will occupy the Speaker's chair.

The Speaker of the House will occupy a seat at the left of the President of the Senate.

The Chaplains of the Senate and of the House will occupy seats next the presiding officers of their respective Houses.

The chairmen of the joint committee of arrangements will occupy seats at the right and left of the orator, and next to them will be seated the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House.

The other officers of the Senate and of the House will occupy seats on the floor, at the right and the left of the Speaker's platform.

Prayer will be offered by the Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., Chaplain of the House of Representatives.

The presiding officer will then present the orator of the day.

The benediction will be pronounced by the Rev. W. H. Milburn, Chaplain of the Senate.

By reason of the limited capacity of the galleries the number of tickets is necessarily restricted, and will be distributed as follows:

To each Senator, Representative, and Delegate, 2 tickets.

No person will be admitted to the Capitol except on presentation of a ticket, which will be good only for the place indicated.

The Architect of the Capitol and the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate and the Doorkeeper of the House are charged with the execution of these arrangements.

J. B. FORAKER,
C. H. GROSVENOR,
Chairmen Joint Committee.

The Doorkeeper, Mr. WILLIAM J. GLENN, announced
The President of the United States and his Cabinet,
The President pro tempore and the Senate,
The Chief Justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court,
The Lieutenant-General of the Army,
The diplomatic corps,
His Royal Highness Prince Henry of Prussia,
And other invited guests.

The SPEAKER. In pursuance of arrangements made by the joint committee of Congress, the President pro tempore of the Senate will conduct the further proceedings of this joint meeting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore of the Senate. The two Houses of Congress, with their invited guests, are assembled to pay a tribute to the memory of our late greatly loved and deeply lamented President, William McKinley. You will now unite in prayer with the Rev. Mr. COUDEN, Chaplain of the House of Representatives.

The Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., Chaplain of the House of Representatives, offered the following prayer:

O Lord God and Father of us all, in whose all-encircling love we dwell, we lift up our hearts in gratitude to Thee for that wise and beneficent Providence which shaped and has guided the destiny of our nation through all the vicissitudes of the past, and for that long line of illustrious men who, susceptible to that heavenly influence, gave their minds and hearts to the nation's good, weaving their characters into its fibers, making it strong and great. We are here in memory of one of her noblest sons, to whom no greater tribute can be rendered, except a nation's tears, than this distinguished presence. We respect him because he respected his country. We love him because he loved her people. We honor him because he honored and revered her sacred institutions and poured out his heart's blood for them.

God help us to cherish his memory in our hearts and emulate his virtues that we may leave behind us a record well pleasing in

Thy sight. We thank Thee for his life, for his services as a soldier, a citizen, and a statesman; we thank Thee that his countrymen will build monuments in his memory, that historians will record his deeds, but above all we thank Thee for that monument more grand and imposing than the mind of man has yet conceived which he builded for himself and for that unwritten record which Heaven alone can reveal. Yea, we bless Thee for his public life and inestimable services, but we are not unmindful of the beautiful example of his private life—warm in his friendships; a dutiful son; an affectionate brother; a tender, loving husband, "with malice toward none and charity for all." A Christian, ever turning with faith and confidence to his God for strength and guidance; his life was clean, his work noble, his faith sublime, his death glorious. "Good-bye; good-bye, all. It is God's way; His will be done."

Tenderly care, we beseech Thee, O God our Father, for his companion in her widowhood, and bring her at last with him to dwell in Thy presence forever. Continue, we pray Thee, to care for us as a people, and bless all our righteous endeavors. Guide the lawmakers of our land that good government may more and more obtain. Let Thy blessing descend in full measure upon our President and all his counselors that the laws may be administered in justice and equity. Be a light and a guide to those who interpret and judge those laws. Bless our people everywhere, and keep us in peace with all the world. Let Thy kingdom come into all hearts, and Thy will be done in all lives, that the name of Our Father may be hallowed in all the earth, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore of the Senate. It is now the agreeable duty of your presiding officer to present the Hon. John Hay, who has been selected by a committee of Congress to deliver the address on this occasion.

The Hon. John Hay then delivered the following address:

WILLIAM M'KINLEY.

For the third time the Congress of the United States are assembled to commemorate the life and the death of a President slain by the hand of an assassin. The attention of the future historian will be attracted to the features which reappear with startling sameness in all three of these awful crimes: the uselessness, the utter lack of consequence of the act; the obscurity, the insignificance of the criminal; the blamelessness—so far as in our sphere of existence the best of men may be held blameless—of the victim. Not one of our murdered Presidents had an enemy in the world; they were all of such preeminent purity of life that no pretext could be given for the attack of passional crime; they were all men of democratic instincts who could never have offended the most jealous advocates of equality; they were of kindly and generous nature, to whom wrong or injustice was impossible; of moderate fortune, whose slender means nobody could envy. They were men of austere virtue, of tender heart, of eminent abilities, which they had devoted with single minds to the good of the Republic. If ever men walked before God and man without blame, it was these three rulers of our people. The only temptation to attack their lives offered was their gentle radiance—to eyes hating the light that was offense enough.

The stupid uselessness of such an infamy affronts the common sense of the world. One can conceive how the death of a dictator may change the political conditions of an Empire; how the extinction of a narrowing line of kings may bring in an alien dynasty. But in a well-ordered Republic like ours, the ruler may fall, but the State feels no tremor. Our beloved and revered leader is gone—but the natural process of our laws provides us a successor, identical in purpose and ideals, nourished by the same teachings, inspired by the same principles, pledged by tender affection as well as by high loyalty to carry to completion the immense task committed to his hands, and to smite with iron severity every manifestation of that hideous crime which his mild predecessor, with his dying breath, forgave. The sayings of celestial wisdom have no date; the words that reach us, over two thousand years, out of the darkest hour of gloom the world has ever known, are true to the life to-day: "They know not what they do." The blow struck at our dear friend and ruler was as deadly as blind hate could make it; but the blow struck at anarchy was deadlier still.

What a world of insoluble problems such an event excites in the mind! Not merely in its personal, but in its public aspects, it presents a paradox not to be comprehended. Under a system of government so free and so impartial that we recognize its existence only by its benefactions; under a social order so purely democratic that classes can not exist in it, affording opportunities so universal that even conditions are as changing as the winds, where the laborer of to-day is the capitalist of to-morrow; under laws which are the result of ages of evolution, so uniform and so beneficent that the President has just the same rights and privileges as the artisan; we see the same hellish growth of hatred and murder which dogs equally the footsteps of benevolent monarchs and blood-stained despots. How many countries can join with us in the community of a kindred sorrow! I will not speak of those distant regions where assassination enters into the daily life of government. But among the nations bound to us by the ties of familiar intercourse—who can forget that wise and high-minded Autocrat who had earned the proud title of the Liberator? that enlightened and magnanimous citizen whom France still mourns? that brave and chivalrous King of Italy who only lived for his people? and, saddest of all, that lovely and sorrowing Empress, whose harmless life could hardly have excited the animosity of a demon. Against that devilish spirit nothing avails—neither virtue, nor patriotism, nor age nor youth, nor conscience nor pity. We can not even say that education is a sufficient safeguard against this baleful evil—for most of the wretches whose crimes have so shocked humanity in recent years are men not unlettered, who have gone from the common schools, through murder, to the scaffold.

Our minds can not discern the origin, nor conceive the extent of wickedness so perverse and so cruel; but this does not exempt us from the duty of trying to control and counteract it. We do not understand what electricity is; whence it comes or what its hidden properties may be. But we know it as a mighty force for good or evil—and so with the painful toil of years, men of learning and skill have labored to store and to subjugate it, to neutralize, and even to employ its destructive energies. This problem of anarchy is dark and intricate, but it ought to be within the compass of democratic government—although no sane mind can fathom the mysteries of these untracked and orbitless natures—to guard against their aberrations, to take away from them the hope of escape, the long luxury of scandalous days in court, the unwholesome sympathy of hysterical degenerates, and so by degrees to make the crime not worth committing, even to these abnormal and distorted souls.

It would be presumptuous for me in this presence to suggest the details of remedial legislation for a malady so malignant. That task may safely be left to the skill and patience of the National Congress, which have never been found unequal to any such emergency. The country believes that the memory of three murdered comrades of yours—all of whose voices still haunt these walls—will be a sufficient inspiration to enable you to solve even this abstruse and painful problem, which has dimmed so many pages of history with blood and with tears.

Before an audience less sympathetic than this, I should not dare to speak of that great career which we have met to commemorate. But we are all his friends, and friends do not criticise each other's words about an open grave. I thank you for the honor you have done me in inviting me here, and not less for the kind forbearance I know I shall have from you in my most inadequate efforts to speak of him worthily.

The life of William McKinley was, from his birth to his death, typically American. There is no environment, I should say, anywhere else in the world which could produce just such a character. He was born into that way of life which elsewhere is called the middle class, but which in this country is so nearly universal as to make of other classes an almost negligible quantity. He was neither rich nor poor, neither proud nor humble; he knew no hunger he was not sure of satisfying, no luxury which could enervate mind or body. His parents were sober, God-fearing people; intelligent and upright; without pretension and without humility. He grew up in the company of boys like himself; wholesome, honest, self-respecting. They looked down on nobody; they never felt it possible they could be looked down upon. Their houses were the homes of probity, piety, patriotism. They learned in the admirable school readers of fifty years ago the lessons of heroic and splendid life which have come down from the past. They read in their weekly newspapers the story of the world's progress, in which they were eager to take part, and of the sins and wrongs of civilization with which they burned to do battle. It was a serious and thoughtful time. The boys of that day felt dimly, but deeply, that days of sharp struggle and high achievement were before them. They looked at life with the wondering yet resolute eyes of a young esquire in his vigil of arms. They felt a time was coming when to them should be addressed the stern admonition of the Apostle, "Quit you like men; be strong."

It is not easy to give to those of a later generation any clear idea of that extraordinary spiritual awakening which passed over the country at the first red signal fires of the Civil War. It was not our earliest apocalypse; a hundred years before the nation had been revealed to itself, when after long discussion and much searching of heart the people of the colonies had resolved that to live without liberty was worse than to die, and had therefore wagered in the solemn game of war "their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor." In a stress of heat and labor unutterable, the country had been hammered and welded together; but thereafter for nearly a century there had been nothing in our life to touch the innermost fountain of feeling and devotion; we had had rumors of wars—even wars we had had, not without sacrifices and glory—but nothing which went to the vital self-consciousness of the country, nothing which challenged the nation's right to live. But in 1860 the nation was going down into the Valley of Decision. The question which had been debated on thousands of platforms, which had been discussed in countless publications, which, thundered from innumerable pulpits, had caused in their congregations the bitter strife and dissension to which only cases of conscience can give rise, was everywhere pressing for solution. And not merely in the various channels of publicity was it alive and clamorous. About every fireside in the land, in the conversation of friends and neighbors, and, deeper still, in the secret of millions of human hearts, the battle of opinion was waging; and all men felt and saw—with more or less clearness—that an answer to the importunate question, Shall the nation live? was due, and not to be denied. And I do not mean that in the North alone there was this austere wrestling with conscience. In the South as well, below all the effervescence and excitement of a people perhaps more given to eloquent speech than we were, there was the profound agony of question and answer, the summons to decide whether honor and freedom did not call them to revolution and war. It is easy for partisanship to say that the one side was right and that the other was wrong. It is still easier for an indolent magnanimity to say that both were right. Perhaps in the wide view of ethics one is always right to follow his conscience, though it lead him to disaster and death. But history is inexorable. She takes no account of sentiment and intention; and in her cold and luminous eyes that side is right which fights in harmony with the stars in their courses. The men are right through whose efforts and struggles the world is helped onward, and humanity moves to a higher level and a brighter day.

The men who are living to-day and who were young in 1860 will never forget the glory and glamour that filled the earth and the sky when the long twilight of doubt and uncertainty was ending and the time of action had come. A speech by Abraham Lincoln was an event not only of high moral significance, but of far-reaching importance; the drilling of a militia company by Ellsworth attracted national attention; the fluttering of the flag in the clear sky drew tears from the eyes of young men. Patriotism, which had been a rhetorical expression, became a passionate emotion, in which instinct, logic, and feeling were fused. The country was worth saving; it could be saved only by fire; no sacrifice was too great; the young men of the country were ready for the sacrifice; come weal, come woe, they were ready.

At seventeen years of age William McKinley heard this summons of his country. He was the sort of youth to whom a military life in ordinary times would possess no attractions. His nature was far different from that of the ordinary soldier. He had other dreams of life, its prizes and pleasures, than that of marches and battles. But to his mind there was no choice or question. The banner floating in the morning breeze was the beckoning gesture of his country. The thrilling notes of the trumpet called him—him and none other—into the ranks. His portrait in his first uniform is familiar to you all—the short, stocky figure; the quiet, thoughtful face; the deep, dark eyes. It is the face of a lad who could not stay at home when he thought he was needed in the field. He was of the stuff of which good soldiers are made. Had he been ten years older he would have entered at the head of a company and come out at the head of a division. But he did what he could. He enlisted as a private; he learned to obey. His serious, sensible ways, his prompt, alert efficiency soon attracted the attention of his superiors. He was so faithful in little things they gave him more and more to do. He was untiring in camp and on the march; swift, cool, and fearless in fight. He left the army with field rank when the war ended, brevetted by President Lincoln for gallantry in battle.

In coming years when men seek to draw the moral of our great civil war nothing will seem to them so admirable in all the history of our two magnificent armies as the way in which the war came to a close. When the Confederate army saw the time had come, they acknowledged the pitiless logic of facts, and ceased fighting. When the army of the Union saw it was no longer needed, without a murmur or question, making no terms, asking no return, in the flush of victory and fullness of might, it laid down its arms and melted back into the mass of peaceful citizens. There is no event, since the nation was born, which has so proved its solid capacity for self-government. Both sections share equally in that crown of glory. They had held a debate of incomparable importance and had fought it out with equal energy. A conclusion had been reached—and it is to the everlasting honor of both sides that they each knew when the war was over, and the hour of a lasting peace had struck. We may admire the desperate daring of others who prefer annihilation to compromise, but the palm of common sense, and, I will say, of enlightened patriotism, belongs to the men like Grant and Lee, who knew when they had fought enough, for honor and for country.

William McKinley, one of that sensible million of men, gladly laid down his sword and betook himself to his books. He quickly made up the time lost in soldiering. He attacked his Blackstone as he would have done a hostile intrenchment; finding the range of a country law library too narrow, he went to the Albany Law School, where he worked energetically with brilliant success; was admitted to the bar and settled down to practice—a brevetted veteran of 24—in the quiet town of Canton, now and henceforward forever famous as the scene of his life and his place of sepulture. Here many blessings awaited him: high repute, professional success, and a domestic affection so pure, so devoted and stainless that future poets, seeking an ideal of Christian marriage, will find in it a theme worthy of their songs. This is a subject to which the lightest allusion seems profanation; but it is impossible to speak of William McKinley without remembering that no truer, tenderer knight to his chosen lady ever lived among mortal men. If to the spirits of the just made perfect is permitted the consciousness of earthly things, we may be sure that his faithful soul is now watching over that gentle sufferer who counts the long hours in their shattered home in the desolate splendor of his fame.

A man possessing the qualities with which nature had endowed McKinley seeks political activity as naturally as a growing plant seeks light and air. A wholesome ambition; a rare power of making friends and keeping them; a faith, which may be called religious, in his country and its institutions; and, flowing from this, a belief that a man could do no nobler work than to serve such a country—these were the elements in his character that drew him irresistibly into public life. He had from the beginning a remarkable equipment: a manner of singular grace and charm; a voice of ringing quality and great carrying power—vast as were the crowds that gathered about him, he reached their utmost fringe without apparent effort. He had an extraordinary power of marshaling and presenting significant facts, so as to bring conviction to the average mind. His range of reading was not wide; he read only what he might some day find useful, and what he read his memory held like brass. Those who knew him well in those early days can never forget the consummate skill and power with which he would select a few pointed facts, and, blow upon blow, would hammer them into the attention of great assemblages in Ohio, as Jael drove the nail into the head of the Canaanite captain. He was not often impassioned; he rarely resorted to the aid of wit or humor; yet I never saw his equal in controlling and convincing a popular audience by sheer appeal to their reason and intelligence. He did not flatter or cajole them, but there was an implied compliment in the serious and sober tone in which he addressed them. He seemed one of them; in heart and feeling he was one of them. Each workingman in a great crowd might say: That is the sort of man I would like to be, and under more favoring circumstances might have been. He had the divine gift of sympathy, which, though given only to the elect, makes all men their friends.

So it came naturally about that in 1876—the beginning of the second century of the Republic—he began, by an election to Congress, his political career. Thereafter for fourteen years this Chamber was his home. I use the word advisedly. Nowhere in the world was he so in harmony with his environment as here; nowhere else did his mind work with such full consciousness of its powers. The air of debate was native to him; here he drank delight of battle with his peers. In after days, when he drove by this stately pile, or when on rare occasions his duty called him here, he greeted his old haunts with the affectionate zest of a child of the house; during all the last ten years of his life, filled as they were with activity and glory, he never ceased to be homesick for this Hall. When he came to the Presidency, there was not a day when his Congressional service was not of use to him. Probably no other President has been in such full and cordial communion with Congress, if we may except Lincoln alone. McKinley knew the legislative body thoroughly, its composition, its methods, its habits of thought. He had the profoundest respect for its authority and an inflexible belief in the ultimate rectitude of its purposes. Our history shows how surely an Executive courts disaster and ruin by assuming an attitude of hostility or distrust to the Legislature; and, on the other hand, McKinley's frank and sincere trust and confidence in Congress were repaid by prompt and loyal support and cooperation. During his entire term of office this mutual trust and regard—so essential to the public welfare—was never shadowed by a single cloud.

He was a Republican. He could not be anything else. A Union soldier grafted upon a Clay Whig, he necessarily believed in the "American system"—in protection to home industries; in a strong, aggressive nationality; in a liberal construction of the Constitution. What any self-reliant nation might rightly do, he felt this nation had power to do, if required by the common welfare and not prohibited by our written charter.

Following the natural bent of his mind, he devoted himself to questions of finance and revenue, to the essentials of the national housekeeping. He took high rank in the House from the beginning. His readiness in debate, his mastery of every subject he handled, the bright and amiable light he shed about him, and above all the unfailing courtesy and good will with which he treated friend and foe alike—one of the surest signatures of a nature born to great destinies—made his service in the House a pathway of unbroken success and brought him at last to the all-important post of Chairman of Ways and Means and leader of the majority. Of the famous revenue act which, in that capacity, he framed and carried through Congress, it is not my purpose here and now to speak. The embers of the controversy in the midst of which that law had its troubled being are yet too warm to be handled on a day like this. I may only say that it was never sufficiently tested to prove the praises of its friends or the criticism of its opponents. After a brief existence it passed away, for a time, in the storm that swept the Republicans out of power. McKinley also passed through a brief zone of shadow; his Congressional district having been rearranged for that purpose by a hostile legislature.

Some one has said it is easy to love our enemies; they help us so much more than our friends. The people whose malevolent skill had turned McKinley out of Congress deserved well of him and of the Republic. Never was Nemesis more swift and energetic. The Republicans of Ohio were saved the trouble of choosing a Governor—the other side had chosen one for them. A year after McKinley left Congress he was made Governor of Ohio, and two years later he was reelected, each time by majorities unhoped-for and overwhelming. He came to fill a space in the public eye which obscured a great portion of the field of vision. In two National Conventions, the Presidency seemed within his reach. But he had gone there in the interest of others and his honor forbade any dalliance with temptation. So his nay was nay—delivered with a tone and gesture there was no denying. His hour was not yet come.

There was, however, no long delay. He became, from year to year, the most prominent politician and orator in the country. Passionately devoted to the principles of his party, he was always ready to do anything, to go anywhere, to proclaim its ideas and to support its candidates. His face and his voice became familiar to millions of our people; and wherever they were seen and heard, men became his partisans. His face was cast in a classic mold; you see faces like it in antique marble in the galleries of the Vatican and in the portraits of the great cardinal-statesmen of Italy; his voice was the voice of the perfect orator—ringing, vibrating, tireless, persuading by its very sound, by its accent of sincere conviction. So prudent and so guarded were all his utterances, so lofty his courtesy, that he never embarrassed his friends, and never offended his opponents. For several months before the Republican National Convention met in 1896, it was evident to all who had eyes to see that Mr. McKinley was the only probable candidate of his party. Other names were mentioned, of the highest rank in ability, character, and popularity; they were supported by powerful combinations; but the nomination of McKinley as against the field was inevitable.

The campaign he made will be always memorable in our political annals. He and his friends had thought that the issue for the year was the distinctive and historic difference between the two parties on the subject of the tariff. To this wager of battle the discussions of the previous four years distinctly pointed. But no sooner had the two parties made their nominations than it became evident that the opposing candidate declined to accept the field of discussion chosen by the Republicans, and proposed to put forward as the main issue the free coinage of silver. McKinley at once accepted this challenge, and, taking the battle for protection as already won, went with energy into the discussion of the theories presented by his opponents. He had wisely concluded not to leave his home during the canvass, thus avoiding a proceeding which has always been of sinister augury in our politics; but from the front porch of his modest house in Canton he daily addressed the delegations which came from every part of the country to greet him in a series of speeches so strong, so varied, so pertinent, so full of facts briefly set forth, of theories embodied in a single phrase, that they formed the hourly text for the other speakers of his party, and give probably the most convincing proof we have of his surprising fertility of resource and flexibility of mind. All this was done without anxiety or strain. I remember a day I spent with him during that busy summer. He had made nineteen speeches the day before; that day he made many. But in the intervals of these addresses he sat in his study and talked, with nerves as quiet and a mind as free from care as if we had been spending a holiday at the seaside or among the hills.

When he came to the Presidency he confronted a situation of the utmost difficulty, which might well have appalled a man of less serene and tranquil self-confidence. There had been a state of profound commercial and industrial depression, from which his friends had said his election would relieve the country. Our relations with the outside world left much to be desired. The feeling between the Northern and Southern sections of the Union was lacking in the cordiality which was necessary to the welfare of both. Hawaii had asked for annexation and had been rejected by the preceding Administration. There was a state of things in the Caribbean which could not permanently endure. Our neighbor's house was on fire, and there were grave doubts as to our rights and duties in the premises. A man either weak or rash, either irresolute or headstrong, might have brought ruin on himself and incalculable harm to the country.

Again I crave the pardon of those who differ with me, if, against all my intentions, I happen to say a word which may seem to them unbefitting the place and hour. But I am here to give the opinion which his friends entertained of President McKinley, of course claiming no immunity from criticism in what I shall say. I believe, then, that the verdict of history will be that he met all these grave questions with perfect valor and incomparable ability; that in grappling with them he rose to the full height of a great occasion, in a manner which redounded to the lasting benefit of the country and to his own immortal honor.

The least desirable form of glory to a man of his habitual mood and temper—that of successful war—was nevertheless conferred upon him by uncontrollable events. He felt the conflict must come; he deplored its necessity; he strained almost to breaking his relations with his friends, in order, first—if it might be—to prevent and then to postpone it to the latest possible moment. But when the die was cast, he labored with the utmost energy and ardor, and with an intelligence in military matters which showed how much of the soldier still survived in the mature statesman to push forward the war to a decisive close. War was an anguish to him; he wanted it short and conclusive. His merciful zeal communicated itself to his subordinates, and the war, so long dreaded, whose consequences were so momentous, ended in a hundred days.

Mr. Stedman, the dean of our poets, has called him "Augmenter of the State." It is a noble title; if justly conferred, it ranks him among the few whose names may be placed definitely and forever in charge of the historic Muse. Under his rule Hawaii has come to us, and Tutuila; Porto Rico and the vast archipelago of the East. Cuba is free. Our position in the Caribbean is assured beyond the possibility of future question. The doctrine called by the name of Monroe, so long derided and denied by alien publicists, evokes now no challenge or contradiction when uttered to the world. It has become an international truism. Our sister republics to the south of us are convinced that we desire only their peace and prosperity. Europe knows that we cherish no dreams but those of world-wide commerce, the benefit of which shall be to all nations. The State is augmented, but it threatens no nation under heaven. As to those regions which have come under the shadow of our flag, the possibility of their being damaged by such a change of circumstances was in the view of McKinley a thing unthinkable. To believe that we could not administer them to their advantage, was to turn infidel to our American faith of more than a hundred years.

In dealing with foreign powers, he will take rank with the greatest of our diplomatists. It was a world of which he had little special knowledge before coming to the Presidency. But his marvelous adaptability was in nothing more remarkable than in the firm grasp he immediately displayed in international relations. In preparing for war and in the restoration of peace he was alike adroit, courteous, and far-sighted. When a sudden emergency declared itself, as in China, in a state of things of which our history furnished no precedent and international law no safe and certain precept, he hesitated not a moment to take the course marked out for him by considerations of humanity and the national interests. Even while the legations were fighting for their lives against bands of infuriated fanatics, he decided that we were at peace with China; and while that conclusion did not hinder him from taking the most energetic measures to rescue our imperiled citizens, it enabled him to maintain close and friendly relations with the wise and heroic viceroys of the south, whose resolute stand saved that ancient Empire from anarchy and spoliation. He disposed of every question as it arose with a promptness and clarity of vision that astonished his advisers, and he never had occasion to review a judgment or reverse a decision.

By patience, by firmness, by sheer reasonableness, he improved our understanding with all the great powers of the world, and rightly gained the blessing which belongs to the peacemakers.

But the achievements of the nation in war and diplomacy are thrown in the shade by the vast economical developments which took place during Mr. McKinley's Administration. Up to the time of his first election, the country was suffering from a long period of depression, the reasons of which I will not try to seek. But from the moment the ballots were counted that betokened his advent to power a great and momentous movement in advance declared itself along all the lines of industry and commerce. In the very month of his inauguration steel rails began to be sold at $18 a ton—one of the most significant facts of modern times. It meant that American industries had adjusted themselves to the long depression—that through the power of the race to organize and combine, stimulated by the conditions then prevailing, and perhaps by the prospect of legislation favorable to industry, America had begun to undersell the rest of the world. The movement went on without ceasing. The President and his party kept the pledges of their platform and their canvass. The Dingley bill was speedily framed and set in operation. All industries responded to the new stimulus and American trade set out on its new crusade, not to conquer the world, but to trade with it on terms advantageous to all concerned. I will not weary you with statistics; but one or two words seem necessary to show how the acts of McKinley as President kept pace with his professions as candidate. His four years of administration were costly; we carried on a war which, though brief, was expensive. Although we borrowed two hundred millions and paid our own expenses, without asking for indemnity, the effective reduction of the debt now exceeds the total of the war bonds. We pay six millions less in interest than we did before the war and no bond of the United States yields the holder 2 per cent on its market value. So much for the Government credit; and we have five hundred and forty-six millions of gross gold in the Treasury.

But, coming to the development of our trade in the four McKinley years, we seem to be entering the realm of fable. In the last fiscal year our excess of exports over imports was $664,592,826. In the last four years it was $2,354,442,213. These figures are so stupendous that they mean little to a careless reader—but consider! The excess of exports over imports for the whole preceding period from 1790 to 1897—from Washington to McKinley—was only $356,808,822.

The most extravagant promises made by the sanguine McKinley advocates five years ago are left out of sight by these sober facts. The "debtor nation" has become the chief creditor nation. The financial center of the world, which required thousands of years to journey from the Euphrates to the Thames and the Seine, seems passing to the Hudson between daybreak and dark.

I will not waste your time by explaining that I do not invoke for any man the credit of this vast result. The captain can not claim that it is he who drives the mighty steamship over the tumbling billows of the trackless deep; but praise is justly due him if he has made the best of her tremendous powers, if he has read aright the currents of the sea and the lessons of the stars. And we should be ungrateful, if in this hour of prodigious prosperity we should fail to remember that William McKinley with sublime faith foresaw it, with indomitable courage labored for it, put his whole heart and mind into the work of bringing it about; that it was his voice which, in dark hours, rang out, heralding the coming light, as over the twilight waters of the Nile the mystic cry of Memnon announced the dawn to Egypt, waking from sleep.

Among the most agreeable incidents of the President's term of office were the two journeys he made to the South. The moral reunion of the sections—so long and so ardently desired by him—had been initiated by the Spanish war, when the veterans of both sides, and their sons, had marched shoulder to shoulder together under the same banner. The President in these journeys sought, with more than usual eloquence and pathos, to create a sentiment which should end forever the ancient feud. He was too good a politician to expect any results in the way of votes in his favor, and he accomplished none. But for all that the good seed did not fall on barren ground. In the warm and chivalrous hearts of that generous people, the echo of his cordial and brotherly words will linger long, and his name will be cherished in many a household where even yet the Lost Cause is worshiped.

Mr. McKinley was reelected by an overwhelming majority. There had been little doubt of the result among well-informed people; but when it was known, a profound feeling of relief and renewal of trust were evident among the leaders of capital and of industry, not only in this country, but everywhere. They felt that the immediate future was secure, and that trade and commerce might safely push forward in every field of effort and enterprise. He inspired universal confidence, which is the life-blood of the commercial system of the world. It began frequently to be said that such a state of things ought to continue; one after another, men of prominence said that the President was his own best successor. He paid little attention to these suggestions until they were repeated by some of his nearest friends. Then he saw that one of the most cherished traditions of our public life was in danger. The generation which has seen the prophecy of the Papal throne—Non videbis annos Petri—twice contradicted by the longevity of holy men was in peril of forgetting the unwritten law of our Republic: Thou shalt not exceed the years of Washington. The President saw it was time to speak, and in his characteristic manner he spoke, briefly, but enough. Where the lightning strikes there is no need of iteration. From that hour, no one dreamed of doubting his purpose of retiring at the end of his second term, and it will be long before another such lesson is required.

He felt that the harvest time was come, to garner in the fruits of so much planting and culture, and he was determined that nothing he might do or say should be liable to the reproach of a personal interest. Let us say frankly he was a party man; he believed the policies advocated by him and his friends counted for much in the country's progress and prosperity. He hoped in his second term to accomplish substantial results in the development and affirmation of those policies. I spent a day with him shortly before he started on his fateful journey to Buffalo. Never had I seen him higher in hope and patriotic confidence. He was as sure of the future of his country as the Psalmist who cried "Glorious things are spoken of thee, thou City of God." He was gratified to the heart that we had arranged a treaty which gave us a free hand in the Isthmus. In fancy he saw the canal already built and the argosies of the world passing through it in peace and amity. He saw in the immense evolution of American trade the fulfillment of all his dreams, the reward of all his labors. He was—I need not say—an ardent protectionist, never more sincere and devoted than during those last days of his life. He regarded reciprocity as the bulwark of protection—not a breach, but a fulfillment of the law. The treaties which for four years had been preparing under his personal supervision he regarded as ancillary to the general scheme. He was opposed to any revolutionary plan of change in the existing legislation; he was careful to point out that everything he had done was in faithful compliance with the law itself.

In that mood of high hope, of generous expectation, he went to Buffalo, and there, on the threshold of eternity, he delivered that memorable speech, worthy for its loftiness of tone, its blameless morality, its breadth of view, to be regarded as his testament to the nation. Through all his pride of country and his joy of its success, runs the note of solemn warning, as in Kipling's noble hymn, "Lest we forget."

> Our capacity to produce has developed so enormously and our products have so multiplied that the problem of more markets requires our urgent and immediate attention. Only a broad and enlightened policy will keep what we have. No other policy will get more. In these times of marvelous business energy and gain we ought to be looking to the future, strengthening the weak places in our industrial and commercial systems, that we may be ready for any storm or strain.
> By sensible trade arrangements which will not interrupt our home production we shall extend the outlets for our increasing surplus. A system which provides a mutual exchange of commodities is manifestly essential to the continued and healthful growth of our export trade. We must not repose in fancied security that we can forever sell everything and buy little or nothing. If such a thing were possible, it would not be best for us or for those with whom we deal. * * * Reciprocity is the natural outgrowth of our wonderful industrial development under the domestic policy now firmly established. * * * The period of exclusiveness is past. The expansion of our trade and commerce is the pressing problem. Commercial wars are unprofitable. A policy of good will and friendly trade relations will prevent reprisals. Reciprocity treaties are in harmony with the spirit of the times; measures of retaliation are not.

I wish I had time to read the whole of this wise and weighty speech; nothing I might say could give such a picture of the President's mind and character. His years of apprenticeship had been served. He stood that day past master of the art of statesmanship. He had nothing more to ask of the people. He owed them nothing but truth and faithful service. His mind and heart were purged of the temptations which beset all men engaged in the struggle to survive. In view of the revelation of his nature vouchsafed to us that day, and the fate which impended over him, we can only say in deep affection and solemn awe, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." Even for that vision he was not unworthy.

He had not long to wait. The next day sped the bolt of doom, and for a week after—in an agony of dread broken by illusive glimpses of hope that our prayers might be answered—the nation waited for the end. Nothing in the glorious life that we saw gradually waning was more admirable and exemplary than its close. The gentle humanity of his words, when he saw his assailant in danger of summary vengeance, "Don't let them hurt him;" his chivalrous care that the news should be broken gently to his wife; the fine courtesy with which he apologized for the damage which his death would bring to the great Exhibition; and the heroic resignation of his final words, "It is God's way. His will, not ours, be done," were all the instinctive expressions of a nature so lofty and so pure that pride in its nobility at once softened and enhanced the nation's sense of loss. The Republic grieved over such a son—but is proud forever of having produced him. After all, in spite of its tragic ending, his life was extraordinarily happy. He had, all his days, troops of friends, the cheer of fame and fruitful labor; and he became at last—

> "On fortune's crowning slope,
> "The pillar of a people's hope,
> "The center of a world's desire."

He was fortunate even in his untimely death, for an event so tragical called the world imperatively to the immediate study of his life and character, and thus anticipated the sure praises of posterity.

Every young and growing people has to meet, at moments, the problems of its destiny. Whether the question comes, as in Thebes, from a sphinx, symbol of the hostile forces of omnipotent nature, who punishes with instant death our failure to understand her meaning; or whether it comes, as in Jerusalem, from the Lord of Hosts, who commands the building of His temple, it comes always with the warning that the past is past, and experience vain. "Your fathers, where are they? and the prophets, do they live forever?" The fathers are dead; the prophets are silent; the questions are new, and have no answer but in time.

When the horny outside case which protects the infancy of a chrysalis nation suddenly bursts, and, in a single abrupt shock, it finds itself floating on wings which had not existed before, whose strength it has never tested, among dangers it can not foresee and is without experience to measure, every motion is a problem, and every hesitation may be an error. The past gives no clue to the future. The fathers, where are they? and the prophets, do they live forever? We are ourselves the fathers! We are ourselves the prophets! The questions that are put to us we must answer without delay, without help—for the sphinx allows no one to pass.

At such moments we may be humbly grateful to have had leaders simple in mind, clear in vision—as far as human vision can safely extend—penetrating in knowledge of men, supple and flexible under the strains and pressures of society, instinct with the energy of new life and untried strength, cautious, calm, and, above all, gifted in a supreme degree with the most surely victorious of all political virtues—the genius of infinite patience.

The obvious elements which enter into the fame of a public man are few and by no means recondite. The man who fills a great station in a period of change, who leads his country successfully through a time of crisis; who, by his power of persuading and controlling others, has been able to command the best thought of his age, so as to leave his country in a moral or material condition in advance of where he found it—such a man's position in history is secure. If, in addition to this, his written or spoken words possess the subtle quality which carry them far and lodge them in men's hearts; and, more than all, if his utterances and actions, while informed with a lofty morality, are yet tinged with the glow of human sympathy, the fame of such a man will shine like a beacon through the mists of ages—an object of reverence, of imitation, and of love. It should be to us an occasion of solemn pride that in the three great crises of our history such a man was not denied us. The moral value to a nation of a renown such as Washington's and Lincoln's and McKinley's is beyond all computation. No loftier ideal can be held up to the emulation of ingenuous youth. With such examples we can not be wholly ignoble. Grateful as we may be for what they did, let us be still more grateful for what they were. While our daily being, our public policies, still feel the influence of their work, let us pray that in our spirits their lives may be voluble, calling us upward and onward.

There is not one of us but feels prouder of his native land because the august figure of Washington presided over its beginnings; no one but vows it a tenderer love because Lincoln poured out his blood for it; no one but must feel his devotion for his country renewed and kindled when he remembers how McKinley loved, revered, and served it, showed in his life how a citizen should live, and in his last hour taught us how a gentleman could die. [Prolonged applause.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore of the Senate. Dr. MILBURN, Chaplain of the United States Senate, will now pronounce the benediction.

The Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D., Chaplain of the Senate, pronounced the benediction, as follows:

The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, the love of God, and the fellowship of the Holy Ghost be with us all, now and ever. Amen.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore of the Senate. The purpose of the assembly having now been accomplished, it will be dissolved.

Thereupon the President and his Cabinet, the Senate, the Chief Justice and the associate justices of the Supreme Court, the diplomatic corps, and other invited guests retired.

The SPEAKER resumed the chair.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, as a further evidence of respect to the memory of the late President, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 41 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of additional appropriation for "Contingent expenses, Executive Office"—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of fact in the case of Andrew H. Reinhart against the United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Euromus H. Hoffman, administrator of estate of Susan Hoffman, against the United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Samuel Avey et al., executors of estate of Jacob Avey, against the United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Postmaster-General submitting an estimate of appropriation for printing and binding—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for transportation of destitute citizens from Alaska—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a petition from inhabitants of Guam relating to a permanent government—to the Committee on Insular Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1025) to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 622); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CAPRON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 593) for the establishment, control, operation, and maintenance of the Northern Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers at Hot Springs, in the State of South Dakota, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 623); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2508) granting an increase of pension to Pauline Lowe Murphy, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 606); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3157) granting an increase of pension to Rhody Ann Bradshaw, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 607); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3204) granting an increase of pension to Mary T. Bruce, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 608); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 508) granting an increase of pension to Adelaide Worth Bagley, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 609); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2113) granting an increase of pension to Mary J. Clark, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 610); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. PATTERSON of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2093) granting an increase of pension to Anna B. McCurley, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 611); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. WHITE, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8007) granting an increase of pension to James W. Lewis, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 612); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BROMWELL, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8553) granting a pension to Joseph Tusinski, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 613); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BOREING, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6713) granting a pension to Freeman R. E. Chanaberry, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 615); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6081) granting an increase of pension to Frances Taylor Anderson, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 616); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BOREING, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7755) granting a pension to Laura G. Weisenburger, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 617); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DE GRAFFENREID, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10132) granting an increase of pension to John Garner, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 618); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER (for Mr. WEEKS), from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 3371) granting a pension to Elizabeth P. Searcy, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 619); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11144) granting an increase of pension to Anderson Howard, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 620); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER (for Mr. WEEKS), from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7731) granting an increase of pension to Richard Owen, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 621); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, MEMORIALS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

Also, papers to accompany House bill 11896, to correct record of George L. Ritman—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RIXEY: Petition of citizens of Loudoun County, Va., advocating the reenactment of the Chinese-exclusion law—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. WOODS: Petition of Carpenters and Joiners' Union No. 266, of Stockton, Cal., for an educational test in the restriction of immigration—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 28, 1902.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. PETTUS, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Journal will stand approved.

SENATORS FROM SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, I am directed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections to make the following report. By order of the Senate made on the 22d of February the altercation between the Senators from South Carolina, resulting in a personal encounter on the floor of the Senate, was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, with direction to report "what action shall be taken by the Senate in regard thereto." In obedience to that order I am directed by the committee to report the following resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reports to the Senate a resolution which will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the judgment of the Senate that the Senators from South Carolina, BENJAMIN R. TILLMAN and JOHN L. MCLAURIN, for disorderly behavior and flagrant violation of the rules of the Senate during the open session of the Senate, on the 22d day of February instant, deserve the censure of the Senate, and they are hereby so censured for their breach of the privileges and dignity of this body; and from and after the adoption of this resolution the order adjudging them in contempt of the Senate shall be no longer in force and effect.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, I am also directed by the committee in support of the resolution to submit a report. I ought to say in this connection it is understood that those members of the committee who do not agree with the majority will have the opportunity to present their views, and that they may be printed with the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submits a report. Does the Senator desire that it shall be read?

Mr. BURROWS. I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Before that is done, with the understanding of the committee, I submit some views of two members of the committee, to be printed, under the agreement of the committee, with the report of the committee now offered.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, let those likewise be read.

Mr. BURROWS. There is no objection to that, of course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The views of the minority will be received, there being no objection, and will be read subsequent to the reading of the report of the committee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And also printed with the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be printed. The Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report, and read as follows:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, in obedience to the following order of the Senate, viz:

"FEBRUARY 22, 1902.

"Ordered That the two Senators from the State of South Carolina be declared in contempt of the Senate on account of the altercation and personal encounter between them this day in open session, and that the matter be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, with instructions to report what action shall be taken by the Senate in regard thereto"— beg leave to report that they have considered the matter so referred to the committee and find that on the 22d day of February instant, while the Senate was in open session and engaged in the consideration of H. R. 5883, being a bill "temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," the Senators from the State of South Carolina became involved in a personal controversy, resulting in a serious breach of the privileges of the Senate.

The committee can not better present the circumstances leading up to the commission of the offense than by quoting from the official record the report of the proceedings.

The senior Senator from South Carolina, while addressing the Senate, in the course of his remarks said:

"But the Senator from Wisconsin yesterday took occasion to make a special plea of indictment and accusation against Mr. Bryan, the leader of the Democratic party in its last two national contests, because he had aided and possibly influenced enough votes to obtain the ratification of the treaty. I have already pointed out what might have happened after the ratification, which would have been entirely honorable and so high and noble and pure in comparison with what we have done that anyone who voted for that treaty, even my friend the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], who for a time was pretty badly tainted with imperialism and who has now got well and is sound and sane and in his right mind [laughter]——

"Mr. TELLER rose.

"Mr. TILLMAN. I hope the Senator will not take my little pleasantry as anything more than an attempt to relieve him of the accusation of my friend, yesterday, who convicted him of inconsistency.

"Mr. TELLER. I only want to say that if I ever was tainted in the slightest degree with imperialism I am glad to know that I have recovered from that condition.

"Mr. TILLMAN. But with all Mr. Bryan's influence—and it was very great, because it was recognized then that he would be the nominee of his party—he did not and could not persuade enough men here to give the necessary votes. After every man whom Mr. Bryan could influence had been influenced and counted, you still lacked votes, and you knew it. You know how you got them.

"Mr. SPOONER. How did we get them?

"Mr. TILLMAN. I say you know how you got them.

"Mr. SPOONER. I do not know how we got them. I do not know that any man voted for that treaty except in obedience to his convictions. Does the Senator know any different?

"Mr. TILLMAN. I only know that in a court the Senator would convict on circumstantial evidence some men.

"Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator impeach any Senator? Let him name him. I do not impeach any Senator, nor do I know any ground for impeaching any.

"Mr. TILLMAN. I have reason to believe from the circumstantial evidence and from things that have been told to me in confidence by men on the other side that improper influences were used.

"Mr. SPOONER. Name the man. That is due to the country, and due to the man whom you suspect, and by innuendo charge. Who was it? Let him answer for himself if he is still a member of this body.

"Mr. TILLMAN. Whom do you mean? I can not name the man who gave me the information.

"Mr. SPOONER. Whoever you mean.

"Mr. TILLMAN. I can not give the name of the man who gave me the information, because he gave it to me in confidence.

"Mr. SPOONER. Oh, in confidence. A man who would impeach another in confidence is a coward. [Applause in the galleries.]

"Mr. TILLMAN. Cowardice in that case does not rest on my shoulders.

"Mr. SPOONER. The Senator turned to me. If the Senator knows of any member of this body who voted under corrupt influences for that treaty, name him.

"Mr. TILLMAN. I can not prove it.

"Mr. SPOONER. Well, I would not say it.

"Mr. TILLMAN. But I can prove this——

"Mr. SPOONER. I would not say it.

"Mr. TILLMAN. I can prove this: That the patronage of a State has been given to a Democrat who voted for the treaty.

"Mr. SPOONER. What State?

"Mr. TILLMAN. South Carolina.

"Mr. SPOONER. Fight it out with your colleague.

"Mr. TILLMAN. I am ready.

"Mr. SPOONER. Yes; I am ready and he is ready.

"Mr. TILLMAN. Let him——

"Mr. SPOONER. He is not here——

"Mr. TILLMAN. He has not shown his readiness.

"Mr. SPOONER. But he will be.

"The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The occupants of the galleries must remember that any marks of approbation or disapproval are not permitted under the rules of the Senate, and if there is a violation of the rule the Chair will be obliged to have the galleries cleared.

"Mr. TILLMAN. I will state that after having made a speech in this body two weeks before, replete with cogent arguments and eloquence, against the ratification of the treaty, and after having told us in confidence that he would not vote for it, he did; and since then he has been adopted by the Republican caucus and put upon committees as a member of that party, and has controlled the patronage in South Carolina. I did not expect to bring this in in this way, but I do not dodge or flinch from any responsibility anywhere. I simply know what I believe.

"Mr. SPOONER. You simply believe what you do not know.

"Mr. TILLMAN. And I have been told, as I told you in confidence, by men on that side of the transaction."

At the conclusion of the Senator's remarks the junior Senator from South Carolina, being recognized by the Chair, addressing the Senate, said:

"Mr. MCLAURIN of South Carolina. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege. During my absence a few moments ago from the Senate Chamber, in attendance upon the Committee on Indian Affairs, the gentleman who has just taken his seat, the Senator who has just taken his seat, said that improper influences had been used in changing the vote of somebody on the treaty, and then went on later and said that it applied to the Senator from South Carolina, who had been given the patronage in that State. I think I get the sense of the controversy.

"I desire to state, Mr. President—I would not use as strong language as I intend to had I not, soon after the Senate met, replied to these insinuations and said that they were untrue—I now say that that statement is a willful, malicious, and deliberate lie.

At the conclusion of the Senator's remarks the following note by the reporter appears in the RECORD:

"[At this point Mr. TILLMAN advanced to Mr. MCLAURIN of South Carolina, and the two Senators met in a personal encounter, when they were separated by Mr. Layton, the acting assistant doorkeeper, assisted by several Senators sitting near.]"

Further proceedings were had, as follows:

"Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I ask that the doors be closed.

"The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order. Senators will please resume their seats.

"Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President, if the Senator from South Carolina has concluded——

"Mr. MCLAURIN of South Carolina. Mr. President, I will now proceed with my remarks, which were so unceremoniously interrupted——

"Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I call the Senator from South Carolina to order.

"Mr. MCLAURIN of South Carolina. Which one of the Senators?

"Mr. TELLER. This one, and the other one, too, for that matter.

"Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate go into executive session.

"The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

"The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After two hours and twenty minutes the doors were reopened."

Thereupon the following proceedings were had:

"PROCEEDING FOR CONTEMPT.

"During the consideration of executive business, and while the doors were closed, the injunction and seal of secrecy was removed from the following proceedings:

"Mr. FORAKER submitted the following order:

"'Ordered, That the two Senators from the State of South Carolina be declared in contempt of the Senate on account of the altercation and personal encounter between them this day in open session, and that the matter be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections with instructions to report what action shall be taken by the Senate in regard thereto.'

"The Senate proceeded by unanimous consent to consider the said order.

"Pending debate,

"On motion by Mr. TELLER that the doors be opened,

"It was determined in the negative—yeas 18, nays 44.

"The yeas and nays being, on motion of Mr. LODGE, desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

"Those who voted in the affirmative are: Messrs. Bacon, Bate, Berry, Blackburn, Carmack, Clay, Cockrell, Gibson, McEnery, Martin, Patterson, Rawlins, Simmons, Spooner, Taliaferro, Teller, Turner, and Wellington—18.

"Those who voted in the negative are: Messrs. Aldrich, Allison, Bard, Burnham, Burrows, Burton, Clark of Wyoming, Cullom, Deboe, Dietrich, Dillingham, Dolliver, Elkins, Fairbanks, Foraker, Foster of Washington, Frye, Gallinger, Gamble, Hanna, Hansbrough, Hawley, Hoar, Kean, Kearns, Kittredge, Lodge, McComas, McMillan, Mallory, Mason, Millard, Mitchell, Nelson, Perkins, Platt of Connecticut, Pritchard, Proctor, Quarles, Scott, Simon, Stewart, Warren, and Wetmore—44.

"So the motion of Mr. TELLER was not agreed to."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to dispensing with the reading of the names?

Mr. TELLER. I wish to call the attention of the committee to an error which they have made in the point of the occurrence. I did call both the Senators from South Carolina to order, but not until after the collision. As it is stated there, I called them to order before the collision. After the collision, and the Senators had been separated, the junior Senator attempted to continue his remarks, and I called him, and, incidentally, the other Senator, to order, as stated.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the——

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me, when he comes to look at the RECORD he will find that he is mistaken in the impression just received from it as it was read.

Mr. TELLER. I am not disputing as to the fact. I may be mistaken as to how the RECORD was made up.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator is mistaken as to the note giving an account of the occurrence.

Mr. BURROWS. The matter is taken from the RECORD as it was published.

Mr. TELLER. It is an error then in making up the RECORD, when there was some excitement.

Mr. FORAKER. The difficulty about it may be due to the fact that the stenographer had no way of taking down the encounter except only descriptively.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the reading will proceed. This is a mere copy of the record that is now being read.

Mr. CULLOM. Let it all be read.

Mr. TELLER. I do not care to raise the question. I only thought it would be well to say this while the reading is going on, because there is a mistake at that point.

Mr. BURROWS. I trust the Senator will allow the reading to proceed.

Mr. TELLER. I do not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will be resumed.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the report, as follows:

"On motion of Mr. FORAKER, and the same having been seconded,
"The Senate proceeded to the consideration of secret legislative business.
"On the question to agree to the order submitted by Mr. FORAKER,
"Mr. BACON demanded a division of the question; and
"On the question to agree to the first branch thereof, as follows:
"That the two Senators from the State of South Carolina be declared in contempt of the Senate on account of the altercation and personal encounter between them this day in open session—
"It was determined in the affirmative—yeas 61, nays 0.
"The yeas and nays being, on motion of Mr. HOAR, desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,
"Those who voted in the affirmative are: Messrs. Aldrich, Allison, Bacon, Bard, Bate, Blackburn, Burnham, Burrows, Burton, Carmack, Clark of Wyoming, Clay, Cockrell, Cullom, Deboe, Depew, Dietrich, Dillingham, Dolliver, Dubois, Elkins, Fairbanks, Foraker, Foster of Washington, Frye, Gallinger, Gamble, Gibson, Hanna, Hansbrough, Hawley, Hoar, Kean, Kearns, Kittredge, Lodge, McComas, McEnery, McMillan, Mallory, Martin, Millard, Mitchell, Nelson, Patterson, Perkins, Platt of Connecticut, Pritchard, Proctor, Quarles, Rawlins, Scott, Simmons, Simon, Spooner, Stewart, Tallaferro, Turner, Warren, Wellington, and Wetmore—61.
"None voted in the negative.
"So the first branch of the order was agreed to.
"The second branch of the order was then agreed to."

Subsequently the Senator from Kentucky, Mr. BLACKBURN, submitted the following motion:

"Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the two Senators from South Carolina shall now be given the floor and be recognized by the Chair in order that they may in their own way proceed to purge themselves of the charge of contempt of which they have been adjudged guilty by the Senate.
"Mr. SPOONER and others. That is right.
"The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].
"The motion was agreed to."

Thereupon the senior Senator from South Carolina made the following statement:

"Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I have always esteemed it a high honor and privilege to be a member of this body. I had never had any legislative experience when I came here, and my previous service as governor of South Carolina for four years had unfitted me in a measure to enter this august assembly with that dignity and regard—proper regard, I will say—for its traditions and habits and rules that is desirable.
"I have been here seven years. I have in that time learned to judge men with a little more catholicity of spirit than I did when I came here. I have found a great many people here in whose personal integrity and honor and regard for their obligations as gentlemen I have implicit confidence; but I have seen so much of partisanship, I have seen so much of what I consider slavish submission to party domination, that I confess I have felt somewhat at a loss how to judge men who in one aspect appeared to be so high and clean and honorable and in another appeared more or less despicable. I say this because of the fact that one of the Senators has seen fit to allude to some matters that occurred in the debate this morning.
"I now want to say that, so far as any action of mine has caused any Senator here, or the Senate as a body, or the people of the United States to feel that I have been derelict and have not shown that courtesy and proper observance of the rules of this body, I regret it; I apologize for it. I was ready to do that two minutes after I had acted; but under the provocation, which was known of all of you, I could not have acted otherwise than I did; and while I apologize to the Senate and am sorry that it has occurred, I have nothing more to say."

The junior Senator from South Carolina immediately followed and declared as follows:

"Mr. MCLAURIN of South Carolina. Mr. President, I did not realize that I was in contempt of the Senate, nor do I think now, if my words are read in the RECORD, that I was, but, at the same time, as the Senate has ruled that I am in contempt of this honorable body, I beg leave to apologize.
"I desire to say, Mr. President, that I have been very sorely and severely tried. I was in attendance on the Committee on Indian Affairs when I received a message from a friend in the Senate that my presence was needed here.
"The history of the vote on the Spanish treaty is known to all of you. There have been statements made in newspapers and insinuations that I had been influenced by improper motives in connection with my vote on that treaty. Knowing in my own soul, and knowing that God in heaven also knows that it was false, when I was told that it was centered down to me, I was so outraged by what I considered a most brutal assault upon my honor as a man, and especially in view of the fact that in the beginning of the session, after the action of my party associates, I made a most careful and deliberate statement explaining all these matters, I did not feel as a man that I could ever hold my head up again if I did not resent it in the place where it was delivered, in the strongest and most forcible terms that I could employ.
"With that, Mr. President, I am done, except I have this to say: If there is any more talk of that kind or any more——
"Mr. PATTERSON. I beg the Senator to refrain.
"Mr. MCLAURIN of South Carolina. I will refrain, Mr. President."

We thus present to the Senate the entire record bearing upon this unfortunate occurrence, and no examination or investigation by your committee could possibly throw any additional light upon the transaction, which occurred in open session and in the presence of the membership of this body. That the conduct of the two Senators was an infringement of the privileges of the Senate, a violation of its rules, and derogatory to its high character, tending to bring the body itself into public contempt, can not be questioned or denied. Indeed, the Senate by a unanimous vote has already placed on record its condemnation of the Senators by declaring both guilty of contempt.

The majority of the committee are of the opinion that the legal effect of adjudging these Senators in contempt of the Senate was to suspend their functions as Senators, and that such a punishment for disorderly behavior is clearly within the power of the Senate, but the conclusion they have reached makes it unnecessary to discuss this question.

The offenses committed by the two Senators were not, in the opinion of a majority of the committee, of equal gravity. The charge made by Mr. TILLMAN had been once before in the Senate specifically denied in parliamentary language by Mr. MCLAURIN. The offense charged against Mr. MCLAURIN was among the most reprehensible a Senator could commit. He could not ignore it or fail to refute it and hope to be longer respected as either a man or a Senator.

Mr. MCLAURIN did not commence the encounter, but only stood in his place at his desk, where he was speaking, and resisted the attack that was made upon him.

In other words, his offense was confined to the use of unparliamentary language, for which he had unusual provocation.

Nevertheless, his offense was a violation of the rules of the Senate of so serious a character that, in the opinion of the committee, it should be condemned.

In the case of Mr. TILLMAN the record shows that the altercation was commenced by the charge he made against Mr. MCLAURIN. Such a charge is inexcusable, except in connection with a resolution to investigate. Mr. TILLMAN not only made the charge without any avowal of a purpose to investigate, but also disclaiming knowledge of evidence to establish the offense; and this he did after the charge had been specifically and unqualifiedly denied by Mr. MCLAURIN.

Such a charge under any circumstances would be resented by any man worthy to be a Senator, but, made as it was in this instance, its offensiveness was greatly intensified, and the result must have been foreseen by Mr. TILLMAN if he took any thought, as he should, of the consequences of his statements. This feature of his offense, coupled with the fact that he also commenced the encounter by quitting his seat some distance away from Mr. MCLAURIN, and, rushing violently upon him, struck him in the face, makes the case one of such exceptional misbehavior that a majority of the committee are of the opinion that his offense was of much greater gravity than that of Mr. MCLAURIN.

The penalty of a censure by the Senate, in the nature of things, must vary in actual severity in proportion to the public sense of the gravity of the offense of which the offender has been adjudged guilty. Therefore, notwithstanding the fact that, in the opinion of a majority of the committee, there is a difference in the gravity of the offenses under consideration, your committee are of the opinion that public good and the dignity of the Senate will be alike best promoted and protected, so far as this particular case is concerned, by imposing upon each Senator, by formal vote, the censure of the Senate for the offense by him committed; and therefore the committee recommends the adoption of the following resolution:

"Resolved, That it is the judgment of the Senate that the Senators from South Carolina, BENJAMIN R. TILLMAN and JOHN L. MCLAURIN, for disorderly behavior and flagrant violation of the rules of the Senate during the open session of the Senate on the 22d day of February, instant, deserve the censure of the Senate, and they are hereby so censured for their breach of the privileges and dignity of this body, and from and after the adoption of this resolution the order adjudging them in contempt of the Senate shall be no longer in force and effect."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will now read the views of the minority.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, may I at this point make a correction in the report? I find upon examination that in taking from the RECORD what the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] said the clerk in putting it into the report inserted it in the wrong place, and it should be changed so that the note of the occurrence will come in after the speech of the junior Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator will see that that correction is made?

Mr. BURROWS. Yes; if no objection be made to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the report will be modified in that particular by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. BAILEY. On behalf of myself and four other members of the committee I present the following views, which I ask may be read following the report of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There was already an order of the Senate that the views of the minority presented by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] should be read.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I think it is proper that the views submitted by the Senator from Texas should be read next after the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The views will be read.

Mr. MCCOMAS. To be followed by the views of the minority signed by myself and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The views of the minority submitted by the Senator from Texas will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

We dissent from so much of the report of the committee as asserts the power of the Senate to suspend a Senator and thus deprive a State of its vote, and so much as describes the offenses of the Senators as of different gravity; but we approve the resolution reported.

J. W. BAILEY,
E. W. PETTUS,
JO. C. S. BLACKBURN,
FRED T. DUBOIS,
MURPHY J. FOSTER,
Members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The views presented by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] will now be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The undersigned minority of the committee agree with the statement of the facts given in the report of the majority, but disagree to the punishment proposed by the majority. The junior Senator from South Carolina is guilty of unparliamentary language. The senior Senator of South Carolina is guilty of physical violence. Neither in the statutes of any State nor in the common opinion of mankind are these two offenses the same.

If the Senate is to retain the respect of the country, it must retain its own self-respect. This can not be done by lightly passing over the grave offense it has suffered.

The lightest form of punishment is a reprimand or a censure. It is this latter which the majority of the committee proposes to inflict for two offenses differing in character and gravity.

The minority of the committee are of the opinion that this punishment is inadequate and that to ignore the difference between the offenses is unjust.

The minority of the committee is of opinion that the suspension of the two offending Senators from their Senatorial privileges heretofore inflicted should now be formally adjudged and continued for different periods of time.

And so the minority of the committee submit their views.

By the second clause of the fifth section of the first article of the Constitution "Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member."

On its face this clause means that by a majority vote each House may determine its rules and punish its members for disorderly behavior; but that to expel a member the concurrence of two-thirds is required.

Its history proves this to be the right construction. The Committee on Detail reported the clause thus: "Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings; may punish its members for disorderly behavior, and may expel a member." Madison thought that the power of expelling a member should not be left to a mere majority, and moved to insert the words "with the concurrence of two-thirds" between "may" and "expel." Gouverneur Morris thought the power ought to remain with a majority, but the convention adopted Madison's amendment, and thus the section as amended was approved. (Meig's Growth of the Constitution, 92.)

Story (1st Story on Const., sec. 837), emphasizing the necessity of each House having power to make the rules of its own proceedings, says that "this power would be nugatory unless it was coupled with a power to punish for disorderly behavior or disobedience to those rules. * * * The power to expel for very aggravated misconduct was also indispensable. * * * But such a power so summary * * * it was foreseen might be exerted for mere purposes of faction or party * * * and it has therefore been wisely guarded by the restriction that there shall be a concurrence of two-thirds of the members to justify an expulsion."

Since punishment for disorderly behavior may be inflicted by a majority vote in the Senate, what sorts of punishment may be imposed upon a Senator?

In Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U. S., 189, Justice Miller says: "We see no reason to doubt that this punishment may in a proper case be imprisonment, and that it may be for refusal to obey some rule on that subject made by the House for the preservation of order."

Later, in In re Chapman (166 U. S., 668), Chief Justice Fuller says of the Senate: "It necessarily possesses the inherent power of self-protection" (Ib., 671); "Congress could not divest itself or either of its Houses of the essential and inherent power to punish for contempt in cases to which the power of either House extended."

While the Supreme Court has said that it does not concede that the Houses of Congress possess the general power of punishing for contempt analogous to that exercised by courts of justice, it had admitted that there are cases in which the Houses of Congress have such power of punishing for contempt, and points out the source of this power.

In Kilbourn v. Thompson (103 U. S., 201) the court said: "We may perhaps find some aid * * * if we can find out its source, and fortunately in this there is no difficulty. For, while the framers of the Constitution did not adopt the law and custom of the English Parliament as a whole, they did incorporate such parts of it and with it such privileges of Parliament as they thought proper to be applied to the two houses of Congress."

Among these privileges, says the court, is the right to make rules and to punish members for disorderly behavior. The Senate has not like power with Parliament in punishing citizens for contempt, but it has like power with Parliament in punishing Senators for contempt or for any disorderly behavior or for certain like offenses. Like Parliament, it may imprison or expel a member for offenses. "The suspension of members from the service of the House is another form of punishment." (May's Parliamentary Practice, 53.) This author gives instances of suspension in the seventeenth century and shows the frequent suspension of members under a standing order of the House of Commons, passed February 23, 1880.

Says Cushing, section 280: "Members may also be suspended, by way of punishment, from their functions as such, either in whole or in part or for a limited time. This is a sentence of a milder character than expulsion." "During the suspension," says Cushing, section 627, "the electors are deprived of the services of their representative without power to supply his place, but th erights of the electors are no more infringed by this proceeding than by an exercise of the power to imprison."

The Senate may punish the Senators from South Carolina by fine, by reprimand, by imprisonment, by suspension by a majority vote, or by expulsion with the concurrence of two-thirds of its members.

The offense is well stated in the majority report. It is not grave enough to require expulsion. A reprimand would be too slight a punishment. The Senate by a yea-and-nay vote has unanimously resolved that the said Senators are in contempt. A reprimand is in effect only a more formal reiteration of that vote. It is not sufficiently severe upon consideration of the facts.

We agree that the junior Senator from South Carolina, JOHN L. MCLAURIN, should be suspended from his functions as Senator for five days, and that the senior Senator from South Carolina, BENJAMIN R. TILLMAN, be suspended from his functions as a Senator for twenty days, the time of suspension to be reckoned from the date of the adoption of such a resolution by the Senate.

As we have said, there is a grave difference between the offenses of the two Senators. This difference has not been overstated by the chairman and the members of the committee who agree with him upon this point.

The objection that no punishment should deprive a sovereign State of its votes in the Senate fails when we consider the rights of all the States, and above all the right and the duty of the Senate of the United States to punish adequately a grave offense.

L. E. MCCOMAS.
ALBERT J. BEVERIDGE.

I concur in all of the aforegoing views except as to the punishment of the junior Senator from South Carolina. It is my opinion that the punishment he has already suffered is adequate to his offense. I make no recommendation as to the punishment to be imposed on the senior Senator from South Carolina.

J. C. PRITCHARD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, there is an omission, it seems to me, if I recollect correctly, in the narrative as made in the report of the committee which ought to be supplied by a statement now made upon the floor. Of course I do not undertake, or the Senate will not undertake, to amend the report in any way, but I think the fact I am now about to mention ought to be mentioned in this connection in order that it may furnish what I consider to be an important part of the history of this case.

Of course there was no record of what occurred in the secret session of the Senate. There is, however, a narrative of what were considered by the committee to be the salient and important occurrences in that secret session, and the particular fact which I think ought to go on record is this: Before the adoption of the order adjudging these two Senators in contempt, and, in fact, very soon after the Senate went into secret session, the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], speaking through the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], stated to the Senate that he desired and intended, so soon as he had the opportunity, which would be furnished by the Senate again being in open session, to make acknowledgment to the Senate and to make his apology for what had occurred.

The junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MCLAURIN], speaking through myself, made the same announcement to the Senate, and in each instance it was stated on behalf of each of the Senators that that acknowledgment and that apology would be made by him without reference to the question whether or not the Senate adjudged them to be in contempt.

I think, Mr. President, that that is an important part of the history of this case, and I now state it in order that it may be included in the record.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question before the Senate is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. TELLER. The question is, as I understand, on the resolution first read, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the resolution first read.

Mr. TELLER. Let it be again read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be again read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That it is the judgment of the Senate that the Senators from South Carolina, BENJAMIN R. TILLMAN and JOHN L. MCLAURIN, for disorderly behavior and flagrant violation of the rules of the Senate during the open session of the Senate, on the 22d day of February, instant, deserve the censure of the Senate, and they are hereby so censured for their breach of the privileges and dignity of this body; and from and after the adoption of this resolution the order adjudging them in contempt of the Senate shall be no longer in force and effect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the adoption of the resolution the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before the vote is taken, I simply want to make this observation. In some of our State legislatures a motion to substitute a minority for a majority report is allowable under the rules. I take it that under the rules of this body a report, so called, of a minority is simply the presentation of their views, and that a motion of that kind would not be in order here under our rules.

If such a motion could be made I should feel it my duty to move to substitute the minority for the majority report, because I believe the minority have recommended the precise kind of punishment that ought to be inflicted and that they have clearly differentiated between the offenses committed by these two Senators. Of course, not being able to make that motion and not being able to record my vote in favor of the views so clearly presented by the minority, I shall feel constrained to vote for the resolution which has been reported by the majority, although, to my mind, it does not inflict the proper kind of punishment upon these two Senators, considering the difference in the offenses which they committed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi (when his name was called). Mr. President, being related by kinship to one of the Senators from South Carolina, I ask to be excused from voting on this question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection on the part of the Senate, the Senator is excused.

Mr. MCLAURIN of South Carolina (when his name was called). Mr. President, for obvious reasons I refrain from voting on this question.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). Mr. President, among gentlemen an apology for an offense committed under heat of blood is usually considered sufficient.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. QUARLES. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SPOONER] is detained from the Senate by illness.

Mr. KEAN (after having voted in the affirmative). Mr. President, having heard the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] again insult the Senate, I change my vote from "yea" to "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 54, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—54.

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Hawley,	Pettus,
Allison,	Depew,	Hoar,	Platt, Conn.
Bacon,	Dillingham,	Kearns,	Quarles,
Bailey,	Dolliver,	Lodge,	Rawlins,
Bard,	Dubois,	McCumber,	Simmons,
Bate,	Elkins,	McEnery,	Stewart,
Berry,	Fairbanks,	McMillan,	Taliaferro,
Blackburn,	Foraker,	Mallory,	Teller,
Burrows,	Foster, La.	Martin,	Turner,
Carmack,	Frye,	Mitchell,	Vest,
Clark, Mont.	Gallinger,	Money,	Warren,

NAYS—12.

Beveridge,	Dietrich,	Kittredge,	Pritchard,
Clark, Wyo.	Foster, Wash.	McComas,	Proctor,
Deboe,	Kean,	Millard,	Scott.

NOT VOTING—22.

Burnham,	Hale,	McLaurin, S. C.	Simon,
Burton,	Hanna,	Mason,	Spooner,
Clapp,	Heitfeld,	Morgan,	Tillman,
Daniel,	Jones, Ark.	Penrose,	Wellington.
Dryden,	Jones, Nev.	Platt, N. Y.
Gamble,	McLaurin, Miss.	Quay,

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President——

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, I rise to a question of privilege. I ask that the words of the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], which could not be heard in this part of the Chamber, be taken down.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words spoken by the senior Senator from South Carolina will be read from the desk.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). Mr. President, among gentlemen an apology for an offense committed under heat of blood is usually considered sufficient.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, the words uttered by me were not intended to be offensive, but if they are so considered, I very gladly withdraw them.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from South Carolina was not called to order by anybody. I think we had better proceed regularly.

Mr. BURROWS. It was impossible to hear the Senator from South Carolina; and at the earliest opportunity, as soon as the roll call was completed and the result announced——

Mr. BERRY. The Senator from South Carolina has withdrawn the words.

Mr. BURROWS. I did ask that the words be taken down and read at the desk.

Mr. TELLER. Has the result been announced?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes; the result of the vote has been announced.

Mr. BURROWS. If the Senator from South Carolina has apologized for the words just used by him——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has withdrawn the remarks. Is there objection on the part of the Senate to the withdrawal? The Chair hears none.

Mr. DIETRICH. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I do not wish to interrupt the present proceedings, but I desire on a proper occasion to ask the indulgence of the Senate for a single moment to explain my vote on the resolution. If the proceedings which have intervened are not completed, I will waive my request for the present.

Mr. TELLER (to Mr. PLATT of Connecticut). Waive it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proceedings are completed.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I voted reluctantly for the resolution which has just been passed. I did so because except by the passage of the resolution I saw no way in which the Senate could inflict any punishment upon the Senators who were guilty of disorder and a breach of the privileges of the Senate. I do not regard the punishment sufficient. I think that the punishment should have deprived them for a limited time from participating in the proceedings of the Senate, and I think that some discrimination should have been made in the amount of punishment thus inflicted.

I merely wish to make this explanation of my vote.

Mr. DIETRICH subsequently said: Mr. President, I wish to explain my vote upon the resolution of censure against the Senators from South Carolina. The reason why I voted "nay" was because I did not believe the junior Senator should have been censured at all and that the senior Senator should have been more severely censured.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. HOAR. I desire, in connection with the matter which has been pending, to propose an amendment to the rules. I should like to have it read and referred to the Committee on Rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment to the rules submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] will be read.

The proposed amendment to the rules was read, and referred to the Committee on Rules, as follows:

Resolved, That the following be adopted as an additional rule:

"No Senator in debate shall directly or indirectly, by any form of words, impute to another Senator any conduct or motive unworthy or unbecoming a Senator.

"No Senator in debate shall utter any reproach upon the character or history of any State of the Union."

It shall be the duty of the Chair to enforce the foregoing rule.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3107) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River at or near the city of Kansas City, Mo.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 6300) to provide for the erection of a dwelling for the keeper of the light-house at Kewaunee, Wis.;

A bill (H. R. 7933) providing for the commutation for town-site purposes of homestead entries in certain portions of Oklahoma;

A bill (H. R. 10372) to transfer to the Secretary of the Interior such supervision of the Government Hospital for the Insane, Freedmen's Hospital and Asylum, and the Washington Hospital for Foundlings as may have been conferred upon the board of charities of the District of Columbia under the act approved June 6, 1900, creating such board;

A bill (H. R. 11241) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate in the District of Columbia the disposal of certain refuse, and for other purposes," approved January 25, 1898;

A bill (H. R. 11400) to amend an act entitled "An act in relation to taxes and tax sales in the District of Columbia," approved February 28, 1898;

A bill (H. R. 11471) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903;

A bill (H. R. 11474) for the acknowledgment of deeds and other instruments in the Philippine Islands and Porto Rico affecting land situate in the District of Columbia or any Territory of the United States; and

A bill (H. R. 11611) to divide the State of Texas into four judicial districts.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5833) temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes; asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PAYNE, Mr. DALZELL, and Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print 3,500 copies of the report of the Schley Court of Inquiry, with an amendment; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PERMANENT CENSUS OFFICE.

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President, I desire to present the conference report on the permanent census bill, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The conference report submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10308) to provide for a permanent Census Office, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 9, 11, 17, 18, 20, 22, 27, 30, 32, and 34.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 7, 10, 19, 23, 24, 25, 26, 28, 29, 31, and 33, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of the matter inserted by said amendment the word "Bureau" and insert in lieu thereof "Census Office;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the amended section and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 5. That all employees of the Census Office at the date of the passage of this act, except unskilled laborers, may be appointed by the Director of the Census with the approval of the head of the department to which said Census Office is attached, and when so appointed shall be, and they are hereby, placed, without further examination, under the provisions of the civil-service act approved January 16, 1883, and the amendments thereto and the rules established thereunder; and persons who have served as soldiers in any war in which the United States may have been engaged, who have been honorably discharged from the service of the United States, and the widows of such soldiers, shall have preference in the matter of employment; and all new appointments to the permanent clerical force in the Census Office hereby created shall be made in accordance with the requirements of the civil-service act above referred to."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Strike out all after the words "such classes," in line 4 of the matter inserted by said Senate amendment, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and the Director of the Census is authorized and directed to collect statistics relating to all of the deaf, dumb, and blind, notwithstanding the restrictions and limitations contained in section 8 of said act entitled 'An act to provide for taking the Twelfth and subsequent censuses:' Provided, That in taking the census of said classes the inquiries shall be confined to the following four questions, namely: Name, age, sex, and post-office address;" and the Senate agree to the same.

J. V. QUARLES,
L. E. McCOMAS,
JAMES P. TALIAFERRO,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

A. J. HOPKINS,
CHARLES A. RUSSELL,
F. M. GRIFFITH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HAWLEY. That reading is of no practical use to anybody, by reason of the numbers used and the confusion in the Chamber. I ask that the vote on the conference report may be postponed until we can read the report in the RECORD in the morning.

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President——

Mr. VEST. It is impossible to hear anything in this part of the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will please resume their seats and observe order.

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President, I certainly hope that the distinguished Senator from Connecticut will not insist upon his suggestion.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the Senator will excuse me, does he suppose that there are 20 Senators here who know what is proposed to be done by that report?

Mr. QUARLES. I shall be very glad to explain it in a very few words.

Mr. HAWLEY. We shall not know any better then. Let us have an opportunity to read it. We can read it to-morrow morning in the RECORD, and study it.

Mr. QUARLES. I think, Mr. President, that is a very doubtful compliment to me. The amendments are very few, and I think I can make them entirely plain in a very few words.

I want to remind the Senate that if we can agree to this conference report now and get favorable action in the House the bill may be signed to-morrow. Of course, the significance of it is that there are 500 permanent employees of that force to be discharged to-morrow, and the pressure is very great upon me and everyone connected with it to have this bill passed to-day.

I certainly hope the Senator from Connecticut will permit me to inform him as to what the conference report means, as I will presently do, and I think I can make him understand it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What is the order of business now before the Senate, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The conference report on the permanent census bill is under consideration. Objection was made by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]; but a motion can be made to proceed with its consideration notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. QUARLES. I move that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the conference report notwithstanding the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin moves that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the conference report.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I think the Senator from Wisconsin ought to state to Senators, in view of the desire on his part to take up the conference report immediately, that the bill is already printed with the amendments to it.

Mr. QUARLES. Yes.

Mr. CULLOM. And that Senators can procure copies of it, and see what is in the bill.

Mr. QUARLES. Yes.

Mr. President, after a strenuous and protracted struggle, the conferees have reached an agreement. The chief points of difference between the bill as it now stands and the bill as the Senate passed it are as follows:

As we passed the bill, the salary of the Director of the Census was left at $7,500. As the result of the conference, it now stands at $6,000. As we passed the bill, there was an assistant director provided for, with a salary of $4,000. Your conferees were compelled to yield and allow that feature to be stricken out of the bill in the interest of economy, so that that feature is eliminated. As we passed the bill the chief clerk was to have a salary of $2,800; under this report he will receive $2,500.

As the bill passed here there was a tenure of four years imposed upon the Director and assistant director and some of the chief statisticians. We yielded that provision for the reason that it appeared from an examination of the statute that in no other case of the appointment of a bureau chief has there been any limitation of time upon the appointment, and it was contended in the conference that the Census Bureau, being in a large measure a scientific bureau, ought not to be the first bureau to have a fixed tenure.

In addition to that, as the bill passed the Senate it was urged with great force that the four-year period would bring a change in the Director of the Census on the 1st day of July, 1910. That, of course, is the decennial year. The enumerators begin their work on the 1st day of June, and this change would take place on the 1st day of July, which, as you observe, is the very critical period in that enumeration. As the bill now stands the Director of the Census is removable at pleasure, just as all the other bureau chiefs are, so that any incoming President may remove him. Therefore we thought that feature was not substantial enough to warrant us in holding out longer, and we conceded that.

There are some other changes of phraseology. For instance, section 5 has been perfected. The amendment introduced by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] in favor of the soldiers in any war was found to be too broad. That has been modified so as to apply to those who were honorably discharged from the United States service.

A few other changes of that kind, chiefly in phraseology, constitute all the changes that have been made in the bill since the Senate gave it its approval. I hope, therefore, the report may be concurred in.

Mr. CLAY. I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will allow me to ask him a question. The Senator well remembers that the Senate adopted an amendment to the House bill in regard to the collection and publication of the statistics relative to the cotton crop. I desire to ask the Senator whether or not any changes were made in that provision?

Mr. QUARLES. There was no change whatever made in that.

Mr. CLAY. The Senate amendment was then agreed to?

Mr. QUARLES. The Senate amendment was agreed to just as adopted by this body.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Wisconsin will permit me, I think I caught from the reading of the report of the committee of conference that the amendment which I offered, and which was adopted by the Senate, regarding preference to soldiers and widows of soldiers is retained in the bill with a modification so that it will apply to honorably discharged soldiers and their widows?

Mr. QUARLES. Yes, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report of the conference committee.

The report was agreed to.

PHILIPPINE TARIFF BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5833) temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes, and asking for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked for by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. LODGE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. RAWLINS were appointed.

PROCEEDINGS OF SCHLEY COURT OF INQUIRY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution of the Senate providing for the printing of 3,500 copies of the proceedings of the Schley Court of Inquiry, which was, in line 4, after the word "Inquiry," to insert "together with the findings of the court, Admiral Dewey's opinion, Admiral Schley's appeal to the President, and the President's decision thereon, and," so as to make the concurrent resolution read:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 3,500 copies of the proceedings of the Schley Court of Inquiry, together with the findings of the court, Admiral Dewey's opinion, Admiral Schley's appeal to the President, and the President's decision thereon, and of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 500 copies for the use of the Navy Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution, with the amendment, will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

APPORTIONMENT OF DEPARTMENTAL EMPLOYEES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Civil Service Commission, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 19th instant, a table showing the apportionment of appointments in the departmental service at Washington, D. C., from July 16, 1883, to January 1, 1902, the present apportionment being based upon the census of 1900, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, and ordered to be printed.

SPECIAL POSTAL RATES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Postmaster-General, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 4th instant, certain information relative to the construction placed by the Post-Office Department upon the existing law prescribing the postage for periodical publications like those published by churches, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and ordered to be printed.

OFFICE OF UNITED STATES TREASURER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Treasurer of the United States requesting that a clause in the legislative appropriation bill providing for the salaried force in his office be amended by the insertion therein of "one machinist at $900," and that the number of clerks at $900 be reduced from 64 to 63; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

THE TRANSPORT SERVICE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 21st ultimo, the number, name, and tonnage of Government transports, and certain other facts relating thereto; which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

ISLAND OF GUAM.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a petition from 32 inhabitants of the island of Guam, praying for the appointment of a commission to study the needs of the people of that island; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CLERICAL SERVICE IN THE NAVY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a petition signed by yeomen and others serving on board the U. S. S. Michigan, praying for the enactment of legislation to promote the efficiency of the clerical service in the Navy of the United States, etc.; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

USELESS PAPERS IN EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting schedules of papers, documents, etc., on the files of his Department not needed in the transaction of public business; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Select Joint Committee on the Destruction of Useless Papers, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN H. ALPHIN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy of the findings filed by the court in the cause of John H. Alphin v. The United States; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

DANIEL E. KIMBALL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy of the findings filed by the court in the cause of Daniel E. PROTECTION OF THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. HOAR. I ask leave to give notice that at the conclusion of the consideration of the irrigation bill, which I understand is shortly to be taken up, I shall move the Senate to take up the bill (S. 3653) for the protection of the President of the United States, and for other purposes.

DAUGHTERS OF AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following concurrent resolution; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 7,500 additional copies of Senate Document No. 164, third session Fifty-fifth Congress, being the report of the Daughters of the American Revolution for 1890-1897, together with the historical preface herewith, indorsed by the board of management of that society, of which 2,500 shall be for the use of the Senate and 5,000 for the use of the House of Representatives.

LUCY JANE BALL.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Lucy Jane Ball, mother of J. J. G. Ball, late a messenger of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving at the time of his demise, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

POWERS OF SENATE.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

Resolved, That it is in the power of the Senate to punish a member for disorderly behavior by debarring such member from participation in the proceedings of the Senate.

CONVENTION OF INSTRUCTORS OF DEAF AND DUMB.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent for the adoption of a resolution for a reprint of 500 copies of a certain document for the use of the institution here for the deaf and dumb. The cost will be less than $400.

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the members of the convention of American Instructors of the Deaf, bound in style similar to that of the last report of said convention, 600 copies of the Sixteenth Annual Report of the Proceedings of the Convention of American Instructors of the Deaf, being Senate Document No. 103, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session.

POWERS OF PRESIDING OFFICER OF THE SENATE.

Mr. TURNER. I offer a resolution which I ask may be read and placed on the table, to enable me to call it up on Monday next, after the conclusion of the morning business, and submit some remarks thereon.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That it is not within the province of the presiding officer of the Senate to strike from the yea-and-nay roll the name of any Senator for any cause or to decline to permit any Senator to vote upon any motion, resolution, or bill pending before the Senate, or to prevent any Senator from proceeding in order and under the rules to debate or to perform the functions of a Senator in other respects as fully as any Senator can or may do, except under and to the extent permitted by Rule XIX of the Senate rules, or to control, to the exclusion of the right of the Senate to take order in the premises, a roll call upon any pending motion, resolution, or bill, or other proceeding in which a Senator or Senators have been denied the right to vote; and the Senate now expresses its sense upon the foregoing propositions to the end that a contrary course of conduct pursued in this body and appearing on the Journal and in the record of its proceedings may not constitute a precedent to be called in question in the future.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be printed and lie on the table, subject to the call, if there be no objection, of the Senator from Washington.

HEARINGS ON CHINESE EXCLUSION.

Mr. PENROSE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Committee on Immigration 300 copies of the hearings before the committee on the Chinese-exclusion bills now pending in Congress, and that the same be indexed.

LANDS OF EASTERN OREGON LAND COMPANY.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate, at his earliest convenience, a copy of the report of Special Agent C. E. Loomis, recently submitted to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, in the matter of the claims of settlers upon lands of the Eastern Oregon Land Company, successors in interest of the Dalles Military Road Company, in Sherman County, Oreg., together with the evidence accompanying such report, and also copies of all claims of settlers to lands or for compensation for lands within the limits of the controversy between settlers and said Eastern Oregon Land Company.

CHARGES BY LONDON DOCK COMPANIES.

On motion of Mr. MARTIN, it was Ordered, That Senate Document No. 96, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, being a message from the President of the United States, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of State submitting a copy of a report made by Ambassador Joseph H. Choate relative to certain charges imposed by the London dock companies upon American flour and other American products, be reprinted.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

A bill (H. R. 10372) to transfer to the Secretary of the Interior such supervision of the Government Hospital for the Insane, Freedmen's Hospital and Asylum, and the Washington Hospital for Foundlings as may have been conferred upon the Board of Charities of the District of Columbia under the act approved June 6, 1900, creating such board;

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8581) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"And provided further, That hereafter no pension attorney, claim agent, or other person shall be entitled to receive any compensation for services rendered in securing the introduction of a bill or the passage thereof through Congress granting pension or increase of pension; and any person who shall, directly or indirectly, contract for, demand, receive, or retain any compensation for such services shall be deemed guilty of an offense, and upon conviction thereof shall, for each and every such offense, be fined not exceeding $500, or imprisoned not exceeding two years, or both, in the discretion of the court."

And the Senate agree to the same.

J. H. GALLINGER,
J. C. PRITCHARD,
GEORGE TURNER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

S. S. BARNEY,
H. C. VAN VOORHIS,
JOHN C. BELL,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, when I first heard of the proposition to prohibit any compensation to agents or attorneys for this service it struck me that it was perhaps liable to one objection, and that is that poor and illiterate applicants for special laws must have for the service of the Pension Committee a clear statement of their case and a clear statement of their proof, as they must have in the Pension Office, and that it was not reasonable to deprive them of that privilege, for which they can not always pay unless they get the pension.

But on further consideration I am satisfied that the judgment of the committee is entirely right, and that the evil of promoting such applications by agents who promote them merely to get paid for it and the evil of improper charges by certain people are so great that they ought to be stopped.

What I rose to say is that there ought to be in every State in the Union some provision, either by voluntary associations of soldiers or by State authority, by which such aid could be rendered without cost to the humble and needy applicants. There is such an office in my own State, and I hope there will be one, if there be not one, established everywhere.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I have objections to the entire prohibition of counsel to be given by pension lawyers or attorneys. I think there are many poor men who will be entirely without a friend in this world if they are not allowed to get some good lawyer in the neighborhood to take up their cases. I have had a good deal of experience in this matter, and I know several pension agents of high character, men who can not be impeached and who could no more be unfaithful to a client than they could steal. I want a poor applicant to have a chance to go to one of those men and have his case intelligently and ably stated and courteously and firmly urged. I make this observation as the result of my experience, and it is a pretty large one in pension cases, as may be imagined.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT NEW ORLEANS, LA.

Mr. McENERY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 76) to provide for a public building at New Orleans, La.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other governmental offices in the city of New Orleans, La., the cost of the site and building, including vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, not to exceed $1,250,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a building thereon at New Orleans, State of Louisiana."

RECLAMATION OF ARID LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3057) appropriating the receipts from the sale and disposal of public lands in certain States and Territories to the construction of irrigation works for the reclamation of arid lands.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with and that it may be read for amendment. I have several amendments to propose on behalf of the Committee on Public Lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota asks that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that committee amendments shall first receive action. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, and read to line 10 on page 3.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. In line 9, being the first line of section 3, after the word "Interior," I move to strike out the words "may, in his discretion" and to insert "shall, at the time of giving the public notice provided for in section 4 of this act;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior shall, at the time of giving the public notice provided for in section 4 of this act, withdraw from public entry the lands required for any irrigation works contemplated under the provisions of this act, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 23 on page 3.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. In line 23, after the word "practicable," I move to strike out the following words:

He may cause to be let contracts for the construction of the same, in whole or in part, providing the necessary funds therefor are available in the reclamation fund, and thereupon.

This is a committee amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read.

The Secretary read the amendment.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will state that this amendment will appear later in the same section. It is simply a transposition in the interest of the administration of the law, if the bill becomes a law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to line 14 on page 4.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, There is an amendment proposed by the committee in line 11.

The SECRETARY. In line 11, after the word "commence," stike out a period and insert a comma; strike out the capital "T" and insert a lower-case "t" in the next word, and strike out the word "shall" after the word "charges" and insert the word "to."

Mr. COCKRELL. In what line?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PETTUS in the chair). In line 11, page 4.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It is a mere change of punctuation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 14, page 4, after the word "benefits," to insert:

After giving the public notice aforesaid the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be let contracts for the construction of the necessary works in whole or in part, providing the funds therefor are available in the reclamation fund.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 4, line 14, to strike out the words "Provided, That" and capitalize the letter "i" in the word "in;" so as to read:

In all construction work eight hours shall constitute a day's work, and no Asiatic labor shall be employed thereon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 4, line 19, after the word "reclaim," to strike out "such lands" and insert "at least one-half of the total area of his entry;" so as to read:

That the entryman upon lands to be irrigated by such works shall, in addition to compliance with the homestead laws, reclaim at least one-half of the total area of his entry for agricultural purposes, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, on page 5, line 4, after the word "shall," to strike out the words "work a cancellation of the homestead entry and a forfeiture of all rights under this act" and to insert "render the entry subject to cancellation, with the forfeiture of all rights under this act, as well as of any moneys already paid thereon;" so as to read:

The annual installments shall be paid to the receiver of the local land office of the district in which the land is situated, and a failure to make any two payments when due shall render the entry subject to cancellation, with the forfeiture of all rights under this act, as well as of any moneys already paid thereon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert, at the end of section 5, the following:

Registers and receivers shall be allowed the usual commissions on all moneys paid for lands entered under this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, page 5, line 15, after the words "operation of," to strike out "but not the title to," so as to read, "Then the management and operation of such irrigation works," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "works," in line 16, to strike out "excepting reservoirs and the work necessary for their protection and operation."

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us see how it would read if amended.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The language which it is proposed to strike out will appear at the end of that section in a proviso which is proposed by the committee. If the Senator will allow the section to be read through that amendment will appear.

Mr. COCKRELL. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "Interior," at the end of section 6, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the title to the reservoir and the works necessary for their protection and operation shall remain in the Government until otherwise provided by Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, so many amendments have been made to the bill during its reading, which are not in print, but simply attached to the bill by slips, that, though I have a copy of the bill before me, I find it very difficult to understand it as it now is. I therefore suggest to the Senator that he ask for an order for the reprinting of the bill with the amendments which have been agreed to before we proceed further with it, unless he desires to address the Senate on it to-day.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I understand the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], who has just risen, desires to address the Senate on the bill, if the Senate is willing. I have a copy of the bill prepared with the proposed amendments, so that the Senator from Missouri may examine them. I hope we may be able to dispose of the bill to-day. The amendments are merely in the interest of better administration of the law. They have been suggested by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is a bill that is very important, I admit, but I should like to see it in the form it is proposed to be finally placed before being called upon to vote on it. There are so many amendments that I was not able to keep up with them as the reading progressed. I do not want to prevent the consideration of the bill; but the Senator from Wyoming may proceed with his remarks. I think, however, the bill ought to be printed before we act on it, so that we can see exactly what it is.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, there are some ten or fifteen amendments which have been proposed to the bill that it was impossible to understand from the reading as it progressed. I think the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] is a very proper one, and that we should have the bill reprinted with the amendments which have been agreed to, so that we may understand it before we are called upon to act upon it.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I agree with the Senators. I think the bill should be reprinted with the proposed amendments. After the Senator from Wyoming concludes, I will consent, if Senators desire, that the bill shall go over without losing its place on the Calendar.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I have no desire whatever to hasten ultimate action on this bill. I have, however, a few observations which I shall be glad to submit. The remarks I desire to present can be submitted at this time as well as later, because they pertain not to any particular portion of this bill, but to the general project of irrigation.

Mr. COCKRELL. This is the proper time, then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming is recognized.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, for one I am heartily glad that the atmosphere of the Senate has been cleared of private quarrels. I am heartily glad that, after two or three days of public time absolutely wasted, we can come once more to the consideration of public business and to the consideration of those matters which affect the whole people, and which do not particularly affect the standing of any one or two members of this body.

The bill under consideration, Mr. President, is one, the importance of which, I think, is greatly underestimated. So far as I know, it cuts no special figure in the consideration of the Senate or of the House of Representatives or of the country, and yet it concerns a section of this country that covers one-third of our entire area. It considers the welfare of the people who represent 600,000,000 acres of the Government domain. It is a bill, in my notion, second only in the administration of our public lands and public-land laws to the homestead act which was passed forty years ago this very year.

I regret exceedingly that the discussion of this bill this afternoon should not have been intrusted to some Senator who is an expert on the matter of irrigation and the matter of arid lands. I believe, however, that perhaps in the consideration of this measure I can bring a more unbiased judgment than those to whom I have referred, because I have not one dollar or one acre in interest in any land that may be affected by this bill. I am only interested in the welfare of my State, in the welfare of the arid region of the Rocky Mountains, and, far beyond that, in the welfare of the people, the sons and daughters of the older States.

The bill presented now for the consideration of the Senate is one that has been devised in the wisdom, in the calm consideration, and in compromises, representing no individual views, but in the wisdom of all the representatives of thirteen States and three Territories represented in both Houses of Congress.

Whatever may be the views of any person on the general subject of irrigation by means of governmental aid or otherwise, no one can attribute to the present bill either indefinite statement of the object sought to be accomplished or evasion as to the means and methods to be employed. The bill is plain, clear, and precise on both these points, and hence is subject to and invites discussion and argument upon the general question and along the whole line. If the matter of national interest and aid is not constitutional or advisable, or if the plans as indicated in the bill are not proper and feasible, then the proposition should be voted down.

If the Congress of the United States has no power to assist in the reclamation of arid lands, then the subject should be dropped and the discussion which has been going on in and out of Congress and in public meetings and prints for so long should be closed and the lands left desert and bare, given up to the homes of the wolf and coyote, instead of to man and his settlements and homes forever; or be subject to reclamation at private hands only, a plan evidently impracticable, if not impossible, of accomplishment.

If, further, it is thought that the Congress shall be acting within its proper and legitimate functions in making more valuable to the Government its own property, settling with worthy American citizens its now waste places; but if it is not considered that the bill now presented will carry out this purpose, then also should this bill be rejected and another drawn and enacted into law that will in a better way and in fuller measure meet the requirements of the case, and to the consideration of some of the features of each of these propositions I desire to invite the attention of the Senate, and I do so, fully conscious of the fact that I am no authority on irrigation matters as are many of the representatives from the arid and semiarid regions, but also knowing that there are many others in this Chamber and elsewhere as ill informed as myself but who are seeking a just and proper conclusion as to a matter that has been in the public eye for many years.

In round numbers there are 600,000,000 acres of Government land in the States and Territories sought to be affected by this bill, and from the best estimates obtainable from Government engineers and others there are from 5 to 10 per cent of these lands that can be reclaimed by a proper and comprehensive system of storage and distribution of waters. Has the Government the right to enter on such an undertaking? To my mind there can be no question as to the legal authority of the General Government not only to protect its own property but to increase the value thereof in any way which Congress in its wisdom may devise. Instances of the exercise of this power are numerous and recent, and these without question as to whether Congress has acted in the direct line of benefit to commerce or not and without reference to the question as to whether the power has been exercised over the country generally or has been local in its application.

Possibly the aid given to the establishment, repairs, and preservation of the levees on the lower Mississippi is as good an illustration of the exercise of this power as any. Millions of dollars have been taken from the public Treasury for this purpose, and rightly so, and no one complains or questions the authority, and yet there are few indeed who believe that the expenditure thus made is not more for the protection of private lands and interests than for the public purpose of aiding commerce. We all know that the object and purpose of this work is to keep the river within due bounds, to so control it in flood time that damage to adjacent lands, in large or small areas, shall be reduced to a minimum, and farms shall be protected and crops made safe by this expenditure of public money, raised by the general revenue laws of the country, when otherwise desolation would reign and the labor of private interests be as futile to reclaim the land and produce the crops, by reason of an overabundance of water, as are the same private efforts now impossible to reclaim and make productive the lands mentioned in this bill because of the lack of water.

The objections urged against the general proposition of governmental construction are many and along various lines. One believes that no action should be had because the Government might thus be committed to a system of improvements the cost of which would be not only indefinite but inconceivable, estimates, or pretended estimates, running into the hundreds of millions. Others are ostensibly in favor of the general idea of irrigation, yet are never satisfied with any general plan or any specific proposition. Others are apparently in favor of any scheme except the one under consideration at a particular time. Some, and I hope, indeed, they are few, are against any system or plan of irrigation, public or private, and against any settlement or plan of action that will bring under cultivation any land in addition to that now under the plow, for fear that the farmers in the more favored sections may be injured by an excess of production; and this is the oldest and most untenable of all objections to the pending bill.

The argument carried to its logical conclusion and applied to other phases of our national life would stagnate every business enterprise under our flag. The argument is made, and apparently with seriousness, that no more land should be opened to cultivation and production, because such action would be injurious in making greater production and competition in farm products, and consequently put increased burdens upon the farmers of the East and middle West. Such an argument, and at length, was made elsewhere and in another chamber within the present winter, and such an argument is made publicly and privately the land over. It is an argument, not of Americanism, not of broad-minded statesmanship, but, at this day, of narrow and selfish local and personal interest.

Even if the result should be as feared, still there is little or no excuse for a policy that would forever foster and enrich the farmers of an Eastern State while refusing a bare subsistence to the more hardy and progressive man who would conquer new spots within our great domain, and who would himself add to the riches of our common country, and by his labor and energy and enterprise make productive for the benefit of all those places now devoted to solitude alone. The idea of retarding the western zone of production is not new, and has been urged by wiser statesmen than those now advocating it. But forebodings and prophesies of even the wise fathers have come to naught. Who is there, who is now preaching this doctrine of nondevelopment, who would have the farms of the country stay on the east slope of the Alleghanies, as the wise ones of the colonial times advocated?

Who is not now glad that the great Mississippi Valley was settled and put under cultivation until it has in truth become the granary of the world? Who now would have our farm lands and settlements stop with the Missouri, or who would end our western development at the summit of the Rockies? And yet all these things were advocated by those wiser than many now declaiming against further development. And notwithstanding the enormous acreage and production since the first pioneer floated down the Ohio, every step of the way, every pushing of the frontier little or much, has resulted, not only in most marvelous increase in the general wealth of the nation, but an increase in the wealth, comfort, and happiness of the individual as well, both in the new settlements and in the older localities.

Isolation is no profitable policy in this country. Whatever is of advantage to one section does not harm another. On the contrary, every additional field put under cultivation, every foot of progress made, every mile the frontier is pushed, by so much are the nation and its citizens benefited. As said, the fears of the fathers in this direction have happily not been realized. Virginia and South Carolina sought to confine political power to the seaboard. Washington, while not seeking to retard development, wanted but one State settled at a time in the Northwest, and then in sequence from east to west. Jefferson would have had the northwestern part of his purchase traded to the Indians for other lands farther East and have the advance westward made only in compact form. Madison feared to see the population extend west of the Mississippi. And yet each and all of these in their day were mistaken in the effect which frontier development should have and has had upon the individual and upon the nation at large.

This onward march toward the West has given homes and independence to the citizen and stability to the nation. Every new farm opened up, every new field cultivated and made productive has proven an undisguised and unquestioned benefit and blessing, notwithstanding the fears of the fathers. There was with them a justification and excuse for their timidity; the experiment had not then been tried. The market for breadstuffs did not then lie at our very doors as it now does. The eaters did not then so far outnumber the producers as now. And yet the history of our settlement westward has been that the eastern settlements, States and cities, have been the first general beneficiaries of every new development toward the West.

And in view of all these facts, how is it that Americans of today can be found so shortsighted as to believe that new fields opened now will sterilize the old; that wealth produced in the arid region will take from that in the humid; that labor employed in the Rockies will displace that now employed east of the Mississippi? Nay! Nay! All development made, all wealth created, all labor employed in what are now waste places will not take from but add to the sum total of our individual wealth and our national aggrandizement. As it has been in the past so will it be in the future; as our States strive for increased production and measure their wealth and prosperity thereby so should the nation seek and carry out those policies that will add to our material production. And still, in spite of all these lessons of the past, those are found who still maintain the view indicated.

To my mind the present proposition for the immediate reclamation of these arid lands is the pressing of the poisoned chalice to the lips of the farming classes in this nation, which, if it kill them not, will at least for another generation leave them in either torpor or misery,

This was said in another place but recently. This, to my mind, is the short-sighted statesmanship that would well fit in with the policy of the trusts that is universally condemned, that "production must be cut down so that prices may be maintained or increased," taking no thought whatever for the necessities of the consumer; the shortsightedness that would pray for drought in Kansas, Nebraska, and the Dakotas in order that breadstuffs might reach a higher price for the farmers of Pennsylvania. Such, I do not think, is the spirit that animates our legislators, nor do I think such spirit will prevail in the consideration of this bill.

Mr. President, the above and kindred objections have been made over and over again in the press, in Congress, and in messages of the Executive, only in the end to be discountenanced and repudiated by the American people.

Presidents Pierce and Buchanan, in their learned and lengthy veto messages, the first refusing to give the Executive assent to a bill providing for the grant of certain public lands or the proceeds thereof to establish and support public institutions, and the second in his veto of the bill to grant to each State certain lands for the support of agricultural colleges and—save the mark!—afterwards in his veto of the homestead bill, strike at this matter pretty thoroughly from both the constitutional and the practical standpoint. Yet the Congress of the United States, representing clearly the will and authority of the people, have settled those matters well and forever. To read from these messages one would think that the opponents of this and kindred irrigation plans had read and drawn their inspiration and arguments from those messages of forty-five years ago.

Mr. President, I will stop long enough to read an extract from the message of President Buchanan in 1860, in which he gives some of his reasons for placing the Executive veto upon the act of Congress which gave us the homestead act and settled up our magnificent domain. I want to read the argument the President used. He said in his veto message:

It is a common belief within their limits that the older States of the Confederacy do not derive their proportionate benefit from the public lands. This is not a just opinion. It is doubtful whether they could be rendered more beneficial to these States under any other system than that which at present exists. Their proceeds go into the common Treasury to accomplish the objects of the Government, and in this manner all the States are benefited in just proportion.

President Buchanan wanted to make certain that the older States should not be deprived of their rights in the heritage of the public lands. He said:

But to give this common inheritance away would deprive the old States of their just proportion of this revenue without holding out to any the least corresponding advantage. Whilst it is our common glory that the new States have become so prosperous and populous, there is no good reason why the old States should offer premiums to their own citizens to emigrate from them to the West. That land of promise presents in itself sufficient allurements to our young and enterprising citizens without any adventitious aid. The offer of free farms would probably have a powerful effect in encouraging emigration, especially from States like Illinois, Tennessee, and Kentucky, to the west of the Mississippi, and could not fail to reduce the price of property within their limits. An individual in States thus situated would not pay its fair value for land when by crossing the Mississippi he could go upon the public lands and obtain a farm almost without money and without price.

Mr. President, in the development of time the public-land system of the United States Government has grown to that sublime height when we want to say to every honest man, "You shall take home and lands without money and without price."

A writer of experience, an accomplished engineer officer of the United States Army, Colonel Chittenden, who has given much attention, professionally and otherwise, to irrigation and reservoir propositions, disposes of this mistaken and selfish objection in the North American Review in language whose force and clearness can not be improved upon; and I beg the indulgence of the Senate while I read for one moment from an article in the February number of that magazine. In an article entitled "Government Construction of Reservoirs" he meets this very objection of interference with private interests in the East. He says:

Government construction of reservoirs in the arid regions is opposed by the Eastern farmer on the ground that under such a policy he would be taxed in the interest of competitors in his own line of business.

I think that states the proposition as cogently as it could possibly be stated.

Of all the plausible economic fallacies that find lodgment in the public mind this has perhaps the feeblest foundation. It is like that other argument, which one hears nearly every day, that the invention of machinery restricts the field of labor. Although it has been proven over and over again that mechanical invention, by increasing wealth, has made possible the employment of labor on a scale that would be utterly impossible without it, still the advent of every new machine is condemned in many quarters as a new invasion of the rights of labor. So in the case here considered. The permanent establishment in the Western country of a large and vigorous population would stimulate markets of all kinds in the East far more than it would depress any by reason of competition.

Its agricultural products would be largely consumed at home, and it is absurd to talk of their entering the markets of the world in competition with products of the Central West, where nature has lavished her favors in a fertile soil and generous climate beyond almost any other portion of the globe. If, perchance, certain products can be raised on these irrigated lands of better quality than elsewhere, is not the country as a whole the gainer by having them raised there? Does anyone believe it would promote the general welfare to drive from the markets the fruits of southern California, or the potatoes and melons of Colorado? It is one of the chief advantages of this great nation, where no custom-houses restrict the free interchange of commodities between the States, that every community can enjoy what is best in every other community, and the whole country works together with a maximum of economy in promoting the public good. The agricultural interests of the East, and the narrow and provincial statesmanship which occasionally echoes their contention in this matter, should stand on higher ground. The upbuilding of the West will promote rather than injure their prosperity.

Mr. President, it would indeed seem that even a casual glance at the history and effect upon the country at large, both East and West, would dispose of this phase of the question in any unbiased mind, and with every man who is able to see beyond his own garden fence and who is able to realize that in the prosperity of the country at large is to be found the prosperity of the citizen of each section, and in the increase of wealth of the whole is to be found the increase in wealth of the individual. And now, Mr. President, let us consider for a moment to whose benefit this proposed legislation will accrue if this or a similar bill shall become a law.

I am fearful that a hasty conclusion has been reached in some sections. I am fearful lest the impression prevails that the improvements and works contemplated have a value purely local and of a benefit solely to those living within the arid States and Territories. I hope that a broader view will prevail, and that the national spirit so often appealed to by the West in consideration of Western affairs, appeals always so candidly considered by the East, and always in the end decided justly and on broad lines, will prevail in the consideration of this measure.

The work is national and the results as truly and broadly so. Of course, Wyoming is as desirous of increasing her material wealth, of making her lands to blossom and produce, and of populating her fields and cities as are the older States, but we hope and believe that the increase in wealth and opportunity which legislation of this sort will open up to our sparse population will be of equal benefit to those who shall come from your borders, to your boys and girls from the middle West when they turn their faces toward the setting sun in search of broader opportunities and larger success, as their fathers also turned their steps in the same direction but a few years ago; this splendid Western wave that created imperial Commonwealths in the Ohio and Mississippi valleys shall find its fellow rising to the mountain summits and beyond in the still farther West.

These infant States, planted by your hand and nurtured by your care, shall yet furnish the homes for your children as well as ours. The New England names and characteristics will be ingrained in the history and advancement of our mountain States as it has been ingrained in those of the prairie States. If the argument were true, and it is not, that the opening of the new farm means an abandonment of the old; that the farm opened up in Utah means the closing of one in Pennsylvania or New England; if, I say, this argument were sound, as it is not, yet I can not think that any in this Chamber is so wedded to the acre of the East that he would deny the acre of the West to his children, if the welfare, prosperity, and happiness of his boy or girl shall be increased by the change.

Our population is fast increasing. Opportunities for independent producing homes are not now too plenty. What shortsighted statesmanship not to open the avenues for development next to our hands. Conservatism is well, but conservatism never discovered our continent, built our cities, cut out our splendid farms, or gave us our present national standing and greatness. The spirit of advancement, of experiment, of courage has been the mainspring of our marvelous growth, prosperity, and happiness. Let us not stop now, when the opportunity offers without draft on our National Treasury, without injury to any other part of our nation, or to any individual citizen. Let us not stop, I entreat, but let us go on in our great strides. Let us not think that increase in the possible number of homes or in the wealth of our citizens is a danger to be avoided, but let us embrace the opportunity offered to-day; and in fifty years from now our children, secure in their new heritages wrested from adverse natural surroundings, in view of all the splendid results achieved, will wonder at our hesitation in making glad the desert places of our land, even as we to-day wonder at the hesitation of our fathers fifty years ago in opening up homes for the benefit of all.

Mr. President, in the consideration of this measure it should not be forgotten that as a landowner the Government itself will be the greatest beneficiary; millions of acres of its own domain will be taken from what might be termed its worthless securities and made its most valuable. The number of acres in Government ownership, compared to the number in present private ownership, that will be benefited must be 50 to 1 or more. The ownership of land in this region now worthless, or the best of it worth not to exceed $1.25 per acre, is something like 600,000,000 acres, as stated, divided among the States and Territories, from 5 to 10 per cent of which can be reclaimed.

In due process of time, under the operation of this bill, the gross increase of value of the land will be something enormous, every dollar of which will be paid and borne by the settler and home builder. The increased productiveness of the land will more than compensate him for the greatly increased price, and under the terms proposed he will be enabled to pay easily and without distress. I can conceive of no measure that could be formed that could work with greater or more equal advantage to both Government or purchaser. But it is urged that this increase in value and price does not in reality accrue to the Government, for the reason that the money derived from the sale of these lands goes into a fund for the building of other reservoirs and the reclamation of other lands; that the money does not go into the general Treasury for the payment of general indebtedness or of current expenses of the nation; but the fact here alone is true, while the conclusion is not warranted.

Every acre thus brought under water and irrigation augments the general wealth of the nation and increases its real assets. Such a line of reasoning would say that the farmer who uses the proceeds of his year's crops for the development and improvement of his farm has gained nothing by his year's endeavor and the product of his fields, and that his increased wealth is shown only by the additional figures in his bank account. But, after all, the increase for the nation lies not so much in the increased value of the land as in the men and women she puts thereon. They become producers, adding to the tangible property of the nation, and consumers as well, taking of the products of the field in other portions of our common country, and of the output of the factory, the mine, and the loom.

Every additional family put upon a productive 80 or 160 acre farm becomes an additional consumer and builder up of our home market, for our manufactures, in exact proportion as his new opportunities give him additional means and advantages. The public lands are not now considered as they are in some countries, a means of direct revenue, but rather a means of building up sturdy, law-abiding communities of patriotic citizens, who, having local habitation and a home, shall constitute an unlimited bank account of patriotism upon which the nation can confidently rely and draw in time of national distress and peril, as was said in this Chamber nearly fifty years ago.

I can not refrain from reading a statement which was made in this Chamber when the homestead law was under consideration as to the object, as to the purposes, as to the result of the then proposed law. I desire to give credit where credit belongs. A Senator from Kansas, Mr. Pomeroy, in the course of his remarks upon the homestead bill, spoke as follows:

> Now, then, I ask, How can the public lands be used so as to best increase the wealth of the country and so be the better able to consume the imports of the country, as well, also, as to meet the taxes imposed by the Government?

And here follows the particular portion to which I wish to call particular attention. I fear we sometimes lose sight of these significant facts:

> And here let it be observed that the wealth of a nation does not consist in the money paid into its treasury, exacted, as it often is, from half-paid toiling millions, nor in an endless unoccupied public domain, running to waste with wild men and wild buffaloes. But wealth consists in flocks and herds, cultivated fields, in well-paid labor, and well-directed energy. The strength of a nation does not consist in the numbers or bravery of the men in her armies or navies, nor whether they are well or poorly led to the conflict, or not led at all. But real strength consists in being able to reproduce another army or navy when one is destroyed or captured, and in being able to sustain an unlimited force until the angel of peace descends to bless the land. Real strength consists in the hearts, the bones, the sinews of an independent, loyal, free yeomanry, who have the comforts of a home, the fear of a God, the love of mankind, and the inspiration of a good cause. Such an army will press gloriously onward to victory. The greatness of a nation does not consist in its high-sounding professions, in its lofty palaces, cathedrals, spires, and domes, ancient and honored names of the present or the past, living or dead. Men constitute the wealth, the strength, the greatness of a State.
> "High-minded men,
> * * * *
> Men who their duties know,
> But know their rights, and knowing, dare maintain."
> "The wealth, the strength, the greatness of a nation consists in the largest number proportionate to the whole of happy, contented, virtuous, and independent families it sustains. And I care not what other means of subsistence men may devise. The trades, the professions, the wits, the brains of a man may fail him, but the inspired truth will then even brighten with more complete effulgence, "that the earth abideth." With 160 acres of God's free earth under a man in his own right, and genial skies above him, he shall not want. For "seed time and harvest, summer and winter, day and night" shall not fail him till the heavens be no more.

I believe it to be the universal experience that whenever a matter of great public interest is brought to the attention of Congress, or any other legislative body, that some person, in his own proper interest, arises to combat the conclusions of those who have arrived at a satisfactory solution of the matter presented, and will never be contented unless his individual views be embodied in the final solution.

There is now extant a certain publication known as the "National Homemaker," purporting to be published at Washington, D. C., and to interpret the views of those who are the true friends of irrigation and the reclamation of the arid land. Nowhere within the covers of said publication is found the name of anyone who is responsible for the same, and from cover to cover it seems only to express the individual views of one or two persons upon this great subject of national aid.

It is a publication that, from a mechanical point of view, is unexcelled. So far as I am informed, it has no subscription list, represents no organized effort in behalf of irrigation, but in its editorials, illustrations, and general trend opposes the pending bill and everything that looks toward the reclamation of the public lands except as the same shall be accomplished through absolute and unqualified appropriation of public moneys to a national project. Whence the inspiration for the editorials comes or from what source the revenue is derived to sustain this publication I am unable at this time to state. It is far from me to ascribe to anyone the motive to defeat any and all irrigation propositions that may come before the Congress of the United States; but certainly to one acquainted with the conditions, or who has due consideration of the temper of the American Congress or of the belief of the various States which have joined in the consideration and development of the pending bill, it can but appear that the effect if not object of the publication and of the editorials mentioned is to either postpone indefinitely any action of Congress upon this question or to build up a bureau in the Government service for the individual remuneration or aggrandizement of certain ones opposing the theory and form of the present bill.

In the editorials and articles to which I shall presently call your attention complaint of the pending bill is made because, first, it promotes the vesting of title to immense tracts of land in individual and monopolistic holders; and second, that the control of waters after leaving the reservoirs shall be vested in the States and Territories through which such waters flow. I ask any unbiased Senator upon this floor to read carefully the provisions of the bill and proposed law with the amendments and find in any line or sentence of the same any avenue which is not safeguarded against the undue accumulation of public land in private hands. On the contrary, the purpose of the bill, the effect of the bill honestly administered, would be to make individual homes in small areas, and would most effectually prevent the accumulation of large holdings in the hands of speculators, cattle barons, or sheep kings. The power is absolutely left with the Secretary of the Interior to prescribe in each individual proposition the amount of land that shall be taken by any one person the head of a family.

I do not suppose that any law can be passed—that any plan can be devised—that will prevent the purchase of lands after the title has passed from the Government by individual owners. Congress has not deemed it wise to prevent the transfer of private lands into single ownership, nor could it be done if so desired; but it will not be urged, I imagine, against the beneficent provisions of the homestead law that the same should not have become a law for the reason that individual owners might not thereafter transfer their interest, to their own profit, into the hands of other parties. The present proposed law is far more stringent in its operation than was the homestead law passed by the Congress of the United States and approved by President Lincoln. The intention of the law is—and an honest intention—to provide homes upon the public domain for those now without homes, to relieve our congested centers of population, and to build up great commonwealths in the land, where now there is no inhabitant save the animal of the plains. If this is an unworthy object, then indeed should the advice of the opposers be followed, and then indeed should this nation cease from any attempt to build up the heritage which we have from the Almighty, and stop in the onward march which we have up to this time so gladly hailed.

The object of the learned editor referred to seems to be to build up a great Government bureau which shall have control of all the lands and waters in our arid regions. Upon this proposition the line of cleavage is very marked, and on this proposition every true friend of irrigation can well afford to align himself. The question of the conservation of waters is one of national importance; the question of reservoir sites and reservoir building is one that appeals to the Government as a matter of national import, but the question of State or Territorial control of waters after having been released from their bondage in the reservoirs which have been provided is a separate and distinct proposition. The waters in my own State rising within its area, bound, enter, or run through twenty different States and Territories of this Union; and the headwaters of the Columbia, of the Colorado, and of the Missouri, and thus incidentally of the Mississippi, are therein found. It is right that the General Government should control, should conserve, and should reservoir the headwaters of these streams. In this it is a national and not a State proposition. But in the distribution of these waters in Wyoming, Colorado, Montana, Idaho, Nebraska, Arizona, New Mexico, the Dakotas, and every other State or Territory west of the Mississippi River, it is right and proper that the various States and Territories should control in the distribution. The conditions in each and every State and Territory are different. What would be applicable in one locality is totally and absolutely inapplicable in another. The conditions that prevail at 7,000 feet of altitude are different from those that prevail at almost sea level. In each and every one of the States and Territories affected, after a long series of experiments, after a due consideration of conditions, there has arisen a set of men who are especially qualified to deal with local conditions.

Every one of these States and Territories has an accomplished and experienced corps of engineers who for years have devoted their energies and their learning to a solution of this problem of irrigation in their individual localities. To take from these experienced men, to take from the legislatures of the various States and Territories, the control of this question at the present time would be something little less than suicidal. They are the men qualified to deal with the question, the laws are written upon their statute books and read of all men, and in everyone of these States and Territories the laws have been passed that most diligently regard the rights of the settler and of the farmer, and most diligently and intelligently exclude the idea of monopolistic ownership of the public lands or control of the public waters.

It is said again by opponents of the bill that what we want are men and families and actual bona fide settlers; that what we do not want is that large areas of public domain shall be taken from the settler and placed in the hands of the larger corporate interests; that is exactly what this bill guards with jealousy and is one of the ideas that the bill is designed to promote, and any statement to the contrary, any belief expressed, either in the National Homemaker or elsewhere, that such is not the object and purpose and ultimate result of the bill must come from some motive not in the best interests of the States and Territories to which it applies, or to the citizens of the United States in general who may now desire or who may hereafter desire to make their homes upon these lands.

The question is asked in this same publication, "What is the use of wasting any more precious time trying to unite the West?" The answer to that is that the West is already united from the Missouri River to the coast, from the British possessions to the Mexican line. Every State and every Territory united in recommending that this bill, as prepared by the committee and as recommended by the Committee on Public Lands, do pass and become a law.

Referring to those who framed this bill, who worked with care and patience and patriotism night after night, sinking their individual views, day after day working for the general good, the National Homemaker, in its issue of February, 1902, makes use of the following quotation from the San Francisco Chronicle:

> They pretend to be irrigationists in order that the friends of irrigation may seem to be divided. They should be incontinently thrust out and no longer be consulted in irrigation matters.

Who? The representatives of all the Western States and Territories. The men from all the States and Territories west of the Missouri River—the men who have been face to face with the irrigation proposition for twenty-five years—are to be incontinently thrust out and no longer to be consulted in irrigation matters. Then this publication says:

> Let them go into the opposition, where they belong.

This sentiment, Mr. President, in another direction, I heartily second. The friends of irrigation in the arid States, the friends of irrigation in the Territories subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, by compromise, by reason, by consultation, have arrived at a conclusion which is embodied in this bill, and the National Homemaker and National Irrigation, publications made alternately under the one or other name ostensibly in favor of irrigation, oppose alone the proposition. I quote to it and to the Senate the same as they quoted to us, from the San Francisco Chronicle:

> They pretend to be irrigationists in order that the friends of irrigation may seem to be divided. They should be incontinently thrust out and no longer consulted in irrigation matters. Let them go into the opposition, where they belong.

It is further claimed by the same authority that this bill ought not to be considered because it is presented by a section of the country that is directly interested, or will be, under the operation of the law. This is indeed a serious charge. The men who have prepared this bill, and the States that are interested directly in its operation, are men who for many years have lived in the arid regions—States which for many, many years have felt the burden of unimproved lands contributing nothing to the taxable value of the Commonwealths. These men have from early manhood until now studied the problems connected with water and land and the application of the one to the other. The ultimate conclusion from the argument is that these men and these States are not prepared to say what would be the best method of dealing with the question.

The argument is so ludicrous that it need but to be stated in order to be refuted. The inference is that those who have paid no especial attention to the subject are best qualified to judge as to the measure which ought to be introduced; that those who live under the summer rains and the smiles of Providence in this behalf are best qualified to judge as to the situation of those who are deprived of these beneficent influences. Following this argument to its conclusion, for Secretary of the Treasury we should have a man to direct the finances of this Government who has never had any contact with financial conditions; the great mercantile establishments should employ as buyers those who have no knowledge of commercial rules; the great railroads should employ as superintendents and general managers those who have been born and reared out of sight of the great transportation lines and know nothing of the needs or necessities of the present.

No; the argument will not do. The men best qualified to formulate a law of this sort—and it will not do to say that these men are thieves, that they have ulterior motives—the men best qualified to form a law of this sort are the men who for years have been brought into contract with the very propositions sought to be solved by this bill. The Senators and Representatives from the West gladly vote for the construction of battle ships, although nine out of ten of us know absolutely nothing of the special features that enter into their construction. The most that we can say is that in a general way, as a certain Secretary of the Navy years ago said, we understand "the derned things are hollow;" and yet we believe in the patriotism and in the wisdom of those who have knowledge of these matters, and we joyfully and cheerfully join with them in carrying on such projects, in voting money from the Treasury for such construction as to them shall seem proper and right.

While, in my judgment, an immediate return from the construction of irrigation works by the Government is not a thing of primary importance, it might be asserted in passing that probably no other public improvements, undertaken by any of the governments of the earth within the last one hundred years, have so immediately and successfully proven their worth and benefit as has the matter of the storage of waters and proper irrigation of desert lands. This matter is no experiment. If the United States shall embark in this enterprise, it will not by any means be the first government to forecast the future and take advantage of its present opportunities. Egypt, Spain, and India, each in due course, have become aware of the enormous benefits and the almost unbelievable returns from a thorough and comprehensive system of Government irrigation.

It has been the history of works of this sort, when carried on under Government supervision, that a proper reservoiring, storing, and damming of water has resulted in returns which year by year have made in each twelve months an increased production equal to the entire cost of the works. I cite from the report of the Treasury Department of December, 1901, as to the great canals of the world, which shows the extent, value, and cost of the irrigating system in India, together with the returns from said system. To anyone who is in doubt as to the magnificent results attained by the British Government in India I commend a careful perusal of this bulletin. It is sufficient for the present to cite only the following:

> Up to the year 1877-78 the capital outlay on completed canals had been £4,346,000. The area irrigated in that year was 1,461,000 acres. The value of the crops raised on it was estimated at £6,020,000, and it may safely be said that the wealth of the provinces was clearly increased by £3,000,000, so that three-fourths of the entire cost of the works was thus repaid to the Government in that single year.

Referring to another canal, the statement is made by Sir Henry Cunningham that—

> During the droughts of 1877-78 (corresponding years) their benefits were extended to 1,333,000 acres, the greater portion of which but for canal irrigation would have been absolutely barren. During this period the land irrigated by the two principal canals produced food grain to the amount of 300,000 tons and worth £2,000,000 and enough to keep 1,800,000 people for a year; while the nonfood products, sugars, dyes, spices, etc., were reckoned to be worth another million pounds. In other words, the value of the crops saved by the two canals in a single season was more than equal to the entire cost of the completed system.

Altogether there are in India, under the management and supervision of the British Government, some 36,000 miles of canals and other works, irrigating 14,000,000 acres, or more than 21,000 square miles. Although some of the canals have been financially unsuccessful and others were incomplete, the irrigation works of India, taken as a whole, yielded in 1891-92 a net return of 5½ per cent on their cost.

It will thus be seen that the British Government in our very recent times has carried forward to completion, and has now in successful operation, irrigation works, reservoirs, dams, and canals under state control. That by reason of this it has been able to very materially increase the wealth of the country, relieve famine-stricken districts, and in one year raised upon desert places enough to equal the entire cost of the system and, beyond all that, pay a return of 5 per cent on the money actually invested by the Government in the construction of these public works.

What England has done we can do, and if it is possible in our country to duplicate her success in the Far East it occurs to me that to an unbiased mind there should be no hesitation in applying our energies to that work and toward that result.

The principal object and purpose of this bill is to redeem the desert lands of our arid regions, give them life and vitality by the application of water, so that they may be made homes and permanent abiding places for the settler and his family. The theory is that the lands of the United States should be a trust estate, held for the benefit of the citizens, and so disposed of as to carry the greatest comfort and the maximum of happiness to the greatest number of people.

By some course of reasoning which is unintelligible to my mind, the conclusion has been reached, as stated by some of the opponents of the pending measure, that it is a bill to centralize large tracts of our present public domain in the hands of speculators and large owners of sheep and cattle, to the exclusion of the actual settler and farmer. If there is by the terms of the bill one thing above another that is most carefully guarded and hedged about, it is this very proposition.

It not only provides that these lands shall be subject to entry only under the homestead law, but it goes further than that and puts it within the power of the Secretary of the Interior, in such cases as he may deem proper, to limit even the operation of our homestead act to such tracts of land as may be thought best fitted to fill the case and requirements of the actual settler, but in no case to exceed the amount of 160 acres to any entryman. If any greater safeguards can be thrown around this proposition than the bill already contains I am satisfied that the movers of the bill will gladly accept any amendment that may now or hereafter be offered that shall have the effect of more closely guarding the public lands in this particular.

We are all of us agreed on the proposition that this land should be held for the homesteader and the home maker, for, as was said in a discussion on the homestead bill in Congress in the year 1862, a great truth uttered then and as true now:

The fact can not be disguised that this system of small farms of a quarter section of land each will greatly promote the wealth, strength, and glory of the Republic, thus conducing to human happiness, near and remote, now and for all ages. The pioneer struggling amidst many discouragements upon the frontier prairies of the West comes nearer obeying the Divine injunction to "gain his bread by the sweat of his brow" than any other man. The men who have, from their circumstances and education, been inured to self-reliance, can safely volunteer as soldiers of civilization in its onward progress across this continent, from the great valleys of the Mississippi and Missouri to the shores on the Pacific.

The man who is able to put all he owns on earth in a canvas-covered wagon—wife, children, household goods, all—and move with slow pace into what has been called "the wilderness of the West," far out upon the frontier, beyond law and civilization, and there plant himself down upon a homestead for life, is doing a work for himself, his family, for civilization, his country, and his God that can never be fully known or its influence told until the final disclosure. Such soldiers of civilization are sentinels, standing as the advance guard on the outposts of civilization, and will yet be high on the page of the world's unwritten history, and will be sure to keep the watch fires of freedom burning conspicuously.

For these men and men of their kind, with their wives and children, we earnestly and confidently ask the Congress of the United States for its favorable vote upon this bill now under consideration.

Mr. WARREN. I understand that the Senator from North Dakota is willing to accede to the request that the irrigation bill be temporarily laid aside for printing, and I therefore ask that House bill 8587 may be taken up pursuant to a notice which I gave some days ago, in order that we may proceed with the reading, not expecting, however, that we shall get to a final vote to-day.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to know from the Senator what was the notice given some days ago.

Mr. WARREN. I gave notice when the bill was reported by the committee that I would improve the first opportunity during the consideration of the Philippine bill or the irrigation bill to call up the claims bill.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement, with the leave of the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not hear the request of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. I asked consent to call up House bill 8587.

Mr. HOAR. Pending that matter, I ask unanimous consent to make a statement.

I also gave notice some time ago that I should ask the Senate at the earliest possible opportunity to take up the bill for the protection of the President of the United States, and I gave notice this morning that I should try to call it up immediately on the first opportunity. But under the circumstances, I do not think that I should resist the request of the Senator from Wyoming, as he had already given notice long before.

Mr. WARREN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. So I wish merely to give notice now that at the first interval in the business of the Senate I shall make the attempt of which I speak.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming asks that the pending bill be temporarily laid aside and printed.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. With the amendments?

Mr. COCKRELL. It is to be printed with the amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming asks that the bill be printed with the amendments which have been adopted. That order will be made in the absence of objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. C. R. MCKENNEY, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10308) to provide for a permanent Census Office.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming asks that the bill known as the omnibus claims bill may be taken up for reading. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HOAR. Is it the purpose of the Senator when the bill has been read to proceed with its consideration?

Mr. WARREN. Not to proceed with its consideration further than, perhaps, to perfect the bill where a wrong name or initial was used, to add a few words in two or three places, and to strike from and to add to in correction of errors.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8587) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest that the amendments be acted upon as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

Mr. WARREN. I will state that the entire House bill as it came here has been stricken out and then has been reproduced in the amendment with perhaps six or seven exceptions. I think it would be well to proceed with the reading of the amendment, which is practically the entire matter.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendments as we come to them be taken up, and then we can go on and read the other part.

Mr. WARREN. It begins at about page 19, I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On page 20.

Mr. WARREN. Yes. That which is stricken out the clerks may be relieved from reading.

Mr. COCKRELL. Going down to line 10 on the first page?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then if that amendment, which is to strike out, be agreed to, the balance of the amendment can be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read as requested.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to his colleague?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if it is his intention to go on with this bill to a final vote?

Mr. WARREN. Not to-night. It is my desire to have it read and perfected.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WARREN. For what purpose?

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to make an inquiry.

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before the reading proceeds, I wish to ask the Senator from Wyoming, the chairman of the Committee on Claims, upon what theory this bill has been constructed? What class of claims is included in it? What I mean is, whether the claims that have passed either one or both Houses of Congress, and those only, have been included?

Mr. WARREN. I will state very briefly for the information of the Senator from New Hampshire and of the Senate that the bill consists, first, of the so-called Bowman Act claims, amounting to some $460,000, which are selected findings of the Court of Claims and concerning which there can be no possible question of laches or disloyalty. Second, French spoliation claims, the findings of the Court of Claims up to recent date, less the so-called insurance claims and doubtful ones. Third, we have certain claims for construction of Government vessels during the civil war where the amounts claimed have been passed upon by naval boards appointed by the Government for that purpose. The remainder of the bill is made up of miscellaneous claims which have been passed by the Senate, some of them by the House, and some of them by both Houses.

I will say further, Mr. President, that it is not claimed that this bill represents all the Government owes and should pay of the claims against it. The aim of the committee has been to confine its selection to those to which the Senate has heretofore given its assent.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator a further question. So that if a claim has passed the Senate which has not been acted upon in the other House it should go in this bill at the amount that the Senate in its judgment thought was due to the claimant. Is that correct?

Mr. WARREN. It is the wish of the committee that it should go through at the amount which the committee have reported.

Mr. GALLINGER. If that amount does not correspond with the amount that the Senate thought was due when it passed the bill, what then?

Mr. WARREN. There is no claim in the bill for a larger amount than the Senate has already passed upon.

Mr. GALLINGER. But supposing the amount is smaller than the amount the Senate thought was due?

Mr. WARREN. The bill represents the judgment of the committee on such points. Of course, it will be for the Senate to determine.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read

The Secretary proceeded to read the substitute reported by the Committee on Claims, to strike out all after line 9, on page 1, down to and including line 18, on page 20, and in lieu thereof to insert a substitute, and read as follows:

CLAIMS ALLOWED UNDER THE BOWMAN AND TUCKER ACTS BY THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

To Mariah Wilson, of Jackson County, $309.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the committee desire to correct an error by inserting, just before the word "Arkansas," on page 23, after line 12, the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 23, after line 12, it is proposed to insert:

To George B. Caldwell, administrator of Marion Caldwell, deceased, $10,764.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the amendment of the committee was resumed at page 23, line 13, and continued to the end of line 21, on the same page, as follows:

ARKANSAS.

To Samuel F. Davidson, of Phillips County, $1,579.
To John R. Henderson, administrator of Michael C. Henderson, deceased, of Benton County, $677.
To Louis Bonlin, administrator of Charles Hogan, deceased, of Crawford County, $1,270.

Mr. WARREN. On page 23, line 19, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the name "Louis" and inserting "Lewis;" so as to read:

To Lewis Bonlin, administrator of Charles Hogan, deceased, of Crawford County, $1,270.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the amendment of the committee was resumed at line 22, on page 23, and continued to the end of line 11, on page 25, as follows:

Mr. McCOMAS. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the provision in the bill as it came from the House, beginning in line 23, on page 8, as follows:

To Henry R. Walton, administrator of John Walton, deceased, of Anne Arundel County, $5,703.

I have seen Mr. Walton and talked with him about this matter, and I find that there is clearly a confusion as to the finding of the Court of Claims. In one place it speaks of $10,500 and in another of $5,703, which is the correct amount.

The man is very old, about 80 years of age. By a mistake in copying the report of the Court of Claims he ought not to lose what he is clearly entitled to. I appeal to the chairman in behalf of this old man. A bill for his relief once passed the House and once before passed the Senate——

Mr. COCKRELL. What is it the Senator refers to? We can not understand him. Before we discuss the matter, let us know what it is we are discussing.

Mr. WARREN. I trust the Senator from Maryland will allow this matter to pass over until the reading of the amendment shall have been completed.

Mr. McCOMAS. I ask the chairman of the committee to accept the amendment to insert the words which are now printed on page 8, in line 23 of the bill, as it passed the House:

To Henry R. Walton, administrator of John Walton, deceased, of Anne Arundel County, $5,703.

Mr. HOAR. Where does the Senator want the amendment to come in?

Mr. McCOMAS. Under the head of "Maryland," but I do not care where it comes in; it is germane anywhere.

In that case I will say to the Senator from Missouri that there was a confusion in the printing of the findings of the Court of Claims. It apparently looked in one place as if the court had awarded ten or eleven thousand dollars, but what the court awarded, as a careful reading will show, was this sum of $5,703. This man Walton is a very old man, and unless he gets this money now he may never live to get it. The estate is clearly entitled to this money, and he has been here for years. That misprint in the findings of the court caused this omission, and nothing else. There is no objection to the claim in any way. I appeal to the chairman of the committee to accept the amendment. If not, I shall ask for a vote of the Senate upon the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Where is that in the bill?

Mr. WARREN. It is not in this print of the bill, but it is one of the claims that the Senate committee cut out of the House bill. It is in the House portion, where it is marked out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will understand that the amendment which is being read is not being agreed to, and will be open to amendment as in Committee of the Whole after the reading is completed.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then let the proposed amendment to the amendment be passed over.

Mr. WARREN. I was about to ask the Senator from Maryland to let the amendment go over and have it come up when the bill is under consideration for final passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All of the amendment which is being read will be subject to amendment as in Committee of the Whole after the reading of the amendment of the committee shall have been completed.

Mr. McCOMAS. Very well.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the amendment of the Committee on Claims at line 1 on page 42, and continued to the end of line 25 on page 46, as follows:

To J. D. Sanders, administrator of Isaiah Sweet, deceased, of McNairy County, $385.

To Edward J. Taylor, administrator of Henry Clevenger, deceased, $565.
To the Winchester and Potomac Railroad Company, $30,340.

Mr. WARREN. I should like to have an item inserted at that point; a claim which was overlooked in making up the list.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 46, after line 25, it is proposed to insert:

To Adel Virginia Spangler, administratrix de bonis non of the estate of Felix Robert, deceased, and in her own right, of Frederick County, $4,390.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the amendment of the committee was resumed at line 1, page 47, and continued to the end of line 17, on page 49, as follows:

WEST VIRGINIA.

FRENCH SPOLIATION CLAIMS.

To pay the findings of the Court of Claims on the following claims for indemnity for spoliations by the French prior to July 30, 1801, under the act entitled "An act to provide for the ascertainment of claims of American citizens for spoliations committed by the French prior to the 31st day of July, 1801:" Provided, That in all cases where the original sufferers were adjudicated bankrupts the awards shall be made on behalf of the next of kin instead of to assignees in bankruptcy, and the awards in the cases of individual claimants shall not be paid until the Court of Claims shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury that the personal representatives on whose behalf the award is made represent the next of kin, and the courts which granted the administrations, respectively, shall have certified that the legal representatives have given adequate security for the legal disbursements of the awards, namely:

On the ship Ganges, Charles Langford, master, namely: James C. Hays, administrator de bonis non, etc., of Thomas Vermilyea, deceased, and executor of the last will and testament of Thomas Vermilyea Jarvis Christophers, deceased, $17,263.

On the brig Sally, Samuel Stacy, master, namely: William R. Hooper, administrator of Robert Hooper, jr., deceased, as surviving partner of the firm of Robert Hooper & Sons, $11,551.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. William R. Hooper, the administrator there named, was a near neighbor of mine and an old friend. He has been dead a good while. I can not find any provision in the bill applying to the French spoliation claims which warrants the payment, where the executor or administrator is dead, to the successor. I should like to have added here words to the effect that the payment should be made to the successor in the administration.

Mr. WARREN. I call the attention of the Senator to the provision on the last page of the bill, page 130.

Mr. HOAR. It reads:

But these provisions shall not apply to payments in the cases of the French spoliation claims, which shall be made as heretofore prescribed in this bill.

I have looked through the bill, and I think there are several of these cases. This one I know all about; but there are others where I suppose the same to be true, and either there should be an amendment as to each case or there should be a provision declaring that wherever an executor or administrator, either original or de bonis non, be dead or has relinquished his trust, the payment shall be made to his successor in such trust, who shall give proof of his right thereto to the Department, or something of that sort.

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that we have to follow pretty generally the findings of the court. If it may seem, on further reading of the bill, that the Senator is right—and I assume he is right—that there should be anything inserted to secure the proper payment, it will of course be inserted. I should be glad to have the Senator suggest the phraseology of such an amendment.

Mr. HOAR. Here is a poor family—I do not mean poor; but, though they are in a respectable position of life, a family without property—who are entitled to $11,551. If this bill passes, they will have to get an act of Congress at the next session in order to secure that money. That certainly is not right.

Mr. McCOMAS. If the Senator will allow me, it appears to me that on page 130, the last page of the bill, the purpose of the draftsman of that provision was to provide in respect of other claims that the administrators de bonis non and successors in the trust might receive payment, and then to exclude payment to the next of kin where original payment had been made, so that——

Mr. HOAR. But in the case of bankruptcy——

Mr. McCOMAS. The Senator will allow me to finish my statement.

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. McCOMAS. So that the real purpose of the draftsman would, perhaps, be obtained if he had said in the last provision that as to the payment to the original claimant, who was adjudged a bankrupt in the French spoliation claims, this one provision shall not apply. Perhaps the Senator would not object to that.

Mr. HOAR. I do not like the phrase that payment shall be made to the legal representative. It seems that as to the legal representatives of the original claim or the executor or administrator, this particular provision shall not apply to payments in cases of French spoliation claims, "which shall be made as heretofore prescribed in this bill."

Mr. McCOMAS. If the amendment be made, in line 18 of this provision, in respect to original claims, "these provisions shall not apply"——

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

Mr. WARREN. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts——

Mr. HOAR. I was about to say that I will accept the suggestion of the Senator from Wyoming and let the matter go over if the Senate will afterwards consider it.

Mr. WARREN. I should be very glad indeed to have the judgment of the Senator from Massachusetts in relation to the matter. It is the intention of the committee to have this bill passed in such a manner that, without trouble or expense, the proper person may receive the amount to which he is entitled without delay. As that provision comes in at the very end of the bill, I ask that the discussion may be deferred for the present and that the reading may be proceeded with.

Mr. HOAR. But for that undertaking, of course I should have to move an amendment in every case where I know that state of facts exists. But the Senator says he will look out for it.

Mr. WARREN. I discover that the language is possibly ambiguous as to the proviso and limitation at the end of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the amendment will be resumed.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the amendment, and read as follows:

On the brig Sally, John Cruft, master, namely: William G. Perry, executor of Nicholas Gilman, deceased, $300.

FOR CHURCHES AND SCHOOLS.

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following sums, the amount appropriated to be accepted in full satisfaction of each claim before payment is made:

To the trustees of the German Evangelical Church, at Martinsburg, W. Va., the sum of $2,500, on account of the destruction of their church building and its furniture on the 17th day of February, 1863, while the same was in the possession of a portion of the military forces of the United States, and through their carelessness.

To the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Martinsburg, W. Va., the sum of $1,850, for use and occupation of said church by the Federal troops from March, 1862, to April, 1865.

To Bishop Augustine Vandevyver, trustee of St. Joseph's Catholic Church, at Martinsburg, W. Va., the sum of $2,880, for the use and occupancy of said church by the Army of the United States during the war of the rebellion.

To the Cumberland Female College, of McMinnville, Tenn., the sum of $5,000, for the use, occupation, and consumption of its property for hospital and other army purposes during the late war of 1861 to 1865 by the military authority of the United States.

To Richmond College, located at Richmond, Va., the sum of $25,000, to reimburse said college for the occupation of its buildings and grounds by United States troops and officers for the period of eight months, said occupation commencing in April, 1865, and for injury to and destruction of the buildings, the apparatus, libraries, and other property of said college by said troops and officers: Provided, That no money be so paid except upon accounts of such occupation, injury, and destruction, and the damage caused thereby, duly verified and proven.

To Stewart College (now the Southwestern Presbyterian University), located at Clarksville, Tenn., not exceeding $25,019.96, for the use and occupation of the building and grounds and for consumption of materials, for injury to its buildings, apparatus, cabinets, and other property injured or destroyed by troops of the United States during the late war, or such sum below that amount as the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, under direction of the Secretary, may find to be duly proven on account of such injury and destruction, use, occupation, and consumption of the building and grounds of said college.

To the person or persons authorized to represent the Catholic Church at Macon City, Mo., the sum of $725, and the acceptance of said sum paid under the provisions of this act shall be in full satisfaction of all claims of every kind and nature for the use and occupation of said church during the civil war.

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be investigated by the Quartermaster's Department of the United States Army the circumstances, character, and extent of the alleged use and occupation by the United States military authorities, for Government purposes, during the late war, of the college buildings and grounds of St. Charles College, in St. Charles County, Mo., the actual value of such use and occupation, and certify to the Secretary of the Treasury what amount, if any, is equitably due to said St. Charles College from the United States as the reasonable value of such use and occupation; and that the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to said St. Charles College, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the amount, if any, so found to be due from the United States; and the acceptance by said St. Charles College of any sum paid under the provisions of this act shall be in full satisfaction of all claims of every kind and nature for said use and occupation, and all damages resulting therefrom.

STATE CLAIMS.

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to readjust, and pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, all claims of the States of Virginia, South Carolina, and the city of Baltimore for and on account of advances and expenditures made by said States and the city of Baltimore in the war of 1812 to 1815, with Great Britain; and in computing interest on said advances the Secretary of the Treasury shall apply the following rule, as applied by act of Congress to the claim of the State of Maryland, namely: Interest shall be calculated up to the time of any payment made. To this interest the payment shall be first applied, and if it exceeds the interest due the balance shall be applied to diminish the principal; if the payment fall short of the interest, the balance of interest shall not be added to the principal so as to produce interest. Second, interest shall be allowed on such sums only on which the State either paid interest or lost interest by the transfer of an interest-bearing fund, or for such length of time only as the State or city paid or lost interest aforesaid: Provided, That in the settlement of these claims any bonds or other evidences of debt of either of the said States or of said city of Baltimore held by the United States on any account whatever shall be credited as offsets to the United States, as of the dates, respectively, at which the accounts will be completely or most nearly balanced, and the balance found due on such date, after deducting the principal and interest on said bonds or other evidences of debt to such date, shall be paid to or by said States and city of Baltimore, and the said bonds or other evidences of debt shall be returned to the States issuing the same.

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle the mutual account, heretofore stated, between the United States and the State of Florida, under the authority of an act of Congress, according to the mode of stating the same, found near the foot of the third page of the letter of the Secretary submitting his report, dated December 16, 1889, published as Executive Document numbered 68, House of Representatives, Fifty-first Congress, first session, by continuing the computation of interest upon the principal on both sides to the date of settlement, and ascertaining the balance due the said State. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to surrender to the governor of the State of Florida the bonds of said State held by the United States which are included in such statement; and such sum of money is hereby appropriated as is necessary to pay to the State of Florida whatever balance is found due said State: Provided, That in further computing the said mutual account from the 1st day of January, 1890 (at which time it was stated by authority of an act of Congress), no greater rate of interest shall be allowed the State of Florida than said State has paid, is obligated to pay, or has lost in connection with said account.

To reimburse the State of Nevada for the assumption and payment of obligations incurred by the Territory of Nevada in advancing money in aid of the suppression of the rebellion in the civil war, the sum of $462,441.97, as found and reported to Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury January 20, 1900, in House Document No. 322, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session.

To pay the State of West Virginia the sum of $2,019.57, the same being the amount paid by the said State to certain officers of the One hundred and thirty-third Regiment West Virginia Militia for services rendered by them in the war of the rebellion, being the difference between $13 per month, received by them, and the amount they should have received as such officers.

To pay the State of Wyoming the sum of $7,780.44, this sum being the actual amount paid out by the Territory of Wyoming during the years 1884, 1885, and 1886 for expenses incurred in preserving the formation, natural curiosities, and objects of interest in the Yellowstone National Park through patrolling, policing, and governing after it was declared a national reservation and before United States troops were placed therein for its protection.

That the claims of the States of California and Oregon for moneys advanced in aid of the suppression of the rebellion in the civil war be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Secretary of the Treasury to investigate and report to Congress at its next session. He shall report specifically and in detail as to items, so far as practicable, the amount of money furnished, and also the amount assumed by said States in aid of the suppression of the rebellion of the civil war, together with such interest on the same as said States have actually paid, and what amounts, if any, have heretofore been paid said States by the United States on account of the suppression of the rebellion.

MISCELLANEOUS CLAIMS.

To Twyman O. Abbott, of Tacoma, State of Washington, his heirs or legal representatives, the sum of $5,867.75, in full and final settlement of his claim for damages sustained by reason of the breach of a certain contract for lease of a building and ground for post-office purposes.

To O. F. Adams, of North Carolina, the sum of $1,450, for services rendered the United States Government during the war of the rebellion.

To Fannie T. Allin, of Springfield, Mass., and Augusta M. Ladd, of Holyoke, Mass., respectively widow and daughter of the late Erskine S. Allin, $30,000, to be paid in equal parts, said Allin being the inventor of valuable improvements used in the manufacture of the Springfield breech-loading rifle musket, for which improvements letters patent No. 49959 were granted to him by the United States on the 19th day of September, 1865; and to the United States Regulation Firearms Company, a corporation incorporated under the laws of the State of New York, for the injury caused to, and damage sustained by, said corporation from and by the infringement by the United States of the letters patent aforesaid, which letters patent were assigned by the said Erskine S. Allin to the said United States Regulation Firearms Company on the 18th day of December, 1868.

Mr. WARREN. On page 108, line 2, after the second "and," I move to insert "$30,000 to be paid," so as to read:

And $30,000 to be paid to the United States Regulation Firearms Company, a corporation incorporated under the laws of the State of New York, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to line 20 on page 109, as follows:

This appropriation to be in full payment and satisfaction to both of the aforesaid parties for and on account of any and all sales or other disposition heretofore made or that may hereafter be made by the United States of any arms in which the invention secured by said letters patent is used or embraced.

To the owners, or their legal representatives, of the vessel or bark Arctic the sum of $23,500, for the losses sustained by them in abandoning their business of whale catching, and the services rendered in rescuing 176 seamen in the Arctic Sea, the said money to be paid over to the owners of said bark, the Arctic, for the benefit of themselves and of such officers and crew as were engaged in that particular season, to wit, the summer of 1871, of the cruise in the Arctic Ocean, during which said rescue was made; and said moneys shall be distributed by the owners between themselves and said officers and crew in the proportion to their respective lays, and in the same manner as the ordinary earnings of said crew would have been distributed, the Secretary of the Treasury not to be bound to see to the application of said moneys by the owners.

To Avery D. Babcock, of Polk County, Oreg., and to Margaret I. Babcock, his wife, the sum of $2,000, to be equally divided between them, in payment of their claim against the Government of the United States for the use and occupation by the United States of their donation claim No. 58, in section 8, in township 6 south, range 7 west of the Willamette meridian, in the State of Oregon.

To the heirs of Lawrence D. Bailey, the sum of $200, erroneously paid by them on timber-culture cash entry 10045 for the southeast quarter of section 24, township 22 south, range 34 west, Garden City, Kans., on the 11th day of March, 1893.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to pass over for the present the claim mentioned in the paragraph beginning at line 21, making a payment to Elias E. Barnes. I wish that paragraph to be passed over until we take up the bill again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paragraph will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

To Elias E. Barnes, the sum of $3,457.26, in full of all claims and demands, the amount found due the said Elias E. Barnes by referees acting under appointment of the then Secretary of the Interior, and the said amount being the loss and damage sustained by said Elias E. Barnes by reason of the failure on the part of the United States to keep a contract made and entered into with him by the United States of America April 21, 1888, for putting in a concrete foundation for the Library building in the city of Washington.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paragraph will be passed over, in the absence of objection.

The reading of the amendment was continued to line 10, page 116, as follows:

To Emile M. Blum the sum of $5,000 for services as commissioner-general to the International Exposition at Barcelona, Spain, and to James M. Seymour, jr., the sum of $2,500 for services as assistant commissioner.

To John Breitling, of Nebraska, the sum of $738.25, for commissary stores furnished by him in the year 1862, at Clinton, in the State of Iowa, to United States troops then stationed at that place.

To Capt. Albert C. Brown, master of the schooner Alexandra, the sum of $1,000, in full compensation for fitting out his vessel and rescuing and transporting from the southwest end of the island of Kadiak, Alaska, to Wood Island, Alaska, the crew of the American schooner C. G. White, which was wrecked on said Kadiak Island April 13, 1895.

To Catherine Burns, of Annapolis, Md., the sum of $701.25, the amount due by the United States to her late husband, Louis Burns, deceased, for difference of pay and rations as mate on United States ship Potomac from April 4, 1871, to July 9, 1873, and heretofore allowed by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department, but not paid for want of an appropriation of money with which to pay the same.

To the heirs or legal representatives of Charles P. Culver, husband of the late Mrs. Catherine P. Culver, the sum of $504, as compensation for the translation from German of the House Miscellaneous Document No. 8, Forty-fifth Congress, third session, made by order of the chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

To the heirs of Jacob R. Davis, the sum of $1,500, as full compensation for services by the said Jacob R. Davis, deceased, rendered as agent and judge of the Freedman's Bureau at Augusta, in the State of Georgia, from June 1, 1866, to June 1, 1867, inclusive.

To M. M. Defrees, of Indianapolis, Ind., the sum of $4,494.56, in full for the construction of a sewer known as "Pogues Run interception," on Hanna street, in the city of Indianapolis, adjacent to the lands of the United States known as the "Arsenal," said sum, under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Indiana, being a lien on said lands.

To James C. Drake the sum of $1,529.20, which sum was expended by said James C. Drake while acting as United States marshal in the State of Washington.

To Arthur L. Fish, of California, the sum of $8,305.38, that being the sum of money reported by Lieut. Col. G. H. Mendell, Corps of Engineers, and the engineer in charge of the work, made to the Chief of Engineers United States Army, to be due by the United States to said Arthur L. Fish, who was a surety on the bond of A. Boschke.

To George W. Graham the sum of $484.10, in full compensation for services and advances made as local agent of the solicitor of the Treasury at Harpers Ferry, W. Va., from July 2, 1878, to November 30, 1880, inclusive.

To John W. Kennedy, of Wheeling, W. Va., the sum of $1,500, for services rendered by him as counsel for the United States in the ejectment cause of Jacob B. Brown v. Daniel J. Young, in connection with the Government property at Harpers Ferry, W. Va., which said suit was lately pending in the circuit court of the United States at Parkersburg, W. Va.

To G. H. Kitson, or his legal representatives, the sum of $1,000, due said Kitson for money advanced to the Menominee tribe of Indians, of Wisconsin, out of any money due said tribe from the United States not otherwise appropriated.

To Mrs. Charlotte C. Leathers, executrix of Thomas P. Leathers, surviving partner of the firm of Holmes & Leathers, the sum of $12,910.35, being amount due them for transporting the United States mail on route No. 7402, Mississippi, and on route No. 8165, Louisiana, for the months of April and May, 1861.

To H. B. Matteosian, M. D., late delegate of the United States to the International Sanitary Commission at Constantinople, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $800 per annum for each year he was so employed at said post, namely, from November 18, 1874, to September 1, 1886.

To George L. Merrill, late a sergeant in Company E, Nineteenth Regiment of Maine Infantry Volunteers, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,060, in compensation for loss of salary from December 28, 1863, at which date he was commissioned as a second lieutenant, for a period of thirteen months, during which he was awaiting assignment to duty.

To Virginia I. Mullan, of Annapolis, Md., the sum of $420.98, that being the amount of money due by the United States to her, as owner and holder of coupons numbered 3, 4, and 5, for interest from January 1, 1854, to September 1, 1856, on California Indian war bonds numbered 84, 183, and 194, for $500 each, and numbered 220, for $1,000, act of May 3, 1852, which coupons were heretofore filed by the First National Bank of Washington, D. C., in the Treasury Department for payment, but not paid for want of sufficient appropriation with which to pay the same, as recited in Senate Document No. 137, Fifty-fifth Congress, first session, and recommended by the Treasury Department for payment.

To John S. Neet, jr., late a private in Company C, Third Regiment Missouri State Militia Cavalry, afterwards Company L, Sixth Missouri State Militia Cavalry, the sum of $100, in full payment of the sum allowed him in October, 1878, by the Third Auditor of the Treasury Department.

To the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,440.20, in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States for the cost of necessary repairs on said company's pier 46, East River, New York City, and said company's car float No. 21, which was moored to the pier, damaged by the battle ship Maine, which came in collision with said pier and float, the same being in accord with the findings and report of a naval board duly appointed to investigate the collision and damages therefrom.

To Alphonso M. Potvin late of Colon, Republic of Colombia, $11,278.05, in full payment and satisfaction of all indebtedness of the United States of America to the said Alphonso M. Potvin arising from his purchase, on July 21, 1888, at public auction, of the then United States consul at Colon, of three houses located in that city belonging to the estate of Susannah Smith, who had previously died there intestate, the said houses being sold to said Potvin by the United States consular representative, who, being unable to protect title to same in the local courts of Colombia, caused a loss to said Potvin of all moneys paid by him for said property, as well as other losses and expenses, amounting to the sum aforesaid.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to move to strike out lines 10 to 15, inclusive, on page 116.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after line 9, on page 116, down to and including line 15, as follows:

To Clinton F. Pulsifer, of the State of Washington, the sum of $276.52, for surveys and resurveys of public lands, section and township lines, in township No. 14 north, range No. 9 west, Willamette base and meridian, duly accepted by the United States, but not heretofore paid for.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the amendment was resumed and continued to the end of line 5 on page 117, as follows:

To the administrator de bonis non of Charles M. Roberts, deceased, for royalties on pavement laid under Schillinger patent, $39,034.21.

To the administrator of the estate of Philip C. Rowe, of Massachusetts, the sum of $8,000, for the use of said Rowe's invention by the United States of an improvement in pistons for pumps by the Navy Department during the years between 1865 and 1882.

To the legal representatives of Gilman Sawtelle, Priest River, Idaho, for renumeration for damages done to his property by United States troops while camping on his ranch at Henrys Lake, Idaho, in 1877, the sum of $2,070.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to ask the Senator from Wyoming if it would be convenient to him to have the reading of the amendment concluded to-morrow or on the next legislative day?

Mr. BATE. Let us get through. Only three or four pages of the bill remain unread.

Mr. ALLISON. There are 14 pages. I understand it is not expected that the bill will be passed to-night, and, therefore, the reading can be resumed and concluded when next we meet.

Mr. WARREN. I am very anxious, of course, to secure the full reading of the bill, but I appreciate the extreme patience of the Senate, and I do not wish to tax that patience beyond endurance. I am, therefore, willing to give way.

Mr. STEWART (to Mr. WARREN). Ask unanimous consent for its future consideration.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be taken up immediately after the morning business to-morrow, and its reading completed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WARREN. I give notice that I shall try to secure, if possible, the consideration of the bill at some time during the next legislative day.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, March 1, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 28, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SCHLEY COURT OF INQUIRY.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a Senate concurrent resolution, with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota, chairman of the Committee on Printing, asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 3,500 copies of the proceedings of the Schley court of inquiry, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 500 copies for the use of the Navy Department.

With the following amendment, to wit:

After the word "inquiry," in the fourth line, insert "together with the findings of the court, Admiral Dewey's opinion, Admiral Schley's appeal to the President, and the President's decision thereon, and."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HEATWOLE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send up.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Private Land Claims be, and is hereby, authorized to have printed such papers and documents as may be necessary for the business of said committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I will not object; but I will state that this committee has never had this privilege extended to it before.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I will state to the gentleman from Tennessee that the Committee on Private Land Claims have considered very many bills, in the course of which we are having extended hearings; and for the benefit of members on the floor when the bills come up we desire to have the hearings preserved. We have got a number of bills, and some of them are very important.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The object is simply to print the hearings on those bills?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. That is all. We do not expect to have anything printed except the hearings, of course.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I shall not interpose an objection to its consideration or interfere with its passage; but I doubt the propriety of giving the right to print and have bound documents, etc. However, as I say, I will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SMITH of Illinois, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

CONTESTED ELECTION CASE—MOSS V. RHEA.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report from Committee on Elections No. 1 in the contested election case of Moss against Rhea, and ask that the report be printed and that the resolutions be placed upon the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois reports from the Committee on Elections No. 1 the following case, which the Clerk will report by its title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Case of J. MacKenzie Moss v. John S. Rhea, from the Third district of Kentucky.

The SPEAKER. The resolutions will be referred to the House Calendar, and under the rule the report will be printed.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Mississippi wishes to present the views of the minority.

The SPEAKER. The views of the minority will be printed, and go with the others on the Calendar.

Mr. FOX. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. I want to know if the resolutions recommended by the majority of the committee are pending at this time?

The SPEAKER. It goes to the Calendar, and, with the report of the majority, is ordered printed.

Mr. FOX. I will ask if it is now in order to present a substitute for the resolution recommended by the committee?

The SPEAKER. The question is not up for consideration at this time, and it will not be in order now. The views of the minority can be printed and have been ordered to be printed.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE OF N. B. SPEARS V. JOHN L. BURNETT.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Elections No. 1, in the case of Spears against Burnett, from the Seventh Congressional district of Alabama.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine, from the Committee on Elections No. 1, presents a report in the contested-election case, which the Clerk will report by its title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Case of N. B. Spears against John L. Burnett, from the Seventh Congressional district of the State of Alabama.

The SPEAKER. The case will be referred to the House Calendar, and under the rule the report will be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, under the rule for to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire, the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of private bills under the special rule of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. CAPRON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of certain bills on the Private Calendar under the rule. The Clerk will report the first bill.

HARRY L. GRAHAM.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6593) granting a pension to Harry L. Graham.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Harry L. Graham, late of Company G, Seventy-first Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "twenty-four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "sixteen."

In same line, after the word "month," insert the words "in lieu of that he is now receiving."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Harry L. Graham."

The amendments were agreed to.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to William J. Overman."

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I see that most of these bills, if not all, are for increasing pensions. I would like to ask the gentleman who reports the bill why he asks for this increase. I would like to hear some explanation.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I did not hear the gentleman's request.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. My query is this: Why does the gentleman report for an increase of pension in this case? All of these claims, so far, I believe, this morning have been for the increase of pensions. Now, this is an increase from $24 to $30. Why do you want to increase this pension?

Mr. SULLOWAY. This soldier is pensioned at $17 a month, and if the gentleman will look at the report he will find that examinations have been held, and the examining surgeons recommend that he be pensioned at a much larger sum.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why?

Mr. SULLOWAY. Because of his disabilities.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. My secretary, I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee, made a mistake in drafting this bill. I directed him to put it at $40, and he put it at only $24.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why does the bill call for $24? That is an increase.

Mr. SULLOWAY. The original bill calls for $24, but the amendment recommended by the committee is $30. He is rated for a gunshot wound of the wrist at $30.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What are his physical disabilities?

Mr. SULLOWAY. Total wreck.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. A total wreck, and I know it of my own personal knowledge.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, as I say, these bills are all for an increase of pension. What is the gentleman's idea about having a general law to pension soldiers of the civil war, instead of having from day to day these special bills to increase pensions? I would like to ask the gentleman why there is so much of that kind of legislation?

Mr. SULLOWAY. Simply because they do not get justice at the Pension Bureau.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman arraigns the Pension Bureau.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Well, an injustice is done the soldier on the records at the Pension Bureau.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then, that rule applies to all the cases reported here this morning?

Mr. SULLOWAY. I do not remember whether all the cases that have been taken up this morning are for increase, but I think they are mostly for an increase.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I have had a very frank and satisfactory explanation from the gentleman from New Hampshire. I asked him why there are so many bills reported here for increase of pensions, and the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SULLOWAY] frankly states that it is simply because "they do not get justice at the Pension Bureau." I want the House to understand fully this frank statement of the chairman who reports this bill and these other bills. I want the House to know how he says our pension laws are being administered at the Pension Bureau. He in effect says that Congress is appealed to to overrule the Pension Commissioner on the facts. The vital question is, Who is right, the Commissioner of Pensions or Congress?

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

CATHERINE MEADE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1782) granting a pension to Catherine Meade.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Delia E. Slocum."

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the attention of the committee on this special bill, because it is one of the historical bills before the Pension Department, where absolute injustice has been done.

Without detaining the House at all, the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions shows that the pension in this case ought to have been granted from 1881. It shows that this man died from wounds or disease, and therefore the applicant would have been entitled to $17 from 1881 up to the present time. It is proposed to give $17 a month from this time on to this widow, who is now 75 years old, who swears she has not a particle of property on earth.

The committee want to cut her down to $17. In correspondence with her friends she stated that she could get along comfortably on $20. I introduced the bill for $20. They have placed the amount at $17, because that is what she would get if she gets a pension at this time. I say that upon the showing of the committee itself the Department ought to have granted her a pension from 1881, which would have amounted by this time to about $5,000, and that she has not got. Now, I say she ought not to be cut below $20.

I want to say in this case this soldier served through the entire war. He was wounded near the spine, when he was a lieutenant. The proof shows that he died from that wound. The proof was so clear that if the man who shot him could have been tried for murder he would have been convicted of murder in the case. The Department, or some law officer of the Department, after the proof was beyond question, held up the pension because the soldier did not have a hospital record, and because the widow could not explain the reason why some vital statistical board over in New York said that he died from chronic diarrhea and from dropsy, the very things that would occur from the wound.

The man died from a gunshot wound, ten or twelve years ago, and we tried to get his wife a pension. I say the proof is beyond question. The board that examined Captain Slocum the first time showed that he had a wound near his spine at the time. The captain that was in the ranks with him swears that he was present when he was shot, that he relieved him from time to time because of the wound; but he was young and vigorous and never went to a hospital to be treated. The board of examiners declared they found the wound there; the man that attended him before his death declared that he died from the wound. I say $20, considering the conditions in this case, is a mere paltry sum. The widow has lost, according to this report, nearly $5,000; she is now about 75 years old, and I hope this House will vote that she may have for the remainder of her days the paltry sum of $20.

Mr. SHAFROTH. This involves, as I understand, only a raise of $3?

Mr. BELL. Twenty dollars was the amount stated in the original bill. The committee, under its general rule, which is a good one, I admit, cuts it to $17.

Mr. KLEBERG. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BELL. Certainly.

Mr. KLEBERG. Are you acquainted personally with the facts in this case?

Mr. BELL. I have examined every paper and read every affidavit.

Mr. KLEBERG. Do you state on your responsibility as a Representative that the facts are that way?

Mr. BELL. There is no question about it. The committee here admits that he died of the wound or disease.

Mr. KLEBERG. I just wanted to know if the gentleman knows the circumstances himself.

Mr. BELL. I want the committee to vote against the amendment which cuts the amount proposed to be given from $20 to $17. This widow is now 75 years old, and this merely proposes to give her $20.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. Is this an increase of an existing pension?

Mr. BELL. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why has it not been increased by the Bureau?

Mr. BELL. The reason they give me at the office——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What office?

Mr. BELL. The office of the Commissioner of Pensions—is that they required Captain Slocum in his lifetime to make an explanation of a discrepancy in the statement of the captain of his company, who said he was present when he was shot near the spine. The board of examiners who examined him in 1881 said he had a wound back of the spine that was very bad and very painful, and some other evidence. The man who attended him up to the time he died swore point-blank that he died from that wound to the spine.

But the Pension Office said that a board of vital statistics in New York showed that he died from diarrhea and from dropsy—the very things that would develop from a spinal injury. This the wife must explain, and she can not explain, and there was no explanation. The law officer said the reason why they did not want to allow it was that they disallowed to Captain Slocum in his lifetime because he did not file some paper required to be filed within a specified time, otherwise he was to be stricken off the files. He did not file it within the time, and he was stricen off the files of the Pension Office.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then primarily the purpose of this bill is to overrule the judgment of the Pension Commissioner?

Mr. BELL. A clerk in the Department admits that the pension ought to have been allowed, but they say to allow the pension now would overrule a former Commissioner, who declined to allow the pension to the husband.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Did the Commissioner of Pensions, who was charged with the consideration of these matters, refuse to give this relief, or did some subordinate do so?

Mr. BELL. A subordinate struck the case from the docket because they did not file a certain paper within a certain required time, and the soldier died before he filed it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Did you then appeal the case to the Commissioner?

Mr. BELL. No; but the Commissioner or the law officer of the Commissioner intimates that they would have allowed the pension to the widow, as her proof was sufficient, but it would overrule the decision of a former Pension Commissioner.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, then, you appeal here against the judgment of the Pension Bureau because they struck it off for a technicality.

Mr. BELL. Because certain papers were not filed within the time required to be, and before they were filed the soldier died.

Mr. LATIMER. If this case was passed on by the Department, why there would be no necessity for this committee and this special bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is exactly what I was getting at. The gentleman from New Hampshire said a few moments ago that the reason why so many of these special bills were passed by Congress was because the claimants failed to "get justice before the Bureau of Pensions." Now, then, you are following that up with these special bills, and in that way you are overruling the judgment of the Pension Commissioner, who is credited with being a good business man and a good officer.

Mr. BELL. No; we do not overrule him in this case.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You do not overrule him if this bill passes the Congress?

Mr. BELL. No.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You have testimony now before the committee that you did not have in time?

Mr. BELL. No; as I said before, the friends of this woman wrote me to go and read this evidence, telling me what it was. I went and asked the law clerk to show me this evidence and he read it with me. He did so, and while he admitted that the case was proven for the widow, he said the fact that the husband's case had been dismissed, to allow this would virtually be overruling the decision of a former Pension Commissioner. That was the verbal reason he gave me. The man that decided her case formerly, however, did not put it on this ground, but, as I remember, because she did not explain the vital statistics in New York.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman think that kind of an officer ought to be kept in that place?

Mr. BELL. I say that the decision in this case would disgrace a justice of the peace, because here is the evidence of the captain, who swears directly that he was present when this man was shot.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. In other words——

Mr. BELL. Wait a moment. He swears that he relieved him from time to time, but he did not go to the hospital because he was a young and vigorous fellow. The surgeon of the Army swears that he does not remember of the fellow being in the hospital, and it would be strange if he did; but he says that he knew Slocum so well that if Slocum told him he was shot he would know that he was shot. The board that first examined him declare that they found the wound there, and the physician that treated him until he died swears that he died of that wound.

And yet the record of the vital statistics over in New York that calls everything heart disease or diarrhea, without recourse to any evidence anywhere, they have been asked and asked over again to explain the discrepancy between all this legal testimony and the board of vital statistics in New York, and because the soldier's widow said that she could not give them a sufficient explanation, they have struck it from the files.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I understood the gentleman from Colorado to say just now that this officer before whom this matter was tried said that the widow had made out her case?

Mr. BELL. He admitted to me verbally that she had.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And because the husband had not made out his case, he refuses to give his wife relief.

Mr. BELL. No; he said that Commissioner Black made a rule that if certain things were not done in certain cases, within a fixed time, they should be stricken from the files, and to allow the widow a pension would be virtually overruling a former commissioner.

Mr. BROMWELL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Colorado a question.

Mr. BELL. Very well.

Mr. BROMWELL. Suppose the circumstances you have narrated in regard to the failure to give the husband a pension while living did not exist, what would the widow be entitled to under the law as the widow of that soldier?

Mr. BELL. Seventeen dollars, as he was shot while a lieutenant. He was afterwards raised to a captain, and I suppose he got a Captain's pay.

Mr. BROMWELL. She would have been entitled to $17 as the widow of a soldier providing all the circumstances you have stated had not existed and the soldier himself failed to get a pension?

Mr. BELL. He was entitled to that if the gunshot wound killed him; but if other things killed him he is entitled to more. I introduced the bill for a pension under his rank as captain, and I think it ought to be held to that.

Mr. BROMWELL. The gentleman is wrong in regard to the law. He was not a captain at the time he incurred the disability. He would have been entitled to $17. That is what the committee gives in this case. Now, I ask the gentleman whether the attempt to raise the pension to $20 is not an attempt to get back pension in this case, a thing this House never does on a private bill?

Mr. BELL. No; we can not give her a back pension because, according to the committee's own decision, she has lost nearly $5,000 that she was entitled to. They say that he died from injuries received in the service.

Mr. BROMWELL. Is not that a back pension that the gentleman is trying to recoup by giving her $3 a month more than the committee reports?

Mr. BELL. No; because the committee says that he died from injuries received in the service. He died a captain, and his widow ought to have a captain's pension.

Mr. BROMWELL. He did not receive his injuries as a captain. It is the rank he holds when he receives the injuries that controls.

Mr. BELL. They find that he died of a gunshot wound or other causes of service origin, and say that it is immaterial which killed him, as in either case this committee says that his death is traceable to injuries received in the service.

Mr. SULLOWAY. If the committee will pardon me a moment, I think I can state the facts of this case. The soldier was successively a second lieutenant, a first lieutenant, and a captain. The only disabilities that it is claimed he contracted in the service were contracted while he was a first lieutenant. If he died of those disabilities, as we find he did, the widow would be entitled to a pension of $17 a month, exactly what we have recommended. So far as I am aware there is no pretense that he contracted any disabilities whatever while he was a captain. Of course we never grant arrearages, which the gentleman speaks of. It seems to me the committee has reported just what ought to be done—the granting of a pension at $17.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Why did not the widow get that amount at the Pension Office?

Mr. SULLOWAY. The claim was rejected at the Pension Bureau on the ground that the disability was not of service origin.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL] to change the amount of the proposed pension from $17 to $20.

Mr. BELL. No, sir. The original bill proposes a pension of $20. The committee has recommended $17. I ask that the committee amendment be voted down.

The question being taken, the amendments reported by the committee were agreed to, there being ayes 47, noes 15.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I have received a communication from the Grand Army post of the town at which I live which I desire to read in my time.

SHELBYVILLE POST, NO. 102, DEPARTMENT OF MISSOURI,
GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC,
Shelbyville, Mo., February 7, 1902.

Hon. DAVID B. HENDERSON,
Speaker of House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Believing that the administration of H. Clay Evans, as Commissioner of Pensions, has nullified the pension laws, as passed by Congress, thereby denying pensions to thousands of claimants fully entitled thereto under such laws, we respectfully petition the House of Representatives to appoint a committee to investigate the administration of said Commissioner.

Signed on behalf of Post No. 102, Department of Missouri, Grand Army of the Republic.

H. C. FORMAN.
Commander.
W. C. McDOWELL,
Post Adjutant.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand what the gentleman is reading, but from the gentleman's remarks he does not seem to be discussing the bill at all.

Mr. LLOYD. I am discussing my amendment.

Mr. SULLOWAY. What was your amendment?

Mr. LLOYD. It was to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am not disposed to take up the time of the committee, and I will conclude my remarks inside of three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from New Hampshire to make the point of order?

Mr. SULLOWAY. I withdraw that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I call attention to this matter because it is in line with others I have received, and it is simply to impress upon this body the feeling of the Grand Army with reference to the management of the Bureau of Pensions.

I also wish to call attention to another thing, which I have mentioned to various members of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and that is with reference to pensioning the Missouri Enrolled Militia. I have lying on my desk a petition from 350 citizens of Lewis County, Mo., asking that the Missouri Enrolled Militia be given a pensionable status.

This militia rendered service to the United States during the civil war but was employed by the State of Missouri. Afterwards the State was reimbursed by the United States, and thereby the services of these individuals were recognized as services rendered to the United States Government in the war of the rebellion. I call the attention of the House to this petition thus publicly because it is worthy of the notice of this body and it should take cognizance of the fact that these individuals who have rendered this service to the Government are now being denied the rights that accrue to individuals who served in the regular service of the Army and recognized at this time as worthy of pensions in this body. There are bills now pending before the Committee on Invalid Pensions bearing directly upon the question. There is a bill pending before the committee giving to the Missouri Enrolled Militia a pensionable status, and I hope that that bill will be given proper consideration by that committee.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Thomas, late of Company G, One hundred and eighty-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES A. SOMERVILLE.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 4260) to correct the military record of James A. Somerville.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the charge of desertion now standing against James A. Somerville, late of Company D, Fifth New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, on the records of the War Department be, and the same is, removed; and the Secretary of War is hereby directed to issue to said James A. Somerville an honorable discharge dated December 10, 1862: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have read the report of General Ainsworth's Bureau of the War Department on this case.

The Clerk proceeded to read the following report:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4260) to correct the military record of James A. Somerville, report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

A bill of similar character was reported in the second session of the Fifty-sixth Congress; and as the report on said bill seems to be very complete the same is hereby adopted and made a part of this report.

[House Report No. 2524, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session.]

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7603) to correct the military record of James A. Somerville, report the same back to the House favorably with the recommendation that it do pass with the following amendment:

Strike out the last two lines of the bill and insert in lieu thereof the following: "dated December 10, 1862: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Lieutenant Somerville was sent to hospital from Fair Oaks in July, 1862. He was dismissed in December for absence without leave, although he was then in hospital at Newark, N. J., and so reported by the surgeons, who stated that he was not fit for active service. In February, 1863, he asked that the dismissal be revoked and that he be granted an honorable discharge. The military commission reported that he ought not to be restored to the service, and took no action. He was notified that he had no appeal.

Beyond all question he was dismissed while he was in hospital, without notice. No reason can be given for the dismissal, and he is entitled to an honorable discharge with the usual proviso.

We add the record in this case as an appendix.

Mr. SLAYDEN (before the reading of the report was concluded). Mr. Chairman, the Clerk has read all of the report that I care to have read; but I want to make a brief statement in connection with this case, using it as a text.

This, I will say, is one of the least bad of the nearly 2,000 bad cases of this class now before the committee of which I am an humble member. This man was absent without leave and continued absent without leave. That is exactly what constitutes the military crime of desertion. Every time this Congress instructs the Secretary of War to mutilate or change the records it instructs that officer to write a falsehood upon the face of those records; and in every instance, so far as I know, without any exception, the purpose of bills of this character, declaring a man an honorable soldier when he was a deserter, is to invade the Treasury by way of the Pension Bureau.

There are worse bills than this—much worse—before the committee. There was some doubt in my mind when this bill was considered by the committee as to the merits of this case—not much, but just enough to prevent me from submitting a minority report. I do not believe that this bill ought to pass. I do not believe that any man who has had his case properly investigated and reported against, as this man's case has been investigated and reported against, is entitled to go upon the pension rolls of this Government. It is not jealousy for a good name which inspires these people; it is an anxiety to live upon the tax-payers of the country. And while I shall not interpose any objection to the House voting on this bill, I want to give notice that nearly 2,000 skulkers—men who did not do their duty during the war—are asking that they be given the same certificate of character and granted the same rights at the public treasury that are accorded men who performed honest and faithful service up to the termination of their term of enlistment.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I introduced this bill, and I believe it is a meritorious one, if there ever was a meritorious bill before this House for removing the charge of desertion. I desire to read briefly in my time an extract from the report of the Committee on Military Affairs relating to this bill, and then I may submit some further statements. The committee says, and I submit it is borne out by the evidence:

Lieutenant Somerville was sent to hospital from Fair Oaks in July, 1862. He was dismissed in December for absence without leave, although he was then in hospital at Newark, N. J., and so reported by the surgeons, who stated that he was not fit for active service. In February, 1863, he asked that the dismissal be revoked and that he be granted an honorable discharge. The military commission reported that he ought not to be restored to the service, and took no action. He was notified that he had no appeal.

Beyond all question he was dismissed while he was in hospital, without notice. No reason can be given for the dismissal, and he is entitled to an honorable discharge, with the usual proviso.

I submit also, Mr. Chairman, that the evidence fully sustains the report of this committee that this man was sent to the hospital, and that he remained there until after he was dishonorably discharged from the service by reason of his not answering at roll call. He was then in the hospital, and I submit that that charge, by reason of this fact, ought now to be removed.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will ask the gentleman, with his permission, whether he does not think that a man who has been thought fit to bear the commission of the United States ought to have had intelligence enough to submit the certificate of the surgeon that he was absent by reason of physical disability?

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. As I understand, the hospital records themselves show that fact, and I think that ought to be enough.

The question being taken, the bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MICHAEL HAYES.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 6847) to correct the record of Michael Hayes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to correct the military record of Michael Hayes, late of Company H, Sixty-ninth New York Infantry Volunteers, and to grant him an honorable discharge from such organization and remove the charge of desertion standing against him as a member thereof: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of this act.

EPHRAIM H. GALLION.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to a mistake in the Calendar by which House bill 3309, Calendar No. 299 has been passed. It was passed owing to a mistake in the Calendar. The Calendar says it was reported by Mr. JETT from the Committee on War Claims. Mr. JETT is not a member of the Committee on War Claims, and it should be Committee on Military Affairs. I ask that we recur to that number and correct the mistake.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill to which the gentleman refers is in order and the Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3309) to remove charge of desertion against Ephraim H. Gallion.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary af War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion standing against Ephraim H. Gallion, late of Company B, Eleventh Regiment of Tennessee Cavalry: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

NELLIE BARTLETT.

The next business was the bill (S. 195) granting a pension to Nellie Bartlett.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Nellie Bartlett, widow of Eli V. Bartlett, jr., late of Company L, Second Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $8 per month, and $2 per month additional on account of each of the minor children of the said Eli V. Bartlett, jr., until they reach the age of 16 years.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ETTA SCOTT MITCHELL.

The next business was the bill (S. 1931) granting an increase of pension to Etta Scott Mitchell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Etta Scott Mitchell, widow of David D. Mitchell, late captain, Fifteenth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving, and $2 per month additional on account of the minor child of said David D. Mitchell until she reaches the age of 16 years.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "receiving" in line 9.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "thirty," in line eight, insert "five," so as to read "at the rate of $35 per month."

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I hope that this amendment will be agreed to. This lady is the widow of Capt. David C. Mitchell, who was killed in the Philippine Islands. He had served in the Army since 1876, I believe, according to the statement of the report. He had by promotion reached the regular rank of captain; but during the Spanish war he served as a major, and was promoted to the position of lieutenant-colonel.

But of course when the war was over he resumed his original position as captain. In a sudden, unexpected attack by hidden foes at Mavitac, in the Philippine Islands, he was killed while at the head of his company, leading and encouraging them in a very fierce engagement. General MacArthur says of that engagement in which this gallant soldier lost his life:

Thirty-three per cent is a profoundly impressive loss, and indicates stubbornness of fight, fearless leadership of officers, and splendid fortitude of men.

I believe that this Congress ought to give to this good woman a pension of $35. I know nothing about her financial condition. I believe the report says, in substance, that she has little or nothing. I think that this Committee of the Whole can well afford to vote her the additional $5 proposed by my amendment.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I trust the Committee of the Whole will not agree to this amendment. This is a bill which has come over to us from the Senate. The matter was considered by the Senate committee. The beneficiary named in the bill has made repeated calls upon that committee and on the committee of the House. The Senate committee reported the bill, in conformity with their action in several cases of like nature, at $30 a month; and in that form the Senate passed the bill. We took it into consideration and recommended that it be passed at the same amount that we have recommended in several similar cases. Captain Mitchell was no doubt a gallant officer; but there were other gallant officers of our Army and Navy who were engaged in that war, and who were killed in action; and widows of officers of the same rank as this woman's husband—captain—are receiving only $30 a month.

In my judgment it would be an act of gross injustice to confer an additional favor upon this beneficiary when the House on other occasions has given to the widows of officers similar in rank to Captain Mitchell the amount reported in this bill. I trust the Committee of the Whole will be consistent with its previous action, will support the recommendation of the committee, and vote down the amendment now proposed.

Mr. RYAN. Has the House ever departed from the custom of giving only $30 in cases of this kind?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. No; not recently.

Mr. RYAN. That is not the question. Has it ever done so?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. It has in the past. In some previous years there has not been a consistent line of action on this subject. I might add that the proposed amendment is in contravention of the rule of the Senate. In my judgment the only operation of it would be to deprive this beneficiary of the $30 a month for some time, because the Senate committee would not recede from its action, so that the only object, perhaps, to be secured by a favorable action upon this amendment would be to deprive the beneficiary of the $30 a month now offered to her in this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman if he knows whether or not Congress has not granted a pension to the widow of Capt. Allen Capron, who occupied the same rank, at the rate of $35 a month?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Not this Congress.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. The reason I ask the gentleman is that I do not know, I frankly state, whether that is the case; but I am informed that the widow of Capt. Allen Capron, who served not more than one-third of the time in the Army that Captain Mitchell did, is allowed a pension of $35 a month, and she has no child dependent upon her.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I would say that I think I answered that question a moment ago when I said in the previous Congress there was no consecutive line of action in regard to it. Recently there has been.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I think that is true.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I say in the last Congress.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Yes; I say this committee can very well afford it, and so far as the Senate end of the matter is concerned, I want to assure my friend from New Jersey that this good woman and her friends would be very willing to take the chances on the Senate committee action.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I want to say, in reply to the question interposed by the gentleman in regard to Mrs. Capron's matter, inasmuch as he has called the matter up, that she lost not only a husband in that engagement but also lost a son; so that she was doubly deprived.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I do not see that that makes any difference.

Mr. SIMS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. What is the regular rate allowed by the Bureau for this woman's pension?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Twenty dollars.

Mr. SIMS. That is what she is entitled to under the general law?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. What is the reason it has been brought in here to increase it by private act?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. There is really no reason. I may say, in reply to the gentleman's question, that after the close of the civil war widows in her condition, whose husbands occupied that rank, drew for years $8 a month. Now, those that are deprived of their husbands under this rank at the present time, under the general law, are drawing $20 a month, 250 per cent more, and when they come to Congress for an increase in these pensions, in my judgment, there is very little merit in it.

Mr. SIMS, I want to ask the gentleman why either the Senate or the House has reported the increase of $10, and what was the ground upon which the committee thinks it should be increased at all?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. There is practically, in my judgment, no good reason, and the only one that the committee can assign and give to this House is because of the pleadings of those people—that their husbands have died on the field of battle and that they have nothing wherewith to support themselves.

Mr. SIMS. I want to ask you further this question: If this bill should pass, even as reported, is there any reason why by private act every other widow who is receiving a pension of $20 should not also have her pension increased by private act?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER In my judgment we do an act of injustice against all the others when we pass these bills.

Mr. SIMS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to be recognized for a few minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SIMS. There is nothing I regret more than to oppose the request of my distinguished friend from Kentucky [Mr. SMITH] who proposes this amendment. There is certainly no reason why I should feel unkindly toward the beneficiary, but I have urged upon this House ever since I have been in it that it is the duty of Congress to oppose the increases of pensions upon the floor by way of amendment over and above that reported by the committee, unless it can be shown that the committee has discriminated unfairly, that they have not given the same amount of pension that is usual and customary under the same facts.

Now, I oppose this increase of $5. Its result will be to immediately call for hundreds of private bills of the same character. Immediately upon its passage I have no doubt that a widow somewhere in my district will write to me asking to have her pension increased by my introducing a private act for that purpose. The other day I spent thirty-five minutes in argument on this floor trying to point out to the House just what this kind of legislation leads to. Now, before the Committee on Invalid Pensions there are to-day 4,960 bills; before the Committee on Pensions there are 712 bills; a total of 5,672 private bills before these two committees. The majority of them are for increases.

I showed in my argument the other day that the increases that were made in the last session of the Fifty-sixth Congress amounted to 200 per cent over the amount they would have received under the general law. You are building a fire under you. It is an entire mistake to increase by amendments in this House. I said then, and I repeat it here, if a bill has been reported too low, then ask to have it recommitted and make your fight before the committee. If these committees do not adopt some general rule, and if we do not uphold them in it, this country will be swamped by these private pension bills.

This is a very modest increase, and I do not oppose it on the ground of the amount, but to be consistent I must oppose it. I hope that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SMITH] will ask that it be recommitted to the committee and make his argument there.

I had the honor to serve on the Pensions Committee for one term. I do not know what new material there is in it now, but I know the chairman is still on the committee, and I never served on a committee that seemed to be more just, that seemed to want to treat all alike more than that committee did. If there has been discrimination in the past, that is no reason why we should to-day continue it. I have opposed it in season and out, and I think it is my duty, on the floor of this House, to continue to do so. Not on account of the amount but for the sake of the precedent I hope we will stop increasing pensions upon this floor in response to appeals by popular members while we are under the spell of their oratory.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SMITH], to amend the bill by adding the word "five" after the word "thirty," making the sum $35 per month.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. SMITH of Kentucky), there were—ayes 23, noes 31.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

GEORGE H. MORTON.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to revoke the order dismissing Charles H. Hawley from the service as a second lieutenant of the Sixteenth Regiment of Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and to issue a certificate of honorable discharge for him, to date from the 25th day of January, 1863, and that said Hawley shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on said date: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

GEORGE K. BOWEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 608) for the relief of George K. Bowen.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered to revoke and set aside Special Orders, No. 147, paragraph 57, War Department, Adjutant-General's Office, dated March 27, 1865, dismissing George K. Bowen, lieutenant-colonel One hundred and eighty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and to cause to be issued to him an honorable discharge as of date [illegible] Provided, That no bounty, pay, or allowance shall accrue.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

EMANUEL KLAUSER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3762) for the relief of Emanuel Klauser.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of mutiny against Emanuel Klauser, late corporal of Company H, Fifty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and grant said Emanuel Klauser an honorable discharge to date from the 1st day of April, 1865.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Add the following proviso:
"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES W. HOWELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 24) for the relief of James W. Howell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to revoke and set aside General Orders, No. 10, Headquarters United States Forces, Pine Bluff, Ark., July 31, 1865, issued by G. M. Mitchell, colonel commanding, approving the proceedings, findings, and sentence of the general court-martial in the case of James W. Howell, of Company H, Fifty-fourth Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers, and then to issue to said Howell an honorable discharge as of date July 31, 1865.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Add, after line 12, the following proviso:
"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

C. R. DICKSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R 3278) to correct the military record of C. R. Dickson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to correct the military record of C. R. Dickson, late private, Company D, First Georgia Regiment United States Volunteers, and issue to him an honorable discharge.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

SAMUEL WELCH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6467) granting an honorable discharge to Samuel Welch.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to correct the military record of and grant an honorable discharge to Samuel Welch, late private, Company F, Third Wisconsin Volunteer Cavalry, and now a resident of Delton, Wis.: Provided, That no pay or allowances shall become due or payable by reason of the passage of this act.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee to the proposition contained in this bill, and to do so more clearly I will read from the report of General Ainsworth, which is a part of the report.

It is shown by the records that Samuel Welch was enrolled December 13, 1861, and mustered into service January 31, 1862, to date from January 4, 1862, as a private in Company F, Third Wisconsin Cavalry Volunteers, to serve three years. He appears to have served faithfully until July 20, 1862, when he deserted at Fort Scott, Kans., never thereafter returning to his command, which remained in service until March 11, 1865.

Now, to condone that offense attention is called to the fact that he enlisted in another regiment and served until mustered out. No allusion is made to the fact that he might have done this for the purpose of securing a bounty. There is no question that this man was a deserter. Desertion is an inexcusable crime. Under such circumstances I shall oppose the passage of this bill, and if it is passed it must be done by a vote of the House.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be laid aside without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, this bill will be laid aside without prejudice. The Chair hears no objection.

JOHN GLASS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1358) to remove the charge of desertion from the naval record of John Glass.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion now standing against the record of John Glass, late a first-class boy on board the U. S. S. Moose, and to issue to him an honorable discharge from the service.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

HENRY L. M'CALLA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2557) for the relief of Henry L. McCalla.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of dishonorable dismissal against Henry L. McCalla, late captain of Company G, Thirty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and grant him an honorable discharge.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask for some information. I observe the Clerk skipped two or three bills before this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state the number on the Calendar?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Four hundred and fifty-four was one of them that was missed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Kentucky that those bills can not come up in committee under this rule.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. That is the point I wanted to make inquiry about.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

FREEMAN R. E. CHANABERRY.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 6713) granting a pension to Freeman R. E. Chanaberry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Freeman R. E. Chanaberry, late of Company K, Knoxville Dragoons, Tennessee Volunteers, Mexican war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Change the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Freeman R. E. Chanaberry."

In lines 6 and 7 strike out "Knoxville Dragoons," and after those words insert "First Regiment."

In line 7 change "Volunteers" to "Volunteer;" and in the same line strike out the word "Mexican" and insert in lieu thereof "Cavalry;" also in same line, after the word "war," insert "with Mexico."

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and substitute therefor the word "twenty."

Add at the end of the bill the words "in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

FRANCES TAYLOR ANDERSON.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 6081) granting an increase of pension to Frances Taylor Anderson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Frances Taylor Anderson, widow of Robert H. Anderson, captain Company A, Ninth Infantry, who died of pneumonia in Manila, P. I., November 7, 1901, and that she be paid a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving, and $2 per month additional for each of her minor children, Sarah Clitz Anderson and Catherine Regina Anderson, until they shall respectively arrive at the age of 16 years.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read and agreed to as follows:

Substitute the initial "T." for the Christian name "Taylor" in the title and in the body of the bill.

Strike out all in the bill after the words "Robert H. Anderson," in line 6, and substitute therefor the following: "late captain, Ninth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving, and $2 per month additional on account of the minor children of the said Robert H. Anderson until they reach the age of 16 years."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

LAURA G. WEISENBURGER.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 7755) granting a pension to Laura G. Weisenburger.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pensions laws, the name of Laura G. Weisenburger, widow of Maj. John J. Weisenburger, late major of First Washington Regiment of Volunteers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $75 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all in the bill after the words "Laura G. Weisenburger," in line 6, and substitute therefor the following: "widow of John J. Weisenburger, late major, First Regiment Washington Volunteer Infantry, war with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN GARNER.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 10132) to increase the pension of John Garner:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Garner, late a soldier in the Creek war of 1836, the Seminole war of 1837, and the Cherokee war of 1838, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to John Garner."

Strike out all in the bill after the word "Garner," in line 6, to and including the word "thirty-eight," in line 9, and substitute therefor the words "late of Captain Reid's, Story's, and Hamilton's companiss of Georgia Volunteers, Creek and Florida Indian wars."

In line 9 strike out the word "to."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ELIZABETH P. SEARCY.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 3371) granting a pension to Elizabeth P. Searcy.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at the rate of $30 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth P. Searcy, widow of John Searcy, late a second lieutenant in Powell's battalion, Missouri Mounted Volunteers, Mexican war.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Change the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth P. Searcy."

Strike out all in the bill after the word "roll," in line 4, and substitute therefor the following: "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth P. Searcy, widow of John M. Searcy, late second lieutenant, Company E, Powell's battalion, Missouri Mounted Volunteers, war with Mexico, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ANDERSON HOWARD.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 11144) granting an increase of pension to Anderson Howard.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Anderson Howard, Company D, Palmetto Regiment, South Carolina Volunteer Infantry, Mexican war, and pay him a pension of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

After the words "Anderson Howard," in line 6, insert "late of."

In line 7 strike out "Mexican war" and substitute therefor "war with Mexico."

In line 8, after the word "pension," insert "at the rate."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MINNIE E. KING.

The next business was the bill (S. 3424) granting an increase of pension to Minnie E. King.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Minnie E. King, widow of Charles A. E. King, late lieutenant, United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $35 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving, and $2 per month additional on account of the minor child of said Charles A. E. King until he reaches the age of 16 years.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

RICHARD OWENS.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 7731) granting an increase of pension to Richard Owen.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Richard Owen, late of Company A, Tremont's Battalion California Volunteers, Mexican war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 a month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Change the spelling of claimant's surname in the title and in the body of the bill to "Owens."

In line 7 strike out "Mexican war" and substitute therefor "war with Mexico."

In line 8 strike out "thirty-six" and substitute therefor "sixteen," and in the same line strike out "the pension" and substitute therefor "that.'

In line 8 change "a month" to "per month."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOSEPH COWGILL.

Mr. STEELE. I ask unanimous consent to take up now for consideration the bill (H. R. 9848) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Cowgill. This bill was recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and that committee has agreed on certain amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the bill been reported back since it was recommitted?

Mr. STEELE. It has not. It was recommitted by request, and I ask to have it restored to its place on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the parliamentary condition stated by the gentleman, the bill must first come up in the House before it can be taken up in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STEELE. I am asking unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair the bill can not be considered at this time.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I move that the committee now rise and report to the House the bills which have been passed, with their respective amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CAPRON reported that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar had had under consideration sundry bills of the Senate and the House, respectively, and had directed him to report back the same favorably, some with and some without amendments, and with the recommendation that the bills be passed by the House in the form recommended by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, it will be agreeable to the gentlemen in charge of the bills to allow the House to take up the conference report, if the Chair has no objection.

The SPEAKER. Does the chairman ask for the previous question upon these bills reported?

Mr. SULLOWAY. Yes; I desire to have it considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the previous question be considered as ordered upon the several bills and amendments to their passage. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from New Hampshire to yield the floor to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SULLOWAY. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to call up the conference report.

PERMANENT CENSUS BUREAU.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on House bill 10308. I ask that the statement of the House conferees may be read in lieu of the report. The statement covers the question fully.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the present committee of the Census, calls up the conference report on the bill establishing a permanent Census Bureau, asking that the statement be read instead of the report.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10308) to provide for a permanent Census Office, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 9, 11, 17, 18, 20, 22, 27, 30, 32, and 34.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 7, 10, 19, 23, 24, 25, 26, 28, 29, 31, and 33, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of the matter inserted by said amendment the word "Bureau" and insert in lieu thereof "Census Office;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 11–16: That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the amended section and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Section 5. That all employees of the Census Office, at the date of the passage of this act, except unskilled laborers, may be appointed by the Director of the Census with the approval of the head of the Department to which said Census Office is attached, and when so appointed shall be and they are hereby placed, without further examination, under the provisions of the civil-service act approved January 16, 1883, and the amendments thereto and the rules established thereunder; and persons who have served as soldiers in any war in which the United States may have been engaged, who have been honorably discharged from the service of the United States, and the widows of such soldiers, shall have preference in the matter of employment; and all new appointments to the permanent clerical force in the Census Office hereby created shall be made in accordance with the requirements of the civil-service act above referred to."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after the words "such classes," in line 4 of the matter inserted by said Senate amendment, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and the Director of the Census is authorized and directed to collect statistics relating to all of the deaf, dumb, and blind, notwithstanding the restrictions and limitations contained in section 8 of said act entitled 'An act to provide for taking the Twelfth and subsequent censuses:' Provided, That in taking the census of said classes the inquiries shall be confined to the following four questions, namely: Name, age, sex, and post-office address;" and the Senate agree to the same.

A. J. HOPKINS,
CHARLES A. RUSSELL,
F. M. GRIFFITH,
Managers on the part of the House.

J. V. QUARLES,
L. E. McCOMAS,
JAS. P. TALIAFERRO,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House submit the following statement showing the effect of the agreement reached by the conferees on the disagreeing amendments of the two Houses to the bill (H. R. 10308) to provide for a permanent Census Office.

The Census Office, created by the bill as agreed upon by the conferees, is made a permanent office in the Department of the Interior. The Director of the Census will hold his office at the pleasure of the President, and his salary has been fixed at $6,000 per annum. The bill as it originally passed the House provided that the salary of the Director should be $5,000 a year. The Senate amended the bill, fixing his salary at $7,500. The conferees have agreed upon a compensation of $6,000 per annum for the Director, that being the amount provided for in the census act of March 3, 1899.

The House bill provided for 3 chief statisticians, at $2,500 each; also 3 chiefs of division, at $1,800 each. The Senate increased the number of chief statisticians and chiefs of division to 4 of each class, so as to provide for the 4 general divisions of the Census Office, and to this arrangement the House conferees have agreed.

The salary of the chief clerk of the Census Office was fixed by the House at $2,000 per annum. The Senate proposed to increase his salary to $2,800. The compensation agreed upon by the conferees is $2,500, which is, perhaps, a reasonable compensation for such an office when comparison is had with the amounts paid similar officers of the Government bureaus.

The number of employees of the lower grades, fixed by the House, remains unchanged.

Section 5 of the proposed bill provides for the appointment of the present employees of the Census Office by the Director of the Census, with the approval of the head of the department to which said office is attached. The conferees examined a number of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States and found that the chief officer of a bureau attached to an executive department is not the "head of a department" within the meaning of Article II, section 2, of the Constitution so as to authorize Congress to vest in him the power of appointment. (United States v. Germaine, 99 U. S., 508.) It is proper, however, to provide that the chiefs of bureaus shall make the appointments with the approval of the head of the executive department. (United States v. Hartwell 6 Wallace, 385.) It is believed that the section submitted by the conferees will effect the wishes of the members of the House.

The special work to be done by the Census Office after July 1, 1902, remains the same as provided in the bill as it passed the House, except that reports on cotton ginning are to be made weekly, and that the inquiries concerning the deaf, dumb, and blind shall be restricted to four matters, namely, name, age, sex, and post-office address. This last restriction is, however, the same as that contained in one of the amendatory acts passed by Congress a year or more ago.

The Senate inserted an amendment providing for an assistant director of census at a salary of $4,000 per annum, a position created by the act of March 3, 1899. The conferees reached the conclusion that inasmuch as the census force will be materially reduced after July 1, 1902, and as 4 chief statisticians and a chief clerk are provided for at $2,500 each, that it would be unnecessary to continue the office of assistant director.

The statement given below shows the changes made by the Senate in the executive staff and the result of the conferees' agreement:

House bill.		Senate amendments.
Director	$5,000	Director	$7,500
Chief clerk	2,000	Assistant director	4,000
3 chief statisticians	7,500	Chief clerk	2,800
3 chiefs of divisions	5,400	4 chief statisticians	10,000
		4 chiefs of divisions	7,200
Total	19,900	Total	31,500
Total House bill			19,900
Increase proposed by Senate			11,600

AGREEMENT.

Director	$6,000
Chief clerk	2,500
4 chief statisticians	10,000
4 chiefs division	7,200
Total	25,700
House bill	19,900
Increase over House bill	5,800

A clause was inserted by the Senate, and agreed to by the House conferees, which provides that the printing division of the Census Office shall be abolished July 1, 1902. This arrangement is in entire accord with the views of the Census Committee at the time the bill was submitted to the House. The House bill failed to state at what time the printing division was to be abolished, and it was thought wise to insert the provision referred to.

In conclusion the conferees on the part of the House desire to state that the bill finally agreed upon and now reported to the House is substantially the same as the one passed by the House January 30, 1902.

A. J. HOPKINS,
CHARLES A. RUSSELL,
F. M. GRIFFITH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, the statement presented by the conferees on the part of the House so fully covers all of the items of disagreement between the two bodies that I take it it will be unnecessary for me to make any further statement. The bill is practically the same as it passed the House.

Mr. BURLESON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if the conferees made any change in the amendments offered by the Senate, with reference to taking these cotton statistics?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, sir; the conferees adopted the Senate amendment as it was prepared in the Senate and as it passed that body.

Mr. BURLESON. That is satisfactory.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I desire so ask the gentleman if this conference report is signed by all of the conferees?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; of both the Senate and the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Unanimously agreed to?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

The question being taken on agreeing to the conference report, it was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HOPKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL MONDAY.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

JOSEPH COWGILL.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 9848, for the relief of Joseph Cowgill. It is a bill that was recommitted to the committee for a correction.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LACEY). The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the committee be discharged from further consideration of the following bill, and that it be considered in the House. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joseph Cowgill, late of First Indiana Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. SIMS. Can we not have a report on the bill?

Mr. STEELE. The bill was recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions for correction. The correction has been made, and while the committee have not reported the bill they have agreed to the amendment suggested, making it $30 instead of $40.

Mr. SIMS. It is reduced instead of increased.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, the bill was for $40 per month, and the committee amendment is for $30 per month. The bill was recommitted because a mistake had been made. The committee have agreed upon $30 a month. Therefore I move to amend by making it $30 a month in lieu of the amount in the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection this correction will be made, and the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Indiana will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SULLOWAY, a motion to reconsider the several votes by which the various bills were passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted, as follows:

To Mr. SHALLENBERGER, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. SCARBOROUGH, for ten days, on account of important business.

ST. ANDREWS LODGE, OF CYNTHIANA, KY.

By unanimous consent, on motion of Mr. KEHOE, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of St. Andrew's Lodge, of Cynthiana, Ky., Forty-seventh Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. SULLOWAY (at 3 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Levi M. Hummer, administrator of estate of Benjamin A. Hummer, v. The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, March 1, 1902.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CLAY, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Journal will stand approved.

SPECIAL POSTAL RATES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A day or two since the Postmaster-General sent a communication with a large number of papers in response to the resolution touching certain periodical publications. It was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to be printed. On examination the Chair finds that the printing of the large number of charts would be very expensive and that there were also a large number of papers that were copyrighted. If there be no objection, he will regard that order as reconsidered and will require the printing only of the communication of the Postmaster-General, which is ample. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

BRIG HAPPY RETURN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting the conclusions of fact and of law and of the opinion of the court filed under the act of January 20, 1885, in the French spoliation claims set out in the findings by the court relating to the vessel brig Happy Return, Ezekiel Durfey, master; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

DANIEL B. KIMBALL AND JOHN ALPHIN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy of the findings filed by the court in the cause of Daniel B. Kimball and John Alphin v. The United States; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Worcester, Mass., praying for the passage of the so-called Hoar anti-injunction bill, to limit the meaning of the word "conspiracy" and the use of "restraining orders and injunctions" in certain cases; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TELLER. I present a memorial of the legislature of Colorado, asking that the good offices of the Government of the United States be offered for the reestablishment of peace in the Transvaal country. I suppose it ought to be inserted in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I should like to state that I believe this memorial received the unanimous vote of the Colorado legislature.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House resolution No. 10.

Whereas the traditions of our nation and the sentiments of our people, from the inception of our Government, have been most ardently in favor of any and all people struggling for liberty—as evidenced by our active sympathy, earnestly expressed in the cases of Poland, Hungary, Greece, and the South American republics; and

Whereas the present efforts of the South African Boer for the right of self-government enlist the sympathy of the leading nations of the world for their heroism and self-sacrifice and form a noble counterpart to our own endeavors of a century and a quarter ago for the same glorious object; and

Whereas the policy adopted with reference to the Boer women and children, whereby the latter are being pratically exterminated, is so pitiable that their condition appeals to the humanity of the world at large and constrains us to solemnly protest, in the name of Colorado, against such a policy which can be but an abiding sorrow amongst all civilized peoples for generations to come; and

Whereas the history of Great Britain has, in many ways been glorious and beneficial in its influence on mankind because of the justice, humanity, and mercy practiced by the English people, it seems that the cruelty now prevailing in South Africa must inevitaby detract from this noble heritage and breed distrust and alienation in the minds of people who have been and desire to be England's friends:

Therefore, in view of the critical situation and in the name of that justice, humanity, and mercy of which England has furnished the world so many noble examples, and in the name of millions of God's people who prize liberty, we appeal to our National Administration at Washington to tender the good offices of our Government in any dignified and consistent manner that will be conducive to peace between the South African republics and Great Britain, to the end that the British Government may be induced and persuaded to change its present policy and tender such terms of peace as will be alike honorable to itself and acceptable to the Boers and not inconsistent with their aspiration for liberty. And be it

Further resolved, That a copy of these resolutions, duly signed by the governor and attested by the secretary of state, be forwarded to the President of the United States and to the Senators and Representativeas in Congress from this State.

B. J. O'CONNELL,
Chairman of the Committee.
B. F. MONTGOMERY,
Speaker of the House.
WILLIAM J. HAMILTON,
Clerk of the House.

Approved this 20th day of February, A. D. 1902, at 9.20 o'clock a. m.

JAMES B. ORMAN,
Governor of the State.
[SEAL.]
DAVID A. MILLS,
Secretary of State.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Newfields, N. H., and a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of East Andover, N. H., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of Columbus Lodge, No. 401, International Association of Machinists, of Brooklyn, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation authorizing the construction of war vessels in the navy-yards of the country; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of the Merchants' Exchange and Board of Trade of Portland, Me., praying for the appointment of a commission to study the trade conditions in China; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of Oldtown Division, No. 11, Order of Railroad Telegraphers, of Gardiner, Me., praying for the passage of the so-called Hoar anti-injunction bill, to limit the meaning of the word "conspiracy" and the use of "restraining orders and injunctions" in certain cases; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of A. F. Allen and 15 other citizens of East Dixfield, Me., praying for the passage of the so-called Grout bill, to regulate the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Merrill Post, No. 137, Department of Maine, Grand Army of the Republic, of Richmond, Me., praying for the enactment of legislation authorizing the construction of war vessels in the navy-yards of the country; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a petition of Local Branch of Granite Cutters' Union, of Vinalhaven, Me., praying for the reenactment of the Chinese-exclusion law; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a memorial of Columbus Lodge, No. 401, International Association of Machinists, of Brooklyn, N. Y., remonstrating against any extension of the present leave of absence to Government employees in navy-yards and arsenals; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a petition of Columbus Lodge, No. 401, International Association of Machinists, of Brooklyn, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation authorizing the construction of war vessels in the navy-yards of the country; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of sundry merchants, producers, and manufacturers of Manila, P. I., remonstrating against the imposition of a proposed prohibitive tariff on products of the Philippines; which was referred to the Committee on the Philippines.

CALIFORNIA STATE CLAIMS.

Mr. PERKINS. I present the affidavit of Hon. Truman Reeves, treasurer of the State of California, setting forth the amounts of money paid by that State between July 1, 1889, and January 1, 1902, as interest on money borrowed by that State by the sale of bonds issued under provisions of the acts of the State legislature, approved April 27, 1863, and April 4, 1864. I move that the affidavit be printed as a document, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

CREEK INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent to have a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, addressed to me, in regard to the Creek Indian lands, printed. I am getting a great many letters in regard to it, and it contains information that will be valuable to the public generally. I ask that it may be printed as a document. It consists of only two pages and it will cover merely one sheet.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

On motion of Mr. PROCTOR, it was Ordered, That the hearings had upon the bill (H. R. 9206) relating to oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products, be printed as a document, and that 500 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate.

ESTATE OF MORGAN C. HAMILTON.

Mr. CULBERSON. I present, by request, a resolution to be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. In addition to what is implied by introducing the resolution by request, I desire to state that on my present understanding I am opposed to its passage; but I do not feel that I ought to decline to introduce it for the consideration of the committee and of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas, by request, presents a resolution; which will be read.

The resolution was read, and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Robert A. Smith, surviving executor of Morgan C. Hamilton, deceased, late a Senator from the State of Texas, $5,356.16, due him as a Senator of the United States from the 4th of March, 1869, to the 30th of March, 1870, to be paid from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

DOCUMENTS FOR SECRETARY'S OFFICE.

Mr. McMILLAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Superintendent of Documents be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to issue to the Secretary of the United States Senate such Government publications as the Secretary of the Senate may find from time to time to be necessary for the use of his office.

POWERS OF PRESIDING OFFICER OF THE SENATE.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, yesterday I introduced a Senate resolution which I asked might lie on the table with a view of calling it up and submitting some remarks upon it on Monday. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] introduced a resolution applying, to some extent, to the same subject-matter, and had it referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I have considered the matter since that time, and I have thought it best to ask that the resolution submitted by me be also referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution offered yesterday by the Senator from Washington will be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. TURNER. I wish to make a little further statement, Mr. President.

The Presiding Officer of this body, the present occupant of the chair, on last Thursday made a statement to the Senate concerning certain occurrences in the body that had taken place on the Monday previous, and at that time and in that statement took occasion to do me the high honor to apologize to me for having failed to put to the Senate an appeal from a decision of the Chair which I had claimed as a part of those proceedings.

The Senate at that time was about to proceed to the House of Representatives to join in the memorial services there, and that fact, together with an indisposition on my part to obtrude my personality on the Senate, prevented me at that moment from making acknowledgment of that very kindly and courteous act of the Presiding Officer.

I wish now to express to that officer and to the Senate my deep sensibility at that act, and to say that while I appreciate it very highly, it was wholly unnecessary from a personal point of view. I felt quite sure then, as I do now, that the Presiding Officer would feel disposed at all times to accord to me not only any right which I may have as a Senator, but any privilege or courtesy that his kindness might prompt one Senator to extend to another.

I am pleased to have the opportunity to make this acknowledgment in connection with the resolution which I have presented, because while it points at the action of the Presiding Officer and is in effect a declaration that that action was an excess of power, I wish that officer and the Senate to understand that the resolution was not drawn in any spirit of hostility to that officer. I am sure that there is nobody on this floor who has a higher personal regard for the distinguished Senator from Maine, who usually presides with so much fairness and so much ability over the proceedings of the Senate, than I have, or who would be less disposed to do any act which might offend in any way the sensibilities of a Senator.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To what order does the Senator rise?

Mr. HALE. I did not know the Senator from Washington was through. We could not hear on this side what the Senator was saying.

PROTEST OF SENATOR B. R. TILLMAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Day before yesterday, when the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] presented a protest which was spread on the Journal, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] moved that it be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and the reference was declared; but the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] interposed and asked that it might still be regarded as an open question. The Chair sees by the Journal that it was regarded as an open question, and nothing has been done with that motion.

Mr. BACON. In view of what has occurred, I desire to say a word on the question of the reference of the protest. While it may not now be material in this particular case, it is of some materiality as a matter of precedent.

Since the action to which the Chair has referred I have looked a little into the question, and, while I find no direct precedent, I think the general principles which should control us are as I shall now state. Where a protest relates exclusively to an act which has passed and has been concluded, and when it has been received by the Senate and spread upon the Journal, no motion to refer would be in order, because that is a finality. Nothing remains in such case to be done and there is no question to refer. Prior, however, to receiving the protest, it is in order to refer it, if there is any allegation that the protest is scandalous or disrespectful or untruthful. The Senate in that way would determine before spreading it upon the Journal whether it should be received.

Another class of protests, however, relate to acts which are continuing, and in those cases of course there is something remaining to be done. The act complained of is to be continued or abandoned. In such a case an order of reference is proper. In this particular case I now note what I had not an opportunity previously to note, because the protest was only presented and had not then been read, that the protest by the senior Senator from South Carolina was against a continuing order, and I think that in consequence the motion to refer is in order. I only make this statement now in view of the fact that I interrupted the proceedings when the motion to refer was made, and it is due to myself that I state the reasons and conclusions at which I arrived.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then, without objection, the motion made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] will be regarded as agreed to, and the reference will be made.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. BERRY. If morning business is over, I should like to ask unanimous consent to have a bill which was reported this morning passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair, under the unanimous consent given yesterday, must lay before the Senate the bill known as the omnibus claims bill.

Mr. BERRY. Then I will not ask the Senate to interfere with the regular order. I did not know that a special arrangement of that kind had been made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays House bill 8587 before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8587) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will continue the reading of the amendment reported by the Committee on Claims as a substitute for the bill after line 9 on page 1.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the amendment at line 6, on page 117, and concluded the reading, as follows:

To William A. Starkweather, of the State of Oregon, the sum of $2,170, being the amount paid by him to Owen Wade for clerk hire in the United States land office at Oregon City while the said Starkweather was register of said land office.

To T. and A. Walsh, of New York City, $823.55, for materials lost and damages sustained on account of an accident which occurred August 8, 1896, to the caisson of dry dock No. 2 at the navy-yard, Brooklyn, N. Y., as estimated and determined by a board of officers of the Navy directed to investigate and report thereupon, the board having found that the damages were not due to any negligence on the part of Messrs. T. and A. Walsh.

To Winslow Warren, of Boston, Mass., the sum of $500, for services rendered by him under order of the circuit court of the United States for the district of Massachusetts.

To George W. Weston, late postmaster of Exeter, N. H., the sum of $281.21, said amount being the balance due said George W. Weston for moneys deposited in the National Granite State Bank, of Exeter, N. H., during the month of July, 1893, and immediately preceding the failure of the said National Granite State Bank.

FOR INVESTIGATION AND SETTLEMENT.

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, directed to pay to Joseph W. Carmack, late of Company A, Sixth Missouri Cavalry, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the pay and allowances of a first sergeant of cavalry from the 1st day of May, 1862, to the 30th day of September, 1862, less any pay received by him during such period.

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to reimburse the survivors of the officers and crew of the U. S. revenue cutter Gallatin, wrecked off the coast of Massachusetts on the 6th day of January, 1892, for losses sustained by them, respectively, in the wreck of said vessel; and there is hereby appropriated a sum sufficient for carrying out the purposes of this act: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury, in determining the amount of such losses, shall in all cases require a schedule and sworn statement of loss, and that no allowance shall be made for any property except that which was useful, necessary, and proper for said officers and crew while engaged in the Government service on board such revenue cutter; that if any survivor of said wreck entitled to the benefit of this act shall have died before receiving the reimbursement herein provided for, then such sum, when duly ascertained, shall be paid to his widow, if one survive him, and if not, then to his minor children, if any there be; and the benefit of this act is further extended to the surviving widow or minor children of any officer or member of the crew of said revenue cutter Gallatin whose life was lost at the time of such wreck, and in this case the Secretary of the Treasury may dispense with the sworn statement provided for in this act.

That the accounting officers of the Treasury Department be, and hereby are, authorized and directed to pay to Ezra S. Havens, late captain of Company G, Eighteenth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, the pay and allowances of a captain of infantry in the late volunteer service from the 11th day of March, 1862, to the 2d day of February, 1863.

To the legal representatives of John H. Jones, formerly of Alliance, Ohio, deceased, and the legal representatives of Thomas D. Harris, formerly of Pittsburg, Pa., deceased, formerly partners engaged in the manufacture of iron at Loudon, Tenn., under the firm name of Jones & Harris, such amount as may be found due them on account of rolling mill, stock, manufactured iron, and other property captured from said firm by the Confederate forces and afterwards recaptured by the Army of the United States and converted to the use thereof; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to ascertain what part of such property actually came into the possession of and was consumed or used by the United States or under the military authorities thereof and what part thereof was returned to the said Jones & Harris, and the value of what was so received, taken, and used, and what was returned, and what amount or balance is justly due on account thereof; and the amount when so ascertained and paid to the legal representatives of John H. Jones and Thomas D. Harris shall be in full satisfaction of this claim.

That the proper accounting officers be, and they are hereby, directed to settle and adjust to Sarah K. McLean, widow of the late Lieut. Col. Nathaniel H. McLean, all back pay and emoluments that would have been due and payable to the said Nathaniel H. McLean as a major from July 23, 1864, to the date of his reinstatement, March 3, 1875, and that the amount found due by said adjustment is hereby appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to refund to the Merchants and Miners' Transportation Company, of Baltimore, Md., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the amount of the earnings by the steamships Ben de Ford and S. R. Spaulding deducted from the purchase money thereof at the time said vessels were taken possession of by the United States; that in addition thereto there shall be refunded to the said company, and in the manner aforesaid, the difference between the market value of said steamships when sold at public sale by the United States and the arbitrary valuation paid at the time of said seizure and enforced purchase.

That the Secretary of the Treasury, through the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, is hereby authorized and directed to audit and pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the claim of George A. Orr as acting assistant provost-marshal at Mount Vernon, Mo., from May 28, 1863, to January 30, 1864, at the rate of $100 per month for his services, and such sum for legitimate expenses during said period as may be shown and found to have been actually expended by him in the lawful discharge of his duties and necessary for the public service.

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the following-named persons, or their legal representatives, respectively, such amounts as shall be shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to have been paid by them, or by the firms they respectively represent, as tax on distilled spirits in excess of the quantity withdrawn by them from warehouse: Provided, That the amount paid to each shall not exceed the sums hereinafter stated, that is to say:

To George F. Roberts, administrator of the estate of William B. Thayer, deceased, surviving partner of Thayer Brothers, the sum of $10,790.32; to Silas Q. Howe, surviving partner of William T. Pate & Co., the sum of $19,662.19; to Henry W. Smith, surviving partner of T. & J. W. Gaff & Co., the sum of $14,062.50, the said payments being a refund of taxes exacted and paid on distilled spirits in excess of the quantity withdrawn by them from the United States bonded warehouse between July 1 and December 31, 1864.

FOR REFERENCE TO COURT OF ADMIRALTY.

That the claim against the United States of the Brooklyn Ferry Company, of New York, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, with its principal place of business in the borough of Brooklyn, city of New York, owner of the ferryboat New York, for damages caused by collision between the said ferryboat and the United States steamer Dolphin, in the East River, near Brooklyn, on the 1st day of August, 1899, may be sued for by the said ferry company in the United States district court for the eastern district of New York, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such a suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages, if any shall be found to be due, against the United States in favor of the said ferry company, upon the same principles and measure of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney-General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear for and defend the United States: Provided further, That should damages be found to be due the said ferry company, the amount of a final decree therefor shall be paid out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

That the claim of the owners of the British steamship Foscolia, sunk by collision with the United States steamship Columbia on the evening of May 28, 1898, near Fire Island light-ship, for and on account of the loss of said vessel and cargo, may be submitted to the United States district court for the southern district of New York, under and in compliance with the rules of said court sitting as a court of admiralty; and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine and to render judgment thereupon: Provided, however, That the investigation of said claim shall be made upon the following basis: First, the said court shall find the facts attending the loss of the said steamship Foscolia and her cargo; and, second, if it shall appear that the responsibility therefor rests with the United States steamship Columbia, the court shall then ascertain and determine the amounts which should be paid to the owners, respectively, of the Foscolia and her cargo, in order to reimburse them for the losses so sustained, and shall render a decree accordingly: Provided further, That the amounts of the losses sustained by the master, officers, and crew of the Foscolia may be included in such decree.

SEC. 2. That should such decree be rendered in favor of the owners of the Foscolia and her cargo, the amount thereof may be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

FOR REFERENCE TO COURT OF CLAIMS.

That the claim of Anna M. Colman, widow and sole legatee of Charles D. Colman, deceased, against the United States, on account of the seizure by the United States of certain moneys and securities in St. Louis, Mo., about February, 1865, held by the bailee as a special deposit theretofore made by said Charles D. Colman, be, and is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims; and jurisdiction is hereby vested in said court to hear and determine said cause and to render judgment for such amount as the court may find due the claimant, with the right of appeal to both parties; and the statute of limitations shall not apply to the right of recovery by said claimant.

That full jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of the personal representatives of William Kiskadden, deceased, against the United States, for $21,000, growing out of the alleged destruction of and damage to 128 head of horses and mules, 32 wagons, and 64 sets of harness belonging to the said William Kiskadden, resulting from the use of said teams under a contract made by the Government to the said William Kiskadden to transport the First Regiment of Colorado Volunteers from the city of Denver, Colorado Territory, to Fort Union, Territory of New Mexico, between the 22d day of February, 1862, and the 28th day of March, 1862, notwithstanding the lapse of time since such alleged destruction and damage. That upon petition being filed in said court, in accordance with the rules of said court, within six months from the passage of this act, by the personal representatives of said William Kiskadden, the court is authorized and directed to determine the merits of said claim, and to render judgment for the sum, if any, found due the personal representatives of said William Kiskadden, because of such destruction and damage to said horses, mules, wagons, and harness, with right to either party to appeal to the United States Supreme Court; and in the trial of said cause the affidavits on file in the War Department shall be received as competent evidence, and the finding of a board of survey (supervisors) convened at Camp Slaugh, March 14, 1862, that 36 of said animals, worn out and broken down from severe driving and want of forage, were abandoned before reaching Fort Union, if such finding be shown, shall be deemed and taken to be prima facie proof of the fact of such abandonment and loss: Provided, That in case judgment shall be rendered against the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury shall be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay the personal representatives of said William Kiskadden whatever sum shall be adjudged by the court to be due, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

That the legal representatives of Chauncey M. Lockwood be, and they are hereby, authorized to commence their suit in the Court of Claims of the United States for extra mail service on route numbered 16,637, extending from Salt Lake City, Utah, to The Dalles, Oreg.; and the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to adjudicate the same upon the basis of justice and equity, and to render a final judgment therein for the value of such extra mail service performed as aforesaid; and from any judgment that may be rendered in said cause either party thereto may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States; and the bar of the statute of limitations shall not avail in such cases.

That jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of Rinaldo P. Smith, of Baltimore, Md., against the Government of the United States on account of the sale, purchase, or occupation by the Government, through its internal-revenue office or others, of certain real estate of one George J. Stephens, in Greene County, Va., upon which the late firm of Smith, Ellett & Co., now represented by Rinaldo P. Smith, had a prior lien, and the right of the Government to plead the statute of limitations in bar of said claim is hereby waived: Provided, That said claimant file his petition within sixty days from the passage of this act in said Court of Claims, either at law or in equity as he may deem the rights of his case shall require; and the Government shall, upon notice served according to the rules and practice of said court, appear and defend against said suit, and the same shall proceed to final hearing and judgment, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, as provided by law.

COURT OF CLAIMS FOR LIGHT DRAFTS.

That the claims for further compensation for the construction of the ironclad monitors Shawnee, Modoc, Suncook, Yazoo, Casco, Sandusky, Marietta, Waxsaw, and Canonicus, and of the turrets of the ironclad monitors Monadnock and Agamenticus, may be submitted severally by the contractors or their legal representatives within one year after the passage of this act to the Court of Claims, under and in compliance with the rules and regulations of said court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine and render judgment upon the same: Provided, however, That the investigation of said claims shall be made upon the following basis: The court shall ascertain and allow the additional cost which was necessarily incurred by the contractors for building the ironclad monitors Shawnee, Modoc, Suncook, Yazoo, Casco, Sandusky, Marietta, Waxsaw, and Canonicus, and of the turrets of the ironclad monitors Monadnock and Agamenticus, in the completion of the same, by reason of any changes or alterations in the plans and specifications required, and delays in the prosecution of the work: Provided further, That such additional cost in completing and such changes or alterations in the plans and specifications required and delays in the prosecution of the work were occasioned by the Government of the United States; but no allowance for any advance in the price of labor or material shall be considered unless such advance could not have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary prudence and diligence on the part of the contractors: And provided further, That the compensation fixed by the contractors and the Government for specific alterations in advance of such alterations shall be conclusive as to the compensation to be made therefor: Provided, That such alterations, when made, complied with the specifications of the same as furnished by the Government aforesaid: And provided further, That all moneys paid to said contractors by the Government over and above the original contract price for the building of said vessels shall be deducted from any amounts allowed by said court by reason of the matters hereinbefore stated: And provided further, That if any such changes caused less work and expense to the contractors than the original plans and specifications, a corresponding deduction shall be made from the contract price, and the amount thereof shall be deducted from any allowance which may be made by said court to said claimants.

LIMITATION.

In case of the death of any claimant, or death or discharge of any executor or administrator of any claimant herein named, then payment of such claim as herein provided shall be made to the legal representatives: Provided, That where a claimant is dead the administrator, executor, or legal representative shall file a certified copy of his bond, which bond must be at least equal in amount to the sum hereby appropriated: And provided further, That in all cases where the original claimants were adjudicated bankrupts the payments shall be made to the next of kin instead of to assignees in bankruptcy; but these provisions shall not apply to payments in the cases of the French spoliation claims, which shall be made as heretofore prescribed in this bill.

Mr. WARREN. I ask to have the matter which I send to the desk added at the end of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the amendment:

Wherever under this bill it is provided that a payment be made to an executor or administrator, whether original or ancillary or de bonis non, and such executor or administrator is dead or no longer holds his office, the payment shall be made to the successor therein, his title to hold such office being established to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the clerks to turn to the amendment at page 109, beginning at line 21, the paragraph which was passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paragraph of the amendment which was passed over will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

To Elias E. Barnes, the sum of $3,457.26, in full of all claims and demands, the amount found due the said Elias E. Barnes by referees acting under appointment of the then Secretary of the Interior, and the said amount being the loss and damage sustained by said Elias E. Barnes by reason of the failure on the part of the United States to keep a contract made and entered into with him by the United States of America April 21, 1888, for putting in a concrete foundation for the Library building in the city of Washington.

Mr. WARREN. In lines 21 and 22, being the first and second lines of the paragraph, I move to strike out "$3,457.26" and to insert in lieu thereof "$14,548.25."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. On page 118, after line 6, I move to insert the amendment to the amendment which I send to the desk. It was left out through a misunderstanding.

The SECRETARY. On page 118, after line 6, insert:

To the heirs of W. T. Scott and to William Umdenstock, of Harrison County, Tex., or to their heirs or legal representatives, the sum of $2,750 each, that being the amount erroneously paid by W. T. Scott and William Umdenstock severally into the Treasury of the United States on the 17th day of September, 1881, in compromise of a judgment recovered against them as sureties on the official bond of Davis B. Bonfoey, late collector of internal revenue for the fourth district of Texas, in the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Texas on the 11th day of December, 1873, in a cause numbered 1037, wherein the United States were plaintiffs and W. T. Scott and others defendants; and the sum of $5,500 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and made immediately available for said purpose.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. On page 65, line 8, in the name "George E. Sill," I move to strike out "E" and insert "G;" so as to read "George G. Sill."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. On page 93, line 2, I move to make the same correction in the same name, striking out the initial "E" and inserting "G;" so as to read "George G. Sill."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. That completes the corrections of the amendment which the committee desired to have made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Claims as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, yesterday when the amendment was being read the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] called attention to some cases where the payment was made to an administrator by name and the administrator might have died. Has there been any correction made on that point?

Mr. WARREN. I presume the Senator was not in the Chamber when I sent that amendment to the desk. If the Senator would like, it can be read again. It is the amendment that I placed at the end of the amendment.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I was inquiring whether that had been fixed.

Mr. WARREN. It has been fixed.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I know two or three cases where claims had been reported in favor of administrators and the administrators died before the claims had been paid. I wanted to know whether that change had been made.

Mr. WARREN. That amendment to the amendment has been adopted.

Mr. BATE. That same amendment was agreed upon by the committee, and it was acted on by the Senate a few minutes ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been disposed of. Are there further amendments to the amendment as in Committee of the Whole?

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act, and for other purposes."

PROTECTION OF THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that thirty minutes be now given to the consideration of unobjected pension bills on the Calendar and bills to correct the record of soldiers.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire to permit me, in pursuance of the notice I gave yesterday, to move to take up Senate bill 3653, and I will then yield for the half hour.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall be pleased to do so.

Mr. HOAR. I move to take up the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves to proceed to the consideration of the bill, which will be read by its title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3653) for the protection of the President of the United States, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I now ask unanimous consent that this bill be temporarily laid aside for thirty minutes for the purpose suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BACON. I understood the Senator to move that we go to the Calendar. I did not know that any unanimous consent was asked to take up that bill.

Mr. HOAR. It was not unanimous consent that was asked, but the ordinary motion was made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion was made.

Mr. HOAR. In the ordinary form.

Mr. BACON. I do not think Senators on this side heard the motion or knew of it. I did not.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator from Georgia object to taking up the bill?

Mr. BACON. I do. I object to taking it up for this simple reason, and no other. It is certainly a most important matter and Senators on this side of the Chamber outside of those of us who serve on the Judiciary Committee have had no time to look into it whatever, and I am quite sure that they are not prepared to proceed with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not wish to press a bill unduly in opposition to such a suggestion by my honorable friend from Georgia, but this bill has been reported for several weeks. At the time I reported it I gave notice that I would move to take it up early, and I gave like notice yesterday or the day before. I do not believe there will be a time when the Senate will be any better prepared to take it up than now, but I do not want to press it unduly.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The very importance of the measure furnishes the reason for its consideration.

Mr. HOAR. Yes; it is very important.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will pardon me. Of course we recognize the fact that this bill is a measure of importance and one which challenges the attention of the country. It is bound to be considered at an early date.

Mr. HOAR. Perhaps since the bill has been taken up the Senator will allow it to resume its place at the end of the half hour. I wish to make a very few remarks upon it, not over five or ten minutes, but if after that no Senator is ready to proceed with the discussion, I shall not force it further.

Mr. BACON. I have no objection to that course, provided the Senator will recognize the same rule——

Mr. HOAR. I will not force a vote on it.

Mr. BACON. So that ample time is given for the discussion of it. That is all I desire.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] asks unanimous consent that thirty minutes be given to the consideration of unobjected pension cases and bills for the correction of military records. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me for a moment?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Maine and to other Senators who have morning business to transact.

PROCEEDINGS OF SCHLEY COURT OF INQUIRY.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent for a reconsideration of the vote by which on yesterday the amendment of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution of the Senate providing for printing the proceedings of the Schley Court of Inquiry were referred to the Committee on Printing, and then that the matter lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks that the action of yesterday by which the resolution in relation to the printing of the proceedings of the Schley Court of Inquiry was referred to the Committee on Printing be reconsidered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. Now, what does the Senator desire?

Mr. HALE. Let the resolution and the amendments lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DESECRATION OF THE AMERICAN FLAG.

Mr. BURROWS. I move that there be printed as a document the hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs touching the bills to prohibit the desecration of the American flag, and that 500 extra copies be printed for the use of the committee. The hearings were not long, and it will make only a small document.

The motion was reduced to the form of an order, and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That the hearings had before the Committee on Military Affairs upon the bills (S. 226, S. 229, S. 596, S. 1220, and S. 2504) to prevent the desecration of the American flag, be printed as a document, and that 500 additional copies be printed for the use of the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATORS FROM SOUTH CAROLINA.

On motion of Mr. HOAR, it was Ordered, That the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections (No. 574) presented in the Senate on Friday, February 28, 1902, relative to the altercation and personal encounter between the Senators from South Carolina during the open session of the Senate on the 22d day of February instant, including the views of the minority on the committee and of certain other members, and all the proceedings in the Senate had thereon, be printed as a Senate document.

JOSHUA H. BUCKINGHAM.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first bill on the Calendar under the order of the Senate will be announced.

The bill (H. R. 1198) granting a pension to Josiah H. Buckingham was announced as first in order; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 5, after the words "name of," to strike out "Josiah" and insert "Joshua;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joshua H. Buckingham, late of Company C, Twenty-fifth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Joshua H. Buckingham."

AARON M. APPLEGATE.

The bill (H. R. 7623) granting a pension to Aaron M. Applegate was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Aaron M. Applegate, late pilot U. S. S. Baltic, of the Mississippi Marine Brigade, and to pay him a pension of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SARAH O. FIELDS.

The bill (H. R. 2561) granting a pension to Sarah O. Fields was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Sarah O. Fields, former wife of Pleasant Fields, late of Company A, Sixty-seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and to pay her a pension of $8 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGIE JOSEPHINE WALCOTT.

The bill (S. 2287) granting an increase of pension to Georgie Josephine Walcott was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments; in line 7, before the word "Infantry," to insert "Regiment United States;" in line 8, before the word "and," to strike out "United States Army," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Georgie Josephine Walcott, widow of William H. Walcott, late captain, Seventeenth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I offer a further amendment to that bill. I move that the words which I send to the desk be inserted at the end of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That in the event of the death of the invalid and dependent son of said Georgie Josephine Walcott the pension of the beneficiary under this bill shall be reduced to the rate of $30 per month.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEROY S. SMITH.

The bill (S. 3187) granting an increase of pension to Leroy S. Smith was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Leroy S. Smith, late of Company A, Sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and first lieutenant Company G, Fourteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY SWEENEY.

The bill (S. 3660) granting a pension to Mary Sweeney was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Mary Sweeney, widow of Christopher Sweeney, late of Company G, Twentieth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and to pay her a pension of $8 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENROSE W. REAGAN.

The bill (H. R. 1939) granting an increase of pension to Penrose W. Reagan was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 7, before the word "Volunteer," to insert "Reserve;" and in the same line, before the word "Infantry," to strike out "Reserve;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Penrose W. Reagan, late of Company K, Fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Reserve Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 4748) authorizing the President of the United States to nominate Lieut. Commander R. M. G. Brown, now on the retired list, to be a commander on the retired list.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the President to nominate to the Senate Lieut. Commander R. M. G. Brown, now on the retired list, to be a commander on the retired list.

Mr. COCKRELL. On what ground is the bill based?

Mr. HALE. This is one of those cases where the officer failed only by a few days in his retirement of coming under the general law, and, as we have done in several other cases, we give him the benefit of it. He only lacked a few days of being within the prescribed time.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIGHT-HOUSES AT THE MOUTH OF BOSTON HABBOR.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3865) to establish light-houses at the mouth of Boston Harbor to mark the entrance to the new Broad Sound Channel. It is a very short bill and is important to Boston Harbor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be read in full to the Senate for its information.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be established by the Secretary of the Treasury a first-order light and fog signal at the Northeast Grave, on a granite tower, built in the most substantial and secure manner and of sufficient height to allow the lantern a focal plane of 100 feet above high water, to mark the entrance to the new Broad Sound Channel, Boston Harbor, at a cost not to exceed $188,000; for the establishment of two range lights on Lovells Island, at the mouth of Boston Harbor, the rear light to be of the fourth order, on a tower about 45 feet above high water, and the front light to be of the fifth order, on a tower about 25 feet above high water, at a cost not to exceed $10,000; and for the establishment of two range lights on Spectacle Island, mouth of Boston Harbor, the rear light to be of the fourth order, upon a tower about 55 feet above high water, and the front light to be of the fifth order, upon a tower about 30 feet above high water, at a cost not to exceed $13,000, the entire appropriation for the five lights above mentioned not to exceed the sum of $211,000.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let a part of the report in that case be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. MCMILLAN, February 20, 1902:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3865) to establish light-houses at the mouth of Boston Harbor to mark the entrance to the new Broad Sound Channel, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass.

The bill has the approval of the Treasury Department, as will appear by the following letters:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 18, 1902.

SIR: This Department has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a letter from your committee, dated February 15, 1902, inclosing for suggestions a copy of S. 3865, authorizing the establishment of light-houses at the mouth of Boston Harbor to mark the new Broad Sound Channel.

The Department in reply begs to state that in a letter of February 10, 1902, a copy of which is inclosed, it informed the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the need for the establishment of a light and fog-signal station on the Northeast Grave, and also of the need for range lights on Lovells Island and Spectacle Island in Boston Harbor, and asked that the required appropriations, aggregating $211,000, be made for that purpose.

This Department therefore has the honor, at the instance of the Light-House Board, to recommend the passage of the bill in question.

Respectfully,

L. M. SHAW, Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE,
United States Senate.

[House Document No. 381, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session.]

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 10, 1902.

SIR: This Department has the honor to state, at the instance of the Light-House Board, that the new 30-foot channel now being dredged from the sea to President Roads in Boston Harbor is so far completed that it will probably be ready for use in the fall of this year.

This channel at the Broad Sound entrance to Boston Harbor is to be 1,200 feet wide and 30 feet deep at low water, and, in conjunction with a proposed continuation of the dredging from President Roads to Boston and a proposed auxiliary channel 25 feet deep, will constitute the most important approach to Boston Harbor.

Vessels entering the harbor by either of these channels must approach the very dangerous ledges forming in part the barrier which shelters Boston Harbor from the sea. Some dangerous ledges, however, are scattered considerably seaward from that barrier. In approaching this vicinity vessels must have sure guidance to avoid disaster, and having made in safety the close approach to the channel, they must again have proper guidance into the channel and through it among the ledges, with which its entrance and the entire vicinity are studded.

Until this new 30-foot channel is lighted so that its approach can be made with safety by large vessels, its usefulness to the important commercial interests, for which it has been obtained at large cost, will be greatly hampered.

The Light-House Board, at its session on February 3, 1902, considered the question of providing proper aids to navigation for this channel, when it was decided that the establishment of the following-named lights is demanded to efficiently protect the vast commerce of this important harbor:

1. A first-order light and fog signal at the Northeast Grave, on a granite tower, built in the most substantial and secure manner, and of sufficient height to allow the lantern a focal plane of 100 feet above high water. The establishment of this light station at the Northeast Grave is deemed indispensable, its proposed location being on the ledge of that name, situated near the sea end of the channel, where a light is required to indicate to incoming vessels the channel entrance. The site is exposed to the heavy sea waves, making it requisite that the light should be not less than 100 feet high, to protect the delicate lense apparatus from the dashing spray. To do this a tower of that height is required to be erected on the solid rock foundation, for which it is estimated that an appropriation of $188,000 will be needed.

2. That two range lights be established on Lovells Island, the rear light to be of the fourth order, on a tower about 45 feet above high water, and the front light to be of the fifth order, on a tower about 25 feet above high water. The establishment of these range lights is necessary in order that the incoming vessel, after passing the Northeast Grave, may have absolute and sure guidance into the channel and through it to the angle which it makes preparatory to running into President Roads. It is estimated that this light station can be established at a cost not to exceed $10,000.

3. That two range lights be established on Spectacle Island, the rear light to be of the fourth order, upon a tower about 55 feet above high water, and the front light to be of the fifth order, upon a tower 30 feet above high water. This range will indicate to a vessel the turn which it must take to follow the channel into President Roads, and is deemed absolutely essential to the complete project of lighting efficiently the Broad Sound entrance to Boston Harbor. The board estimates that $13,000 will be needed to establish this light station.

The board urgently recommends that legislative action be had as soon as practicable looking to the establishment of these three light stations for Boston Harbor. This Department, for the reasons stated, concurs with the board in deeming these light stations urgently necessary to the great commerce which in a brief time will be utilizing the Broad Sound entrance, and therefore has the honor to ask that the appropriations needed for the establishment of them be made, as follows:

Light and fog-signal station on the Northeast Grave	$188,000
Range lights on Lovells Island	10,000
Range lights on Spectacle Island	13,000

Respectfully,

L. M. SHAW, Secretary.

The PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE UNITED STATES SENATE.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROCEEDINGS OF SCHLEY COURT OF INQUIRY.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate the concurrent resolution from which the Committee on Printing was discharged this morning, and then I will move an amendment to the amendment of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution of the Senate providing for the printing of 3,500 copies of the proceedings of the Schley Court of Inquiry, which was, in line 4, after the word "Inquiry," to insert "together with the findings of the court, Admiral Dewey's opinion, Admiral Schley's appeal to the President, and the President's decision thereon, and;" so as to make the concurrent resolution read:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 3,500 copies of the proceedings of the Schley Court of Inquiry, together with the findings of the court, Admiral Dewey's opinion, Admiral Schley's appeal to the President, and the President's decision thereon, and of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 500 copies for the use of the Navy Department.

Mr. HALE. After the word "Inquiry," in the fourth line of the resolution, I move as a substitute for the amendment of the House of Representatives to insert the words:

together with all papers officially before the President, with Admiral Schley's appeal and the President's action thereon, and.

So that the document may contain the entire proceeding.

Mr. COCKRELL. That will have to come in as an amendment to the House amendment.

Mr. HALE. I move it as an amendment to the House amendment; then it will have to go back to the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the fourth line of the concurrent resolution as amended by the House, after the word "Inquiry," it is proposed to insert as a substitute for the amendment of the House:

together with all papers officially before the President, with Admiral Schley's appeal and the President's action thereon, and.

Mr. HALE. That brings the matter down to the present time.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the resolution as proposed to be amended be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 3,500 copies of the proceedings of the Schley Court of Inquiry, together with all papers officially before the President, with Admiral Schley's appeal and the President's action thereon, and of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 500 copies for the use of the Navy Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Maine in lieu of the amendment of the House.

The amendment was agreed to.

FISH-CULTURAL STATION AT MAMMOTH SPRING, ARK.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HOAR. For what purpose?

Mr. BERRY. I want to pass a bill.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator want to pass it himself, or have the Senate pass it?

Mr. BERRY. I want to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to pass it.

Mr. HOAR. Very well; I will not object to that.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3989) to establish a fish-cultural station at or near the town of Mammoth Spring, in the State of Arkansas, reported this morning by the Senator from California [Mr. BARD].

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Fisheries with an amendment, to insert at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That suitable grounds can be procured at such place at a rea so - able price to the Government.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the establishment of a fish-cultural station at or near the town of Mammoth Spring, in the State of Arkansas, including purchase of site, construction of buildings and ponds, and equipment, at a point to be selected by the United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries: Provided, That suitable grounds can be procured at such place at a reasonable price to the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Arkansas kindly state under what constitutional provision he vindicates the power of the National Government to pass this bill?

Mr. BERRY. I do not know what is the purpose of the Senator from Massachusetts this morning in regard to this bill. I take it it is a pleasantry. I am not disposed to go into the constitutional question to enlighten the Senator from Massachusetts in regard to this or any other bill. I simply ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed. If the Senator desires to object to it, of course I can not complain. I do not wish to discuss it.

Mr. HOAR. I have not doubted that we have the constitutional power to pass this bill, but I have been encountered with various constitutional arguments, very able and powerful, I think from my honorable friend the Senator from Arkansas, earnestly insisting on a different and much narrower construction of the Constitution. I had the honor to ask the Senator from a State bordering upon his, who proposed a like bill, if he would state under what constitutional power it was to be passed, and he very courteously answered, "Not at this time."

I should like to know whether my honorable friend from Arkansas thinks this bill constitutional; and if so, why? He is a great constitutional lawyer and authority, and I should like to hear his view, whether I shall agree with him or not.

Mr. BERRY. I decline to enlighten the Senator in regard to it.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SCHOOL LANDS IN NEBRASKA.

Mr. DIETRICH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. DIETRICH. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2442) confirming title to the State of Nebraska of certain selected indemnity school lands.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to confirm to the State of Nebraska title to all those certain tracts of land in the O'Neill, Nebr., land district, aggregating 2,228.09 acres, heretofore selected by the State as indemnity for granted school lands, which selections were approved by the Secretary of the Interior May 22, 1897, in list No. 1, and duly certified to the State of Nebraska by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, but which certification was on May 5, 1899, declared by the Secretary of the Interior to be null and void and ineffectual to convey to the State any right or title. But the State of Nebraska shall not hereafter be entitled to further indemnity for the specific losses accruing to the State in lieu of which the selections were made.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROTECTION OF THE PRESIDENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill (S. 3653) for the protection of the President of the United States, which will be read.

The bill was read and considered as in Committee of the Whole, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, willfully kill or cause the death of the President or Vice-President of the United States, or any officer thereof upon whom the powers and duties of the President may devolve under the Constitution and laws, or who shall willfully cause the death of the sovereign or chief magistrate of any foreign country, shall be punished with death.

SEC. 2. That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, attempt to commit either of the offenses mentioned in the foregoing section shall be punished with death.

SEC. 3. That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, instigate, advise, or counsel the killing of the President or Vice-President of the United States or any officer thereof upon whom the powers and duties of the President may devolve under the Constitution and laws, or shall conspire with any other person to accomplish the same, or who shall instigate, advise, or counsel the killing of the sovereign or chief magistrate of any foreign country, or shall conspire with any other person to accomplish the same, shall be punished by imprisonment not exceeding twenty years.

SEC. 4. That any person who has conspired as aforesaid may be indicted and convicted separately, although the other party or parties to the conspiracy are not indicted or convicted.

SEC. 5. That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, by spoken words, or by written or printed words, uttered or published, threaten to kill or advise or instigate another to kill the President or Vice-President of the United States, or any officer thereof upon whom the powers and duties of the office of President of the United States may devolve under the Constitution and laws, shall be punished by imprisonment not exceeding ten years.

SEC. 6. That any person who shall willfully and knowingly aid in the escape from punishment of any person guilty of either of the offenses mentioned in the foregoing sections shall be deemed an accomplice after the fact, and shall be punished as if a principal, although the other party or parties to said offense shall not be indicted or convicted.

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to select and detail from the Regular Army a sufficient number of officers and men to guard and protect the person of the President of the United States without any unnecessary display.

And the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to make special rules and regulation as to dress, arms, and equipment and duties of said guard, and shall publish only such parts of said rules and regulations as he may deem proper.

That the additional expenses of such guard so detailed shall be paid out of the Treasury, on accounts to be certified by the Secretary of War to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to enter into any extended discussion of this measure. It is a matter which will be clearly understood, I think, by the simple reading of the bill.

The bill is confined in its purpose to the punishment of the killing or counseling the killing of such officers as are essential to the continuance of the Government of the United States. If the President or Vice-President, or any person under the law or Constitution entitled to succeed to the office of President, be slain, there is an interruption in the actual executive power of the country for the time being until the new successor is qualified, or, if not that, there is a removal of one of the constitutional securities for the uninterrupted succession of executive power.

So it seemed to the committee, or at least to those who favor the bill, that there was a clear power and duty of Congress, and while the offense of killing the President, like killing any other citizen, is undoubtedly punishable in the local jurisdiction in the States and Territories, yet for many obvious reasons it seems proper that it should be a matter of Federal authority, as the offense is against Federal authority.

Then the bill comprehends also the slaying or attempting to slay the sovereign or chief magistrate of any foreign country. The Constitution authorizes the Congress to punish offenses against the law of nations, and I suppose it is not necessary to cite authorities or to argue that such a crime against the chief magistrate, whoever he may be, of any foreign country is an offense against the law of nations.

Now, that is the whole of the bill in substance except section 7. Section 7, I suppose it is no breach of propriety to say, was originally suggested by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS], and while I understand he may not approve of the preceding sections of the bill, yet as section 7 was inserted at his suggestion I should prefer to have him, if he is willing, state the reasons rather than to undertake to state them myself further than to say that I think all careful observers must agree that the detective corps on which we trust for such things certainly has not accomplished its purpose in three important cases.

Neither of the crimes which deprived the country of a President of the United States would have happened, in my judgment, if there had been sufficient police precaution. Lincoln was slain by a person who approached the entrance of the private box where he was seated at the theater. There should have been security provided by that force which would have prevented the approach of such a person who was not known to them.

In the case of President Garfield the crime took place at a depot, the President's purpose of going there being well known, and it was committed by a person who came up close behind him in a crowd, without any interruption or oversight. And of the more recent tragedy the same thing is true.

I do not understand that it is the purpose of any member of the committee to have our President go about with a military display, or what are called guards, but the desire is to have some officer of the Government, who has at his command a sufficient number of able officers and trustworthy men, take the responsibility which now either is not taken at all or is taken by the head of a secret-service force. It seems to me the Secretary of War will always have at his command a much more efficient force for that purpose and that his responsibility will be a great addition to the security of the President. Of course, no security in the future will ever be absolute. It never has been in the past.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I had not expected to make any remarks in reference to this bill at the present time, but at the request of the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] I will explain my view of one section of the bill as well as I can thus unprepared.

I do not agree to the bill as it is framed. There are provisions in it that I do not care to notice at this time which I could not approve, because I thought they did not sufficiently qualify the offense which they were intended to punish. There is one provision in the bill which provides for a military guard for the President of the United States, and I believe that that provision ought to be enacted into law.

Mr. President, we have now a statute authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to employ a secret-service force; in other words, a corps of detectives. I do not know the exact use that is made of the secret service, but the law provides how they shall be used, and the law in no respect, so far as I can observe, authorizes their employment for the protection of the person of the President.

I am informed in a general way, without knowing exactly how I got the information, that the secret-service force is employed on occasions to guard the person of the President of the United States. I have a very decided objection to that employment. I think a great nation like this ought to protect the person of its Executive in any reasonable way; but I am convinced in my own mind, from what I have read of the three great disasters that have come upon this country in the death of three of its Presidents, that if there had been at that time a military guard of ordinary proportions whose duty it was to guard the person of the President of the United States, neither one of those Presidents would have been killed on the occasions when they were killed.

The President of the United States is of too much importance to the nation to be intrusted to the guard of any secret service in the world. A secret service is not composed of the kind of men to whom ought to be intrusted such an important duty. We all know that their ordinary duty is to hunt up and detect and bring to punishment men who have been guilty of offenses against the Government. That is their ordinary duty; that is the duty contemplated by the law which creates them. Men in that employment do not, as a general rule, belong to the class of citizens to whom ought to be intrusted the duty to guard the life of the President of the United States.

Just think of it! The great man Lincoln was killed looking on at a performance at the theater in a box—not out in the open, but in a box. The felon who took his life entered unobstructed and unchallenged in the rear of the box. Now, do you not all know that if an officer of the Army, intrusted with a guard such as the Secretary of War would choose to detail, had been there that officer's reputation for life would have depended upon his action on such an occasion. If he had allowed a man unknown to him to go into that box and assassinate the President of the United States, he would have been tabooed forever as a man unworthy to be trusted in the command of soldiers. When you employ a man who has not that sort of a reputation to lose, or if he has, it is in an entirely different sphere, you can not expect that eternal vigilance which ought to be observed by such a guard.

So when the President was killed at the depot in this city; that never could have happened if a military guard had been there, intrusted to the command of a vigilant officer. I do not say that you can guard the President of the United States from calamities in all cases. That is impossible. At a long distance he might possibly be destroyed.

When the last calamity occurred at Buffalo, Mr. President, as I have heard it described and seen it reported in the papers, the President stood in the reception hall. Men advanced in double file to shake hands with or to bow to him. Those to whom was intrusted the duty of guarding the President were on the left, to the right of the column that moved up to greet him, and the man who did the infamous act was on the left of that procession. Nobody saw anything peculiar about him. Those who ought to have guarded the President were on the right, and in every one of these cases, you can not call up a single blow that was struck for the life of the President of the United States except the one made by the negro in Buffalo. That is the only blow that was struck in defense.

Mr. President, I do not choose to elaborate what I have to say. The President of the United States ought to be guarded by those whom we trust to do the fighting for the nation—by the cultivated officers, whose reputation is dearer than life and who would exercise eternal vigilance without any pause at any moment.

This bill also provides in that connection that this shall not be a matter of display. I do not want the President guarded so as to make any unnecessary military display, The bill gives the authority to the Secretary of War to make rules and regulations as to the duty of this guard and as to their dress and their armament. I am sure this bill ought to be passed so far as that provision is concerned. We ought not to trust the life of the President of the United States, the man so important to the orderly conduct of the affairs of the Government, to the keeping of what we call the secret-service force. It ought to be intrusted to the military, and trusted to a man who would be himself eternally disgraced if he were guilty of any neglect in that regard.

Mr. HOAR. Unless some other Senator desires to address the Senate on the pending bill, I consider myself bound by what I said when it was taken up, not to press its further discussion this afternoon. If there is no objection, I should like to have it stand, to be taken up after the conclusion of the irrigation bill. I will give notice that after to-day, if there be no objection, I will take occasion to call it up at the earliest possible time, before we get into the consideration of appropriation bills and other bills that take a great while, in order to dispose of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). The Senator from Massachusetts can make that motion after the irrigation bill is disposed of.

RECLAMATION OF ARID LANDS.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3057.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3057) appropriating the receipts from the sale and disposal of public lands in certain States and Territories to the construction of irrigation works for the reclamation of arid lands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment to be proposed as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I should like to have the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands make some explanation of the general scope of the bill and what effect it will have upon the provisions heretofore made for agricultural colleges.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I think the best explanation that can be made of the whole bill is contained in the report which was submitted to the Senate a few weeks ago, and I will ask that the report be laid before the Senate and read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is a report here.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope this measure will be explained and discussed somewhat before final action is taken.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I have sent the report to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri wish to have the report read?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do. I asked for an explanation from the chairman, and he has submitted the report as the best explanation.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to have the report read as I think it covers the entire measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. HANSBROUGH from the Committee on Public Lands January 28, 1902, and read as follows:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3057) appropriating the receipts from the sale and disposal of public lands in certain States and Territories to the construction of irrigation works for the reclamation of arid lands, submit the following report:

The bill appropriates the proceeds from the sales of public lands, amounting on the average for the past two years to nearly $3,000,000 annually, and creates a reclamation fund; from which fund the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to make payment for necessary examinations and surveys and to construct irrigation works for the reclamation of the arid and semiarid lands in the States and Territories named in the bill. The cost of such works is to be assessed against the lands benefited, and collections made in ten annual installments, the moneys thus paid going into the reclamation fund. By this method the fund will constantly be replenished, making irrigation practically a self-sustaining enterprise and, according to estimates by the Geological Survey, ultimately putting money into the Treasury.

It also provides that the cost of operation and maintenance of reservoirs and irrigation works shall be paid from the irrigation fund, but when payments are made on the major portion of the lands irrigated under any project, the management and operation of all works, except reservoirs and the works necessary for their operation and protection, shall pass to the owners of the land, to be maintained at their expense under rules prescribed by the Secretary.

Authority is given for the withdrawal from public entry of such lands as are required for reservoirs and canal sites, and the Secretary is directed to restore to public entry any of the lands which are not required for the purposes for which they were withdrawn.

The bill provides that the Secretary shall give the limit of area per entry in each of the irrigation projects undertaken under the provisions of the bill, the minimum area being 40 acres and the maximum 160 acres. The fact is recognized that in some portions of the country 40 acres is sufficient for the support of the average-sized family; as, for instance, in California, Arizona, and New Mexico, where fruit and vegetables are the chief products grown on irrigated lands. In more northerly climes, however, where grain and forage for stock are grown, 160 acres would be necessary for the support of a family.

Provision is also made for the extension of water rights to lands in private ownership upon such terms as may, in the judgment of the Secretary, be deemed just and equitable; no right to the use of water, however, shall be sold for lands in private ownership to tracts exceeding 160 acres to any one person, and no such water right shall permanently attach to the land until all payments are made for such rights.

In addition to compliance with the homestead laws, which in part are made applicable to the lands affected by the provisions of this bill, the entryman shall reclaim such lands for agricultural purposes, and shall pay all charges before receiving patent.

The commutation clause of the homestead laws is not made applicable to lands entered under this act, the object being to prevent speculation.

By section 8 it will appear that there is to be no interference with State or Territorial laws on the subject of irrigation, and the right to the use of water is made appurtenant to the lands irrigated, beneficial use being the basis, the measure, and the limit of the right.
